PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-FOURTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 14, 1916.

Rev. Boyd V. Switzer, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we can not always see and understand Thy purpose, but through the years of our national history we recognize that Thou hast formed and fashioned us with Thine own hand. Thou hast made us to become not only great but hast committed to us an increasingly great mission in the world. The instrumentalities of power committed to our hands, together with the large opportunities that Thou hast opened to us, are a divine revelation to us that Thou hast placed before us greater days than this Nation has ever known.

Give to us, we pray Thee, larger vision, more explicit faith in God, and such a divine power as that we may continue steadfastly to exemplify and maintain at all hazards the eternal principles of righteousness as the most vital of all things for the peace, happiness, and progress of the human race. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ADMIRAL FLETCHER'S REPORT ON THE FLEET.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy in response to Senate resolution No. 60, transmitting the annual report of the commander in chief of the Atlantic Fleet, dated August 15, 1915.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the report may be printed in confidence and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? There is none, and it is ordered that it be printed in confidence for the use of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that the communication the Secretary of the Navy sent me be printed also with the same paper and in the same manner, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REPORT OF CHESAPEAKE & POTOMAC TELEPHONE CO. (S. DOC. NO. 244).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. for the year 1915, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 7611) authorizing the Seaboard Air Line Railway Co., a corporation, to construct and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across what is known as Back River, a part of the Savannah River, at a point between Jasper County, S. C., and Chatham County, Ga., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a petition of the Eastern Felt Co., of Winchester, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation to establish and maintain the manufacture of dyestuffs, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LIPPITT. I present a petition of sundry manufacturers of Rhode Island, urging action to cause the removal of the embargo on logwood and other dyestuffs. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Senate of the of the United States, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: We, the undersigned, manufacturers doing business in the State of Rhode Island, respectfully urge your honorable body to take such action as will cause the removal of the embargo on logwood, which has been imposed by the British Government.

We respectfully represent that the continued enforcement of this embargo will force us to close our plants and will be of great damage to us financially, and will be the cause of throwing thousands of operatives in our State out of employment.

We also respectfully urge that action be taken by the United States in the line of having removed or materially modified the embargo placed by the British Government upon the free passage to the United States of all dyestuffs and chemicals that are used in manufacturing, and cite the conditions already existing as reasons for this request to our Government.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from the Protestant Pastors' Association of Corsicana, Tex., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide Federal censorship of motion pictures, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. OLIVER presented memorials of the Society of Friends of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against an increase in armaments, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the National Security League of Philadelphia, Pa., and a petition of Corporal Lucian D. Woodruff, jr., Camp, No. 64, Department of Pennsylvania, United Spanish War Veterans, of Johnstown, Pa., praying for an increase in armaments, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Pennsylvania Association of Union Volunteer Officers of the Civil War, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the passage of the so-called volunteer officers' retirement bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Oil City, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide pensions for civil-service employees, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

He also presented a petition of the Philadelphia Bourse, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the repeal of the so-called seamen's bill and for the enactment of legislation to develop a merchant marine, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Farmington, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to place a prohibitive tax on intoxicating liquors, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Cumberland County Hotel Men's Association, of Carlisle, Pa., remonstrating against national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland presented petitions of sundry citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for Federal censorship of motion pictures, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. McLEAN presented a memorial of the Retail Wine, Liquor, and Beer Dealers' Association, of New Haven, Conn., remonstrating against national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of New Haven, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Charles B. Bowen Camp, No. 2, United Spanish War Veterans, of Meridan, Conn., and a petition of the Department of Connecticut, United Spanish War Veterans, of Rockville, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to grant pensions to widows and orphans of veterans of the Spanish War, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WADSWORTH presented a petition of William Broadhead & Sons, of Jamestown, N. Y., and a petition of the Ford Manufacturing Co., of Waterford, N. Y., praying that a tariff be placed on dyestuffs, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Oregon, praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Oregon, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the better protection of the forests of the country, which were referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine (for Mr. SHIVELY), from the Committee on Pensions, submitted a report (No. 43) accompanied by a bill (S. 3518) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, which was read twice by its title, the bill being a substitute for the following Senate bills heretofore referred to that committee:

INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE.

Mr. NEWLANDS. From the Committee on Interstate Commerce I report back favorably with amendments the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 60) creating a joint subcommittee from the membership of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce and the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to investigate the conditions relating to interstate and foreign commerce and the necessity of further legislation relating thereto, and defining the powers and duties of such subcommittee, and I submit a report (No. 44) thereon. I ask unanimous consent that the report, together with the joint resolution as proposed to be amended, be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES. We could not hear the request of the Senator.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask that the report of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, together with the joint resolution as proposed to be amended, authorizing an investigation, be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The resolution and report are as follows:

Joint resolution creating a joint subcommittee from the membership of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce and the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to investigate the conditions relating to interstate and foreign commerce, and the necessity of further legislation relating thereto, and defining the powers and duties of such subcommittee.

Resolved, etc., That the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate and the Committee of the House of Representatives on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, through a joint subcommittee to consist of five Senators and five Representatives, who shall be selected by said committees, respectively, be, and they hereby are, appointed to investigate the subject of the Government control and regulation of interstate and foreign transportation, the efficiency of the existing system in protecting the rights of shippers and carriers, and in promoting the public interest, the incorporation or control of the incorporation of carriers, and all proposed changes in the organization of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the act to regulate commerce, with authority to sit during the recess of Congress and with power to summon witnesses, to appoint necessary experts, clerks, and stenographers, and to do whatever is necessary for a full and comprehensive examination and study of the subject and report to Congress as expeditiously as may be; that the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as is necessary to carry out the purposes of this resolution and to pay the necessary expenses of the subcommittee and its members, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. Said appropriation shall be immediately available and shall be paid out on the audit and order of the chairman or acting chairman of said subcommittee, which audit and order shall be conclusive and binding upon all departments as to the correctness of the accounts of such subcommittee.

JOINT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE CONDITIONS RELATING TO INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE AND THE NECESSITY OF FURTHER LEGISLATION RELATING THERETO.

Mr. NEWLANDS, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, submitted the following report (to accompany S. J. Res. 60):

The Committee on Interstate Commerce, having given consideration to the resolution (S. J. Res. 60) creating a joint subcommittee from the membership of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce and the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to investigate the conditions relating to interstate and foreign commerce, and the necessity of further legislation relating thereto, and defining the powers and duties of such subcommittee, reports the same back with certain amendments and recommends that, as amended, it do pass.

The following are the amendments suggested by the committee:

On the first and second pages, strike out the entire preamble.

On page 3, lines 3, 4, and 5, strike out the words "and report upon the subject of the regulation of interstate and foreign commerce," and insert in lieu thereof the words "the subject of the Government control and regulation of interstate and foreign transportation, the efficiency of the existing system in protecting the rights of shippers and carriers and in promoting the public interest, the incorporation or control of the incorporation of carriers, and all proposed changes in the organization of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the act to regulate commerce."

On page 3, lines 9 and 10, strike out the words "on or before the third Monday in December next," and insert in lieu thereof the words "as expeditiously as may be."

On page 3, line 10, strike out the words "a sum sufficient," and insert in lieu thereof the words "the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as is necessary."

The reasons for recommending the passage of this resolution in its amended form may be briefly stated as follows:

It is well known that at every session of Congress many bills are introduced by different Members of the Senate and House having for their object the further regulation of carriers engaged in interstate commerce. This fact shows a continuing belief in the necessity of this kind of legislation, but a comparison of these bills displays a great variety of view as to what is necessary. While the individual initiation of legislation is an established principle, experience has shown that there are some subjects of congressional action which have become so complicated as to require a measure of coordinated and expert effort for their proper handling. Among these must be reckoned the subject of interstate and foreign commerce.

The system of governmental regulation of interstate and foreign commerce which has now been in operation for 28 years has resulted in the variation and enlargement of the extent and powers of regulation and in the accumulation of valuable experience for the guidance of Congress. Particularly is this true of the Interstate Commerce Commission, whose recommendations to Congress from time to time in relation to the general subject of regulation have been invaluable and many of which have been acted upon but some of which still remain to be considered. The growth of interstate and foreign commerce and the enlargement of the powers and duties of regulation have so increased the exactions on the Interstate Commerce Commission as to necessitate, in the public interest, a comprehensive consideration of the best method of dealing with the situation and of expediting the public business.

Adequate and well-managed transportation facilities constitute a prime necessity of business prosperity and are a common interest of all the people; and in order to afford these facilities and to enlarge them as the needs of commerce increase, the credit of the carriers, no less than the proper regulation of their operations, are matters of fundamental public concern.

In view of these considerations the committee believes that for any further legislation which may be undertaken by Congress in this regard the whole subject of governmental regulation should be deliberately and thoroughly studied in the light of experience and of the suggestions of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the carriers, the shippers, and the general public with a view to adequately safeguarding the interest of the public and securing the establishment and maintenance of transportation facilities adequate to the needs of a growing and expanding commerce.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 3553) for the relief of William G. Welles; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FISCAL AFFAIRS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CHILTON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 68), which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the report of the joint select committee appointed under the act approved March 3, 1915, to determine the fiscal relations between the United States and the District of Columbia (H. Doc. No. 495), together with the hearings thereon, be printed with accompanying illustrations as a Senate document, and that 850 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR GORE (S. DOC. NO. 243).

Mr. O'GORMAN. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a Senate document an address delivered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] before the Merchants' Association of New York on December 9, 1915. It is short.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. LIPPITT. What is the request?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York requests that an address delivered by the Senator from Oklahoma before the Merchants' Association in the city of New York on December 9, 1915, be printed as a Senate document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BACK RIVER BRIDGE, GEORGIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives, the title of which will be stated.

H. R. 7611. An act authorizing the Seaboard Air Line Railway Co., a corporation, to construct and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across what is known as "Back River," a part of the Savannah River, at a point between Jasper County, S. C., and Chatham County, Ga., was read twice by its title.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the Senators from Georgia and South Carolina are very much interested in this bill, and I wish to ask unanimous consent that it be put upon its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator if the bill has been referred to the Committee on Commerce or whether a similar bill has been reported?

Mr. SHEPPARD. A similar bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JONES. And reported from that Committee?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Practically; yes, sir. The War Department made a favorable report on the bill, and but for the fact that the House bill has been received, the subcommittee would have reported the Senate bill formally.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in the Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF AUSTRIA-HUNGARY, GREECE, AND TURKEY (H. DOC. NO. 576).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State in relation to claims presented by the Governments of Austria-Hungary, Greece, and Turkey on account of injuries inflicted on their nationals during riots which occurred in South Omaha, Nebr., on February 21, 1909, and I recommend that, as an act of grace and without reference to the question of the liability of the United States, an appropriation be made to effect a settlement of these claims in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of State.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 14, 1916.

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution that I ask may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) authorizing intervention in the Republic of Mexico was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas the Republic of Mexico is and has been for a long time without a government, and as a consequence her territory has been devastated, her laws set at defiance, her people robbed, murdered, and driven from their homes and their property destroyed; and

Whereas American citizens residing and sojourning in Mexico have been murdered and robbed, their wives and daughters outraged, and their property confiscated and destroyed; and

Whereas our people have no protection from any power or authority in Mexico and none from their own country; and

Whereas it is the duty of this Government to protect its citizens in their lives, their liberty, and their property at home and abroad: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

First. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to intervene in the Republic of Mexico for the protection of the lives and property of American citizens residing and sojourning therein and for the establishment and maintenance, as long as it may be necessary, of a stable government in Mexico, adequate for the protection of the lives, the liberty, the independence, and the property of its people.

Second. That the President, as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to use the Army and Navy forces, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the objects and purposes above set forth.

Third. That when a stable and efficient government is firmly established in Mexico, adequate for the protection of its people in their rights and of citizens and subjects of foreign nations therein, it shall be the duty of the President and of Congress to withdraw and surrender such government to the people of Mexico upon such conditions and under such guarantees of continued protection to American citizens and citizens and subjects of other nations residing or sojourning therein as are just and reasonable.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss the merits of the resolution I have offered at this time. I only want to say that up to this time the whole responsibility of dealing with the Mexican situation has been allowed to rest upon the President. It is a grave responsibility. He has been severely criticized for his policy of watchful waiting. I think we have all sympathized with the President in his hope that conditions in Mexico would right themselves without forcible interference on our part. I very much fear that that hope no longer has any foundation to rest upon.

Congress alone has power to declare war, and that is what intervention in Mexico means. Therefore Congress should courageously assume responsibility for whatever is to be done in that unfortunate country, and not leave it to rest upon the executive department of the Government.

I have offered the resolution in such form as to present the direct issue involved. There is no reason why we should seek to divide the responsibility with any other country or impose it upon the President. It is our responsibility and we should meet it calmly and courageously and that without delay.

I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, with the hope that the committee will take prompt action upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. STONE and Mr. LODGE addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. I do not wish to interfere with the senior Senator from Massachusetts, but——

Mr. LODGE. I wish only a moment to ask to have something printed in the RECORD.

Mr. STONE. It is simply to make a request, and I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I was merely going to ask, Mr. President, that the resolution which I offered as a substitute for the resolution of the committee on April 21, 1914, may be printed in the RECORD, so that it may be easily accessible.

The Senate will recall that that was the time when we declared war or went to war with Victoriano Huerta. The war, of course, as we all know, has been brought to a successful conclusion, as our enemy Gen. Huerta has died in jail; but I wish, in this connection, I say, to print this resolution, because the death of Gen. Huerta does not seem to improve the situation in Mexico materially. It was a resolution which represented the views of the Republican Party at that time and for which all Republican Senators voted, I think, without exception.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Would the Senator object to having the roll call upon the resolution also printed in the RECORD?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I should like to have the roll call printed. It is on the next page. Let the substitute be printed with the roll call.

Mr. STONE. What is the date?

Mr. LODGE. April 21, 1914.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in that connection I ask that the amendment I submitted immediately following the adverse vote on the resolution offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] be printed with the roll call attached. It will be found on page 7582 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, April 21, 1914.

Mr. STONE. How long is the resolution?

Mr. GALLINGER. Did the Senator ask the question of me?

Mr. STONE. I inquire how long the matter is that the two Senators are asking to have inserted in the RECORD?

Mr. GALLINGER. They are both brief.

Mr. STONE. I think I should like to have them read.

Mr. GALLINGER. They were both submitted as amendments to the bill reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LODGE. The resolution I offered consisted of about a dozen lines.

Mr. LIPPITT. Let us have it read.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to have the resolution read.

Mr. LODGE. I will read the resolution I have asked to have printed, or the Secretary can read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, and the matter referred to, entire, is as follows:

The SECRETARY. The committee proposes to strike out all of the House text of the joint resolution after the resolving clause and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

"That the President is justified in the employment of the armed forces of the United States to enforce his demand for unequivocal amends for certain affronts and indignities committed against the United States.

"Be it further resolved, That the United States disclaims any hostility to the Mexican people or any purpose to make war upon Mexico."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I offer as a substitute the amendment to the amendment which I send to the desk, which I put in the form of a resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts tenders an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the joint resolution. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. As a substitute for the joint resolution as reported by the committee it is proposed to insert the following:

"Resolved, etc., That the state of unrestrained violence and anarchy which exists in Mexico, the numerous unchecked and unpunished murders of American citizens and the spoliation of their property in that country, the impossibility of securing protection or redress by diplomatic methods in the absence of lawful or effective authority, the inability of Mexico to discharge its international obligations, the unprovoked insults and indignities inflicted upon the flag and the uniform of the United States by the armed forces in occupation of large parts of the Mexican territory have become intolerable.

"That the self-respect and dignity of the United States and the duty to protect its citizens and its international rights require that such a course be followed in Mexico by our Government as to compel respect and observance of its rights.

"That to this end the President is justified in the employment of the armed forces of the United States to enforce his demand for unequivocal amends for affronts and indignities committed against the United States; that the United States disclaim any hostility to the Mexican people or any purpose to make war upon them."

So Mr. LODGE'S amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that the matter to which he referred be inserted in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the committee amendment, on line 2, page 2, by inserting, after the word "to," before the word "enforce," the words "protect American citizens and to"; so that, if amended, the paragraph will read:

"That the President is justified in the employment of the armed forces of the United States to protect American citizens and to enforce his demand for unequivocal amends for certain affronts and indignities committed against the United States."

So Mr. GALLINGER'S amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I am puzzled to determine whether there is a disposition in this Chamber to stir up a sentiment calculated and intended to provoke armed conflict with the people of Mexico. I hope there is no movement of that kind afoot, but I am uncertain.

Mr. President, I believe it to be true that the one thing above all others done by this administration which has received the general approval of the American people is the brave, earnest, and continuing effort of President Wilson to keep this country out of war if it can be done with honor to the country and without undue sacrifice of the interests of the American people. The world has gone crazy about war. Ours is the only great Nation that seems to be sane. From every quarter of this country, and from all South America, we have heard only lament over the war madness in the world. It may be that there are a few people—I think only a few comparatively—in the United States whose blood has become heated and whose brains have become diseased with the fever of war. It is possible, aye probable, that if some men we know of had had the powers of the President—and it would not be difficult for us to think of such a man—the United States would have been embroiled in war, and possibly in more than one war long before this. We might have been, probably would have been in the circumstances I have presumed, already engaged in war both with Europe and with Mexico; but surely it can not be that the great body of the American people, who have no sinister motives, political or otherwise, desire to have this country so involved. The contrary must be true, and it is true, unless the people have changed their attitude overnight. What has occurred within a month or six months to change the attitude of men either in or out of Congress? What has occurred that should excite the minds of men with a sudden passion to arm our people and force them or urge them into war? I think that President Wilson is entitled to the gratitude of our people that he has steered our ship with strong hand and clear eye through the troubled waters without so far encountering a rock that wrecks. Sir, what reason is there now more than heretofore for precipitating this country into a conflict with Mexico?

Mr. President, there have been times when I believed that the President of the United States should not only be authorized but possibly directed to use the military forces of our Government to establish order in Mexico and to protect life and property there. But there has been no sentiment here of that kind, unless it is here now. There was a time when there was no government in Mexico nor even the pretense of one; the whole country was in a state of tumult and disorder; there was no organization that was recognized by anybody as constituting a responsible government. The only government was that which followed warring generals from camp to camp.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri allow me one moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. FALL. I know the Senator does not mean to make a misstatement as to conditions. At the time he introduced his resolution Diaz was the recognized President and had been the President of Mexico for 30 years. There was no interval whatsoever. By an agreement between the revolutionists and Mr. Diaz, signed and recognized by this Government, De la Barra was recognized as the President of Mexico ad interim, and following him came the election of Madero. For three years there was a recognized government. It is only since this administration refused to recognize Huerta or anyone else as President of Mexico until its recognition of Carranza that chaos and anarchy have existed there. The Senator from Missouri certainly knows that.

Mr. STONE. Diaz was President for about 30 years. But because of the accumulating force of the revolution against him he abdicated and fled his country. Madero then became the President, but he was brutally murdered and the office was grasped by a murderous usurper.

Mr. FALL. I say that at the time the Senator from Missouri introduced and urged the passage of his resolution Diaz was yet the President. Diaz only went out as the President of Mexico by written agreement signed by the revolutionists, by which De la Barra, with the acquiescence of this Government, became the ad interim President of Mexico, and our minister continued in Mexico. That Government was continuously recognized down to the time of the assassination of Madero, when the present occupant of the White House refused from that time until the 19th day of last October to recognize any government.

Mr. STONE. I am not discussing my resolution; I have not referred to it; nor am I speaking of a particular date. I am stating what every Senator here knows to be true, that for years there has been no organized and responsible government in Mexico. We all know that for years there have been factions at war, with armies led by ambitious and contending generals. But there was no government. In the midst of that anarchy I thought it might be wise and proper for us to use force, if need be, to restore order and protect life. But in those days Senators on both sides were silent, or, if they spoke, they spoke in condemnation of intervention.

What is the situation now? Two and a half months ago, or thereabouts, the President recognized the Carranza government. It is now the de facto government of Mexico. We have all desired, or said we did, that some responsible government in Mexico should be established and recognized. Well, such a government in Mexico has been organized and recognized. But Villa and Zapata, sometimes cooperating with each other, were bitterly opposed to the recognition of the Carranza establishment and bitterly resentful because of it. As a consequence of the recognition of the Carranza government, the forces of Villa have been dissipated. Villa disappeared into the mountains of Chihuahua and Sonora, followed by a small band of two or three hundred men. Can we for a moment doubt that this band of resentful and lawless men, roaming through the mountains and sweeping down upon the plains when opportunity offers, will commit depredations?

Two or three days ago 16 or 17 Americans were murdered by these bandits. It is reported that since then two or three other Americans have suffered the same fate. I do not know whether that is true, but I would not be surprised if such crimes should be repeated for some time to come. There is every reason to expect their repetition. But, being fair with each other and fair to the country, can there be a doubt that Villa and Zapata will resort to any kind of lawlessness, making it as bad as possible, with the hope of embroiling the United States in a quarrel with the new government just established, and which these bandits would do anything to overthrow? Here are resolutions that look to war at once by a declaration of the Congress because of these one or two unfortunate incidents—incidents that we had every reason to anticipate and expect if the opportunity offered—and this drastic action is proposed within about 48 hours after we first hear through the newspapers of this tragedy; and this in the face of the fact that we are told in the press this morning—and that is all any of us know of it; it is impossible that we should have any other information—that a number of these murderers have been captured and executed.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. FALL. Is it not stated in that dispatch that they have been captured and executed by Americans, with a few Carranza soldiers from Madero accompanying them?

Mr. STONE. I saw a dispatch from El Paso that contained some statement of that kind. It said that an employee on the Hearst ranch, in Mexico, had led a number of men, in conjunction with some of the Carranza soldiers, and that between them they had captured and shot a number of the bandits. I do not know the facts as to that, nor does the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. No; nor does the Senator from Missouri nor the Senator from New Mexico know whether there has been any capture of any bandits either.

Mr. STONE. I did not say that I knew; I said that it was reported in the press this morning that this had been done. But what of it? Even if the Hearst ranchmen were present, so also was the arm and hand of the Carranza government. Moreover, it is reported, and in a way officially stated, that the Carranza troops in Chihuahua and Sonora are in pursuit of these criminals, seeking to run them down and bring them to justice.

Now, in the face of all that, within 48 hours of the happening of this tragedy, Senators, impetuous and flaming with a spirit of battle, rush in and ask us practically to declare war. Why, Mr. President, if a crime like this or analogous to this had been committed in the foothills of the mountains of California, as this was in the foothills of Sierra Madras, in Chihuahua, and the criminals had fled into the fastnesses of the California mountains, does anyone believe that there would have been the least likelihood of their capture within 24 hours or 48 hours or 60 hours? Of course they would have been pursued with a probability of ultimate apprehension.

Mr. President, it seems to me this is no time, least of all times within the last five or six years, when we ought to embroil our Government in serious trouble with Mexico. It is difficult for me to believe that any Senator here down in his heart really desires that. On the contrary, we ought to aid, so far as we can aid, the Carranza government to establish itself firmly, to maintain its authority, to restore order, and to do all the things that a responsible government is obligated to do. It has been only six or eight weeks since that government was recognized and in form established. Only the other day, so to speak, the country was beset with roving armies at war. Now that there is a government just beginning its work, can it be that gentlemen do not want peace? Are we going to cooperate from the floor of the Senate with Villa or Zapata to embarrass or to overturn this government before it has had a chance to demonstrate what it can do? Again I say that this of all times is a time when we ought not to engage in untoward and dangerous agitation.

Mr. President, these resolutions can go to the Committee on Foreign Relations for the consideration of that body; but I indulge the hope, whatever the committee may do, that the Senate of the United States will look with disfavor upon any such movement as that projected here to-day. I do not know what may develop in the future, I do not know what our duty may be at some future time, but I say it is a most inopportune time now to raise a question of this kind.

I hope Senators on that side and also on this side will view this whole subject in a broad way, and let us do what we can to encourage and aid the new government in Mexico. Let us uphold the hands of our President, who is doing everything he can to aid the government of Mexico, acting chiefly through their own instrumentalities, to bring about peace and order in that unhappy country. We are not going to have war. I do not believe Senators upon that side would vote for war.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. Just a moment, please. Mr. President, I warn gentlemen that this is a dangerous adventure if they are striving to make this matter the subject of partisan politics. If the President of the United States desired to play politics with a great international question like this, involving so much of life and hope and future possibilities; if he were capable of that, probably the best thing that could happen to him and to his party would be to have war declared against Mexico or some other nation. If there should be a war raging in November, the chances of his reelection to the Presidency would be augmented a hundredfold. His reelection would be a certainty. But, happily, the President is not built that way. He is too great to play that rôle. He will not drag great questions of this kind into the mire of domestic party politics; and I express the deep and firm conviction that the American people are behind the President in his efforts to preserve peace and peacefully to aid in establishing an orderly government in the long-distressed Republic of Mexico. You can play politics, if you wish, gentlemen.

Now I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Missouri, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, did me the honor two days ago to ask me what I would do, if I were in the President's place, in reference to the Mexican situation. I answered offhand frankly what I would do; and I now ask the Senator from Missouri, who is in the confidence of the President and the administration, to answer with equal frankness what the President and his administration intends to do to protect the lives and property of American citizens in Mexico. The people of the country, South as well as North, are anxiously waiting for an answer; and I trust the Senator from Missouri, who stands at the head of the Committee on Foreign Relations, will, so far as he is informed, enlighten the public mind on the subject.

Mr. STONE. I am not the spokesman of the President. He can speak for himself far better than I could speak for him. However, I hope it is the fixed intention and purpose of the President to use his influence and power to prevent any unseemly and unwise action on our part at this time. I hope it is not the intention of the President at this time to ask the Congress to authorize him to send troops into Mexico, and I hope he will not at this juncture commit any act within his own authority that would precipitate a conflict between Mexico and the United States. I hope it is his intention to do whatever he can to aid in strengthening Carranza's hands in Mexico to the end that he may be given a fair and full opportunity to prove whether he can maintain an orderly and effective government in that Republic. I hope that is his policy, and I hope it will be ours, for in all reason we ought to give Gen. Carranza a chance to test out what he can do.

I am amazed, Mr. President, that grave and experienced Senators should raise such questions at this time, at this time of all times, when this experiment is in its beginning, when Carranza is just gathering his energies together with a view to doing things—that right in the infancy of this movement toward an orderly establishment—that Senators should seize upon an incident like that we have been discussing, not only to discredit the Carranza government, but even to excite our own people into a mad movement to demand its overthrow. For God's sake, let us give Carranza a chance. Let us rather strengthen his hands and see what he can do.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I assume entire responsibility for the resolution that I have offered. The Republican Party is not responsible for it. Not a single Senator on this side of the Chamber except myself is responsible, directly or indirectly, for the resolution that has been offered. I join in the hope expressed by the Senator from Missouri that this question may not be a political one.

The resolution was not offered with any idea or intention of criticizing the conduct of the President in dealing with this grave and important question. I think it is unfair to the President that Congress should sit idly by and do nothing more than to criticize the course of the President, because I think the responsibility rests upon us and not upon the President of the United States. I have said that I do not desire at this time to discuss the merits of this resolution. I do not know why the Senator from Missouri should do so in advance of the consideration of the resolution by the committee of which he is a member.

Something should be done, Mr. President, in this emergency by somebody to relieve the situation as it exists to-day. American citizens are losing their lives in Mexico day after day as the result of the conditions that prevail there. If Congress comes to the conclusion that we should leave matters as they are without affording protection of any kind to our citizens in that country, well and good. If, on the other hand, it should be believed by Congress that steps should be taken, even to the extent of intervention, to protect our citizens in Mexico, then I think that is a matter that Congress should deal with and not the President.

I have been one of those who have been exceedingly reluctant to take strong measures in dealing with affairs in Mexico. I have sympathized very much with the view of the President that we should resort to all proper means in advance to prevent intervention or war, but I must confess that I see no hope ahead of us at this time except through that means. If other Senators, if Congress, can find some better means of protecting our citizens in Mexico than that of resorting to force, and that shall be successful, nobody will be more gratified than myself; but my position about it is this: We have been talking about this question and agitating it day after day since Congress has met in this session. We are accomplishing nothing by that means. Senators on the other side are contending that it is an attack upon the President of the United States, and are defending it upon that theory alone. But, Senators, that is not the question to be determined. It is not a question whether the President is right or wrong. The question is, and we should assume the responsibility of it: What shall be done by the American Government in order to protect its citizens in Mexico? We have no right to shift that responsibility upon the Executive department or upon any other country. It is a question that we should deal with frankly and courageously and determine what the country ought to do under these circumstances.

I have submitted this resolution for the purpose of making that direct and positive issue for Congress to determine, whether we shall do the one thing or the other, and I am quite content to leave it in the first instance to the Committee on Foreign Relations and finally to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senate, I will endeavor in a few words to set the record right.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], the chairman of that great committee which must deal with questions of foreign relations, asks if it is the intention of Senators on this side to ally themselves with Pancho Villa, with Zapata, and with other revolutionists and bandits in Mexico against the recognized government. I answer, sir, for myself, most emphatically, no; and when the Senator voted so to ally himself on April 21, 1914, I explained to him then what he was doing, and I then denounced such an alliance, as I denounce it now.

I have before me a copy of the remarks which I made at that time, sir. I asked then:

> What message are you sending to my people on the border of this country? What message are you sending to the people of Texas, of Arizona, of New Mexico, of California? What message are you sending to the families of those women outraged by the people whom you invite to become allies of the United States in its attack upon Victoriano Huerta? What message are you sending to the fathers and brothers and mothers and sisters of those Americans who have died in Mexico, where they were invited to go by the silver tongue of your Secretary of State?

I said further at that time:

> In the eyes of the Nation, or at least in the eyes of these outraged citizens of other nations, under the peculiar circumstances existing as they do, with Pancho Villa and Carranza marauding with impunity because they can not be reached by Spain or England or Germany—they control no ports, they touch no seacoast, and the only power that can reach them is the United States of America, unless we choose to permit the passage of armed forces of other nations through our borders—under these peculiar circumstances this Nation, under its flag, stands to-day as a "fence" for the burglars, the bandits, the looters, the murderers of northern Mexico.

Sir, in view of the fact that there is to-day pending before the Senate of the United States a request from the President that we now join him in an official recognition of the bandit Carranza, I submit that it is the duty of the Senate to speak and to raise its voice against an alliance with any bandit or any murderer. It is our constitutional duty to advise the President as to the appointment of an ambassador, and the Senator forgets that that question is here. The Senator forgets that we are performing our duty constitutionally in advising the President of the United States in reference to Mexican matters, since the President has seen fit to send to this body the name of an ambassador to the court of a bandit and murderer. These are strong words, sir, but this appears to me to be the time when strong words should be used in the Senate.

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. FALL. With pleasure.

Mr. STONE. The Senator said that I had proposed to make an alliance with Villa and Zapata. I do not recall that I ever made any such suggestion.

Mr. FALL. The Senator voted to ratify the action of the President of the United States in sending armed forces to Vera Cruz. As he said, and as the President himself said later, "We have gone down to Mexico to serve mankind if we can find out the way." That was his purpose in sending troops, and the result was the elimination of Huerta and the placing of Carranza in the capital city of Mexico. I did not mean to say that the Senator in announcing his vote for the resolution ratifying the President's action announced that he voted for an alliance with Carranza and Villa.

Mr. STONE. But what is the vote the Senator referred to as being a vote of alliance with Carranza and Villa and Zapata?

Mr. FALL. Your vote on the resolution of April 21, 1914, I referred to it for the purpose I have shown. I then warned the Senate of the United States against the message that the President was sending to these people.

Mr. STONE. The Senator also said that he would not vote to recognize or to consort in an official way with any bandit or murderer. Do I understand that the Senator desires a recognition and consorting with Huerta?

Mr. FALL. Huerta has gone to a place where the Senator hopes he will never go, Mr. President, and therefore I am not advised of any alliance with Huerta.

Mr. STONE. I do not know where he has gone.

Mr. FALL. I do not know, but I have an idea.

Mr. STONE. I wish to say, if he has gone to a place where I do not desire to go, then all the more significant is my question whether the Senator desired an alliance with that sort of a man.

Mr. FALL. The Senator's memory is very short. On more than one occasion in the Senate of the United States I have stated that I would follow the President of the United States in the nonrecognition of Huerta, and I have done more than the Senator from Missouri has done for the President of the United States in this matter. I have addressed audiences in various States and joined in debate upon this proposition with parties attacking the President's policy in nonrecognition of Huerta, in which I attempted in my feeble way to defend the President.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator would not recognize Huerta or Carranza or Villa or Zapata, what plan of government does he have in mind?

Mr. FALL. Now, the Senator is getting to it. If the President of the United States had asked that question of anyone knowing Mexico, and not of one sent down there and influenced by pique or other considerations; if he had asked that question before——

Mr. STONE. I ask it now.

Mr. FALL. I will undertake to reply to that at a later time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. FALL. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico this question: When he says that the Senator from Missouri voted for an alliance with Carranza and with Villa, will the Senator not say that nine-tenths of the Members of the Senate also voted the same way? Can he say they thought they were forming an alliance?

Mr. FALL. I am always glad to have an interruption from a gentleman who knows so much about the subject and recalls so well what took place. I, myself, voted for the resolution ratifying the act of the President of the United States, and I said, in so voting, I wanted it understood that I believed the President of the United States was actuated by other motives than simply those expressed in the resolution. I could not believe that the President of the United would be actuated by motives of private pique inducing him to plunge the United States Government into a quarrel between himself, Woodrow Wilson, and Victoriano Huerta. It is because I read other words into the resolution, because I believed that it really meant that finally some American blood was running through the veins of the President of the United States, and that behind it he meant that he was sending the troops to Vera Cruz for the purpose of showing definitely to the Mexicans, and to the other people of the world, that American citizens would be protected and that their murders would be avenged; for these reasons and not those expressed in the President's message I voted to ratify his act, and I would so vote again.

It makes no difference, Mr. President, upon what plea the President of the United States would put it. I would vote for doing anything whatsoever that I believed would induce in the slightest degree the protection of Americans wherever they might be. I said in that speech that I wanted to leave the record so that my children hereafter, after my voice was silent, in reading the RECORD would know what induced me to vote to ratify the President's act.

He had an ulterior motive, and you know it. He announced it at the Brooklyn Navy Yard when he preached the sermon over the dead bodies of the 17 marines carried there for burial. He announced that they had not gone there for the purpose of requiring a salute to the flag, but that they had gone there to serve the Mexicans themselves. We all knew it at that time, and we know it now. Otherwise stultification is the answer. No salute has ever been fired, nor since that date has it ever been demanded.

Now, Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. FALL. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. It is a very small point, but at the time of which the Senator is speaking, after the Vera Cruz business, is it not true that our particular ally and pet was not Carranza but Villa?

Mr. FALL. Ah, Mr. President, certainly. The message which came from Carranza at that time was this. I use the Spanish expression—two words in Spanish—to explain it, and I interpret it: "We have not desired trouble with the United States—'hasta hora'—'until now.'"

The United States Government sent out from the White House a statement calling attention to the fact that Villa differentiated when he sent his message: "We have not desired trouble with the United States 'hasta hora'—'up to the present time'—nor in the future." They congratulated themselves upon the fact that Villa placed his seal of approval upon our occupation of Vera Cruz, although Mr. Carranza denounced our action.

Mr. President, further than that I call the attention of the Senate of the United States to the fact that it was reported—and I asked for information as to its truth, as I am asking again—that Carranza demanded the evacuation of Vera Cruz; that Carranza with his armed forces menacing the troops of the United States within 100 yards or less of the waterworks near Vera Cruz, his men there facing the Funston forces, murdering such men in cold blood as happened to wander from our lines into his—that Carranza then demanded himself, at the muzzle of his guns, the evacuation of Vera Cruz.

I want to know whether that is not true. It is reported in public speeches in papers that this is one of the grounds upon which Mr. Carranza has sought to make himself prominent in Mexico, that Villa acquiesced in our occupation of Vera Cruz and Carranza denounced it and forced the evacuation of Vera Cruz at the muzzle of his guns.

I do not mean to say, Mr. President, of Mr. Carranza's action that I know or have definite knowledge. I am asking for it in a resolution which was adopted here the other day.

What caused the evacuation of Vera Cruz? And I should like to have the official correspondence.

The Senate wants a little information and there is further information which I would like to have. I would like to have a copy of the order sent with the marines to occupy the customhouse at Vera Cruz. I would like to know if they did not have strict orders, and if they were not written, that they would occupy the customhouse, the post office, and the railroad yards at Vera Cruz, and that they should not return any fire until each individual was located, some particular individual who was shooting, and that they should not return it until after the Mexican shooting had been located and seen to fire again. In other words, I should like to know if they did not go there with their death warrant in their hands. I should like to know if there were not written orders to that effect in existence. I have not seen the orders. I think the Senate would like to see them if such orders were ever issued.

Now, Mr. President, the Senator, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, urges us to assist Mr. Carranza, to hold up Carranza's hands to give him an opportunity, to afford him some chance to prove that the President of the United States was right. He asks the Senate of the United States to enter into an alliance with Carranza to prove that the President of the United States was not mistaken in his recognition.

The Senator says that we should not inject politics, but the President of the United States, in making a political speech at Indianapolis upon this subject, said:

> These Mexicans have a right to spill as much blood as they please and so long as they please.

He said to his audience and the newspapers report "applause," "applause":

> This is not your business and it is not my business.

And now he asks us to support one of the factions.

In passing, Mr. President, I want to say to you, sir, that Mr. Carranza's power is not supreme in any 1 of the 27 States nor of the 2 territories of the so-called Mexican Republic; that he has no recognized authority in the State of Guerrero, where Zapata and, strange to say, De la Torre, son-in-law of Porfirio Diaz, control the State, as I am informed.

The Urrietta forces to-day are supreme in the State of Durango. He has no recognized authority in the State of Oaxaca—that great State, the birthplace of Juarez and Diaz. He has but little or no recognized authority in many other States.

I call attention to another statement of the Senator. He said that Carranza has men pursuing the murderers of these Americans—sufficient armed troops. Who are they, sir? Will the Senator answer who were the companions in arms until two weeks ago of the murderers who shot down Watson and his companions?

The greater portion of the men of Rodriguez's command and of Reyna's command and of Villa's command, surrendered in Juarez and in other places, some of them in Chihuahua, practically the entire garrison of Casas Grande, 156 miles south of El Paso and on the road where these men were murdered. They have been for from three to five years companions in arms in the career of looting and murder. The same thing is true of the garrison in the city of Chihuahua. It is reported with just as much accuracy, I think, behind it as the other reports which the Senator is receiving from there that a troop train of Carranza's soldiers left the depot but 10 minutes before the train upon which these Americans left, and it is yet a mystery, something that is not known to the Americans, from the best information I have, whether it was troops from the Carranza derailed train that committed these murders or whether they were, as it is said, bandits. If they were bandits, then where were the Carranza troops ahead of the train upon which these Americans were murdered? I tell you, Mr. President, we need some information about Mexico, and we need it now.

Now, sir, I am not going further into this matter at this time. I have been quietly endeavoring to content myself in awaiting the answer of the President of the United States to the request unanimously adopted by the Senate that he should send in certain documents to the Senate and certain information with reference to the very proposition which we are now discussing. What assurances have you obtained, not only as to the willingness of Carranza to protect Americans, but as to his ability to do so?

I read a note from the honorable Secretary of State to the effect that to intervene now would be a great breach of faith; that we could not do it without Mr. Carranza's consent having once recognized him. In the first place, as an American I deny the main premise. In the second place, I want to ask what authority had the Secretary of State to choose a leader in Mexico, and to recognize him, until he had, as other Secretaries have done, provided for the protection of Americans in Mexico. Why did he not demand of this man assurances of his ability to protect Americans before extending to him recognition and active assistance? That was the time to secure from him the "permission," which he says we are now under obligation to obtain, that we should have the privilege of going in there to protect our citizens whom he can not or will not protect.

One of the greatest figures of Mexican history, the great figure of Mexican history, Mr. President, Benito Juarez, the man who to-day is worshiped by every Mexican peon and whose memory is reverenced by every intelligent Mexican wherever he may be, did not think it beneath his dignity to agree with the United States that in the event he could not protect American citizens he would invite our intervention, and that if upon sudden occasion the necessity should arise we would have the right to go in with our armed forces and protect them without his invitation. Why could not the Secretary of State obtain such an agreement from Carranza—Carranza, who stands rejected by the people of Mexico themselves; who, when he went into the City of Mexico under the muzzles of our guns at Vera Cruz, was not able to remain there; whose outrages were such that I will guarantee that if the notes of the Brazilian minister come in here the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] will be astounded that this Government could ever have seen fit to recognize Carranza as first chief or in any other position of authority?

Mr. President, the President of the United States has been more than once warned as to what the result would be in the loss of American life if he continued a policy, which was inaugurated by his predecessor in office, of allowing Mexican troops of one faction to go through the boundaries of the United States and attack troops of another faction. I myself two years ago, in a most respectful letter to the President, through his Secretary of State, in an endeavor to give him some information—although, of course, he considered it from a prejudiced source—and to give him some insight into what was going on and of the condition of mind of the Mexican people and the condition of facts as to the Mexican situation, warned him then that the action of his predecessor, Mr. Taft, in allowing the Madero soldiers freely to go through our borders upon our trains and to attack Orozco and other revolutionists at different points, had resulted in the loss of numerous American lives, in the outrage of American women, and in the holding for ransom of American men. I produced and I have called to the attention of the Senate of the United States the sworn testimony in the case, embodied in the report made by one of your subcommittees to this body, wherein the evidence concerning Inez Salazar brought out that the result of Mr. Taft's action then was to cause the outrage of American women, the murder of American men, and the destruction of American property, because we had taken sides with one faction. On July 22, 1912, during Mr. Taft's administration, I denounced his action then as causing the murder of Americans. I can say now that the unfortunate action of the President of the United States in not only recognizing the Carranza government, but in actively assisting that government with arms, as he is now doing, and in guarding its troop trains containing 5,000 soldiers proceeding from Eagle Pass, within our borders, to Agua Prieta—guarded by our own military against attack by bomb or otherwise; I say to you now, with all due sense of the import of my words, that that mistaken action of the President of the United States is responsible for the death of the 17 Americans in Chihuahua.

Mr. President, Villa had been the pet of the United States. George Carothers, a special representative, had been with him from practically the outbreak of the revolution up to the time when he went to Agua Prieta.

The Senator from Missouri is again mistaken in his facts when he says that before the recognition of Carranza the Villa army was dissipated. What are the facts, Mr. President? Pancho Villa left the city of Chihuahua with 15,000 men, estimated when they arrived at Agua Prieta by the Army officers of the United States at 13,000, exclusive of those who were with Rodriguez at Cananea. He traveled across mountains for 250 or 300 miles with no source of supplies, the last hundred miles being practically over the burning desert with not a drop of water upon it. He traversed canyons 3,000 feet deep, with sides almost as precipitous as the walls of this building. He climbed mountain peaks and went through defiles of the mountains through which only a burro or a trained horse could go to reach his enemies at Agua Prieta and Naco.

The Government of the United States, which had upheld him, which had held him out as a great warrior and a patriot, which had had a special representative with him, receiving special favors from his hands, the man to whom the Secretary of State addressed communications of an official character rather than address them to Carranza—and the records of the State Department will show it and the records of Carranza's department will show that the first break that came between him and Villa was brought about by machinations of American agents, and that one of the acts of these agents and of the Secretary of State, which Carranza denounced at a cabinet meeting, was the sending of telegrams from the Secretary of State to Pancho Villa, one of his subordinate officers, instead of to himself, when they were both in the same town of Chihuahua. When Pancho Villa arrived at Agua Prieta he found that instead of a garrison of something like 1,500 he had veteran troops, including 4,000 Indians, to contend with, and over 5,000 troops, including the Indians, who had been delivered in Agua Prieta while he was wending his way through the mountains and across the plains by the American Government. With the tongues hanging out of the mouths of his men, he attacked and was repulsed by the artillery conveyed through the United States for this purpose by leave of the Secretary of War and of the President of the United States.

When the garrison of Nogales, under the constitutional governor of the State of Chihuahua, Randall, sought to resist the occupation of that town, it was not only attacked by Obregon's troops marching through the interior but coming to their assistance, on the soil of the United States and in American trains under guard of American troops, was another contingent of Obregon's army from Agua Prieta; and when Nogales was evacuated by Randall and by Villa, and Villa returned to the attack or to threaten an attack upon Agua Prieta, again Obregon's troops were loaded on American trains on American soil, guarded by American soldiers, and taken to Agua Prieta for the purpose of resisting him.

Now, I ask what must be, under these circumstances, the condition of mind of a bloody murderer whose occupation it has been, at least at one time in his life it is said, to accept 500 Mexican pesos to murder a man whom he did not know? What impression do you make upon his mind? I say, if you by your action drive that man to murder American citizens, you are responsible for the murder, and you can not shirk it by appealing to nonpartisan discussion.

Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri has repeatedly called attention to the fact that as long ago as 1911 he intoduced in the Senate a resolution calling for armed intervention in Mexico, couched in almost the terms of the resolution introduced by the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], and which he so strongly denounces this morning. "Consistency, thou art a jewel." The Senator from Missouri has told us of the courageous words which he used then, and I want to say to the Senator from Missouri that my heart went out to him, sir. I admired him for that action, more, possibly, than for any other action, with all my respect and my love of the Senator from Missouri. My heart was with him. It is true that I was not at that time in this body. My State was yet a dependent Territory, waiting upon the pleasure of the Congress; but as soon as I came into this body I endeavored in every way possible to show to the Senate and to the people of the country the true conditions, as giving an excuse for following the action then proposed by the Senator from Missouri. I want to say to him, sir, that I respected him as one man who then knew enough about conditions and had the manliness to tell the Senate of the conditions in Mexico and to ask that the Senate and the Congress of the United States place in the President's hands the power to protect American citizens.

But, Mr. President, there is a word which is corrupting this Government in its every department; there is a word which, if the present administration is allowed to write "finis" upon this Mexican chapter, should be engraved upon the tombs of the victims of these Mexican murderers, and that is the word "acquiesce." The Senator, representing a sovereign State in this great Union of States, doing his duty to his constituents as he then saw it and as, I believe, he was most faithfully performing it, demanded the protection of American citizens by the armed forces of the United States when there was a recognized government of 35 years duration, when we had an ambassador in the City of Mexico and Mexico had an ambassador here, when at every consulate in Mexico there was an American consul and at every consulate here there was a Mexican consul, when there was an orderly, recognized government, the only disturbance at all which took place being the capture of Juarez, on our borders across from El Paso. That was at a time when, by written agreement between the representatives of Diaz and the representatives of Madero, De la Barra went in as the President. There was no interim whatsoever; Diaz went out and De la Barra went in, and the credentials of our ambassador were handed to him immediately. Succeeding him came an election, in which Madero was declared the President. Mr. Taft was operating under those conditions. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from Missouri was right then; I believe that he is wrong now; I believe that he has been inoculated by the germ which, if allowed to continue its insidious ravages, is going to bring this great Nation down, down, down, until it will not deserve, any more than it will receive, the respect of China or of the weakest nation in the world, and that is the germ denominated by the word "acquiesce."

The Senator said in his speech that, as he could receive no support from this side of the Chamber nor from his own, he "acquiesced"; that the President of the United States sent for him and asked him not to urge the passage of the resolution, and that he "acquiesced"; and that he had continued since that time to "acquiesce." I say to him, sir, who has had much more experience in affairs than I have had, that that word "acquiesce" will be the requiem of the Democratic Party. You are "acquiescing" in everything which comes from the White House, without asserting your manhood; you are "acquiescing" in anything that does not come direct but which may be conveyed by the back doors of this Chamber. With the exception of a few of you, you have "acquiesced" in a change of policy on practically every matter of importance to-day in the United States.

You have asked us, why this change of sentiment; why this hurriedness to be prepared now to do in Mexico what we would not do in years past? I ask you why the President of the United States a year ago told the people of the United States that no nation would attack us; why he told you, in Congress assembled, and told the people generally, at the outbreak and during the continuance of the European war, that we needed no greater Army? Why did he say we needed no more munitions of war? Why did the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], who is always so ready to attack American interests, make his speech backing the President of the United States in this Chamber less than a year ago against preparedness? Why has the President of the United States now advocated preparedness? You ask what are the changed conditions in Mexico. I ask what are the changed conditions in the world.

If this Nation is to-day in a position where it is likely to go to war with any country under the heavens which country it was not likely to have trouble with a year ago, tell me the name of that nation; kindly give me some information, for I am laboring in the dark. What are the changed conditions demanding now an entire change of policy on the part of the administration of this Government? We are left in the dark just as you were left in the dark, and by a ukase from the White House compelled to change right-about face, in the face of your platform pledges, on the Panama Canal tolls matter in one day, without an explanation from one of you. Accepting the demand from the White House, you "acquiesced."

Ah, Mr. President, if the people of the United States can be brought to utter that word upon every occasion, the time is not far distant when this so-called Republic of ours will be a thing of the past, and the prophecies of those who have written against democratic government in times past will have been fulfilled, when Macaulay's vision will have become truly prophetic. Democrats, just write that word "acquiesce" across your banner and go before the people at the next election with it.

Mr. LEWIS and Mr. LIPPITT addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I take it that at 2 o'clock, under the rule, the regular order of business will be resumed, and I trust that between now and that time I may have concluded such observations as at this moment is my intention to enter upon.

The eminent chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], in making reference to the tendered resolutions here from the Republican side this morning, very fitly characterized what must appear to the American public to be the real object on the part of the Senators on the other side of the Chamber—politics. If this country could be seriously convinced that the real object of those eminent gentlemen on the other side who have presented in these ill characterizations of the President, the vicious denunciations of every act, as well as the indictment in every form of criminal arraignment those he has assumed to recognize as authority in Mexico—if this country at large believed that the only object of the assailing opponents was to protect American citizenship, establish order, and maintain the honor of the Republic, they might hope for approval of their course. But one of the delusions ever indulged by the leaders on the other side is that the mass of the public of our country are deluded as to their real purposes and deceived as to their true object.

The time has come, Mr. President, when to the country it must be made apparent that the leaders of the other side are only reaching out into the gloom they feel to grasp anything that can be held out as a political hope before their party.

Now that the civil conditions of our Nation will not justify the continued assaults that they have made upon them; when the financial success and the splendid prosperity of business have closed the doors to their constant assaults under the cry of panic and disaster; when brilliant diplomatic negotiations, directed by proven statesmanship on the part of the President of the United States, have carried this country to a victorious conclusion of the most serious international entanglement with which the Nation has been involved since the Civil War; and now that there can be no longer opportunity afforded to cry "failure" in this achievement, upon which they may hang some hope for political issue—when none of their political expedients seemed to seize the American mind to sufficient weight to promise results, then arose to their minds a fortuitous circumstances—the much-to-be-deplored murder of American citizens in Mexico, at the hands of those who by their nature were murderers in any community, under any circumstances, wherever opportunity afforded.

How quickly did the eminent gentlemen on the other side—these eminent leaders—see what they thought at last was an issue. Suddenly plunged before their hopeful eyes their opportunity. It is to cry, "On to the war in Mexico! Americans have been murdered, and Democracy is indifferent, the President neglectful, the country dishonored." In the final analysis the political cry of my able friends on the other side to any condition or event is, "Help me, Cassius, or I sink!"

But, sirs, what be the truth? It is that it is a delusion under which you rest, eminent Republican Senators, to assume that the great mass of the American country will not pause to consider your real object, and will not measure by your past conduct your present action. It will be from all this that they will judge the sincerity and object of your now proposed undertakings.

Said the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], that upon the head of this administration will now rest the responsibility for the murder of these 13 Americans. Sir, so far as I am concerned, I look to no source whatever to find exemption from holding the perpetrators of this crime to the very fullest responsibility by the laws of man and the vengeance of God. They have killed Americans. To me it is enough that it neither had justification nor excuse. But I can not allow my honorable opponents to indict the Democracy as being responsible for the offense, or to assume, in their efforts to find some party issue, that the American people can be persuaded into the belief that any action on the part of the president on the one hand or of the Democratic side of the Senate on the other could have averted this atrocious deed. But I do say to the distinguished Senators leading this assault that if there shall be a source to which the mind of a just man shall address itself to ascertain the moving cause, for original responsibility for this dastardly act, they will find it in the course of eminent Senators on the other side, and shall say to you, as the humble prophet in Isreal said to the King, "Thou art the man!"

Truly, as the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] has said, for years under both administrations, that preceding this of ours and ours succeeding its predecessor, Mexico has been in trouble. Mr. President, Mexico has continued like a caldron in revolution of fire and flame. This condition stimulated in some directions by the demand of its poor for justice; in other directions by the cry against those who have monopolized the land of their earth; on the part of others who rose up to vindicate the murder of their dead relatives and to punish those who had murdered them ruthlessly. But, sir, whatever might have been the motives leading these different factions, there remains the truth that they were engaged in these conflicts ceaselessly, without order, in every aspect of revolution, riot, incendiarism, and murder! When this administration upon coming into power sought in every form to maintain peace in Mexico and not violate our honorable relations with our southern neighbors, all in accordance with our promise to guarantee them every form of protection that could be afforded without intruding ourselves upon their institutions or government, what aid did our honorable opponents on the other side give?

I recount from memory the record of their course. The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]—I invite his attention—arises this morning and presents a resolution which, he says—and his word is ever sufficient—is a copy of one he presented some years past touching our entering into Mexico, this demanding our Government to intervene in Mexico and overthrow all local government. The distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], in support of the Senator from Massachusetts, cites what could have been done had we paid more heed to Villa and less to Huerta. Well, shall the Senate remember or shall it forget what was done by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, the Republican leader of the Foreign Relations Committee, who this morning arose and by his resolution added flames to this fire that had been ignited for political objects on the part of the leaders of the opposition? When the President of the United States gave opportunity and part recognition to Villa, hoping that he might bring order out of chaos and resolve the then present furies into the calmness of civil government, what did the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts do in behalf of his party? I invite his memory—and I speak of him with that respect I hold him in. He arose on this floor and brought forth the London Telegraph, an English daily paper, then fighting the attitude of America, and the Senator had read in the United States Senate an article from England indicting Villa as a "murderer, as a bandit, as a creature in whom combined were the elements so detestable and congested, the vices so criminal that civilization should not grant him mercy, much less a government of democracy grant him recognition."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I simply wanted to call the attention of the Senator from Illinois, inasmuch as he is inviting the attention of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts to his remarks, to the fact that the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts is not on the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from Massachusetts presented the resolution this morning. I regret that the Senator is not on the floor. I thought I saw him for a moment. I shall be very glad if the Senator shall find it agreeable to have the Senator from Massachusetts return to the floor and do me the honor to be present, and, if compatible with his comfort, to remain during the debate which he, to some extent, inaugurated.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I can not oblige the Senator; but, inasmuch as the Senator was continually appealing to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts and calling his attention to various things, I thought perhaps it ought to appear in the RECORD that the Senator is not on the floor and has not been for half an hour to my knowledge.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator from Illinois that some 15 minutes ago the Senator from Massachusetts told me he was not feeling well and that he intended to leave for home, and I suppose that is where the Senator is at this time.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator from Illinois should say anything personal, the Senator from Massachusetts can read it in the RECORD and answer him. The Senator from Illinois has been most courteous in his references.

Mr. LEWIS. It was the Senator from Massachusetts who tendered from his high place this condemnation from England of Villa, and thus by such invited all of those in Mexico who opposed Villa to assume that here in this Senate there was no combined body behind the President in recognizing to any extent Villa. Every opponent of Villa could assume that it was the opinion of an honorable body in the membership of this Senate that this man Villa, whom the President then sought to recognize and give opportunity, was esteemed among them as the manner of man denounced by the anathema and accusation contained in this English denunciation. So, Mr. President, was it unnatural that we, the Democracy and its President, could get no combination of support in Mexico to carry out and execute the hopes to which the Democratic President might have at that time aspired, and which was the object on the part of our Government—of lending aid wherever possible to anyone who gave a sign of capacity to restore peace, enforce order, and maintain government?

Then, Mr. President, we recall constantly the failure on the part of our honorable opponents to lend us aid at times when we needed it in behalf of any opposing those whom we thought exercised baleful influence in Mexico; when we sought to do that which we felt justice compelled as to Huerta—force him out of his usurped presidency—and I speak of Huerta delicately; he is dead. In this Christian body we adopt the motto of the Stoics, "De mortuis, nil nisi bonum," and of this dead I shall speak no ill, but the necessities that required our action received in nowise the support of our honorable opponents, and thus they let all of Mexico again see that in our opposition of the one, as in our assistance to the other, we had no united support from our opponents, who at that time could have aided, by joint action in the Senate, to bring about peace, could there have been but the aspect of a combined United States Senate behind their American President.

Now, sir, in this last effort Carranza is chosen to be recognized because of the display he made of his strength and his position of advantage. Is he chosen, as our eminent friend, the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], or as the able leader of the minority of the Foreign Relations Committee, the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], or others, would leave the charge, merely at the caprice of the President, without information or justification upon the conditions? No. Will not my eminent opponents be just to history and inform the United States of America fairly that it was only after consultation with the large and principal countries of South America—Argentina, Brazil, and Chile—neighbors of Mexico, bound by the same ties, held by the same sacred religion, animated by the same motives, and inspired by the same aspirations, knowing as they must have known better than all other sources what was best for their neighbors and their blood kin—that it was from these that there came the suggestion, as well as the proof, that Carranza was at the time the most promising solution of the then disturbing problem and that upon their request and manifestation of facts the recognition was accorded? Then it was that Carranza was recognized.

What followed from our honorable friends? Hardly had a movement been made looking to recognizing Carranza in such manner that he might have given aid to the President, established peace in Mexico, smoothed these discordances, harmonized these belligerencies, and established in that country peace, when the very first movement on the part of America, the naming of an American representative as ambassador to protect American citizenship in Mexico, was met in this body on the part of our honorable opponents with an obstruction to his confirmation or the authorization of any power to him to protect Americans by first creating the query from the Senate: "To what Government is he authorized? To what authority is he committed? Where are the things worthy of being recognized?" And they are yet preventing the American ambassador to Mexico from exercising any authority in Mexico. By these tactics of obstruction they again paralyzed all efforts on the part of the administration to obtain peace or order, or to have an agent in the Government of Mexico who might have negotiated events which could have prevented the very infamy that has transpired against these very Americans for whom our honorable opponents so lately manifest such tender solicitude.

Let this be understood: The American people are not fooled; and this late cry of great interest in Americans in Mexico on the part of our eminent friends will be well understood as an anchor to windward for a political issue. It is easy to recall that American citizenship is readily aroused at the announcement of the murder of an American. We recall from history that two presidential campaigns in this country, subordinating all the civil issues that had been made, were carried, one upon "sailors' rights" because two sailors were hung on the yardarm in a distant sea, and the other in the approval and glorification of an officer of the Navy because he executed those who had assaulted an American in the waters of the south seas. It is a natural thing for our honorable opponents to hope that this history might be duplicated, if the foundation for an issue could only be had and a political opportunity provided.

What is therefore proposed now by the Republican leaders in this Senate? The real test of the purpose of the opposition is in the course they propose. What are our honorable friends asking? What thing are they seeking? What is the thing they ask the American Congress to do? The only remedy they propose is one which would produce the almost universal murder of whatever Americans should be found in Mexico instead of 13. They ask that this Government, as a Government, should intervene and usurp the powers of Mexico, and as a Government proceed to administer the affairs of Mexico through the armed hand of intervention, without recognition in Mexico of any force or government, civil or military.

Mr. President, what would be the result of such action if our eminent friends on the other side should really prevail in such a course?

Mr. President, before I answer that I should like at this time to pause to ask that the unfinished business be laid aside for a few minutes that I may conclude my remarks.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair will be compelled to lay the unfinished business before the Senate. The Chair will then recognize the Senator from Illinois to continue his remarks, as there is no objection.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senate——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unfinished business will be laid before the Senate, and the Senator from Illinois will then proceed.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], in fortification and support of the Senator from Massachusetts, brings forward his resolution for intervention by our Government in Mexico. Can it be possible that the distinguished Senator from California does not recognize that the Government's intervention would mean war? How could we defend ourselves without munitions and guns if we had war in Mexico, and could we get these to Mexico without sending them into Mexico? Then what would come of the embargo the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] has been demanding against arms and munitions from America, and where is that humane love of peace, and his expressed Christian horror against all forms of war when they serve the objects addressed to Europe? Surely the Senator must see that war must be the only result of this resolution tendered on the part of the eminent Senator if successful of passage.

Then, Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], than whom there is neither an abler man in brain nor a nobler in heart honoring the opposite side of this Chamber, suggested in his observations that, so far as he was concerned, it was immediate intervention for the purpose of protecting our citizenship. But the distinguished Senator from Idaho, some time past, on the floor, when we were considering outrages in Mexico, voiced the real condition that would confront America from intervention when he said, "If we ever go into Mexico, the American people will never come out." Mr. President, the Senator was not expressing his desire that we should remain, nor his hope that we should remain; but he did express, sir, that which he well knows America, in some quarters, would voice—that we shall remain. It is because Mexico would recognize that we intervened in her Government through the Government of the United States, and that by this evidence we had come to remain. All official expression on our part that we were there to restore order and depart would be useless. Their leaders know that every advance in government from recorded time, of Israel to Egypt and from Egypt to Israel—from Rome to Greece—was under the pretense of temporary occupation for the purpose of ameliorating some then existing condition. They remember Alamo and Texas. Then, sir, Mexico would know, if ever we passed this resolution of intervention, that we had marched in to take Mexico. Then, sir, Carranza with all his forces, Villa with all his forces, Zapata with all his forces, the brigands from the mountains, the murderers from the fastnesses, the women from their homes, the children in the streets, would come in a common Mexico against the gringo, and all of Mexico would then be in arms to defend their own against those whom they believed had advanced to possess it—the United States. Then would come murder, rapine, and slaughter.

Far from establishing peace, we would establish war of such duration, war of such years, war of such depredation, or of such a destruction and irretrievable loss of American sons as well as American honor, that no concession, no benefit that can be conjured in the mind of any person, would be a compensation for the results we would suffer.

Then what else would we have by this resolution tendered by our opponents? Sir, we have held out to South American countries that it was our intent to execute that policy called the Monroe Doctrine to its spirit, and for ourselves under no conditions to allow the United States under any guise to intrude upon their country. We have of late, through our President, assured them that we expected to build them up as far as we could, to aid them wherever we might. Think you not they, seeing this conduct in Mexico, would not promptly take fright? Think you that they would not behold that as a beginning of a policy they long charged us with possessing, and which they claim in hypocrisy we have disguised? Know you not that these sister lands would cry that we now at last have moved to the object we long contemplated—the appropriation of the countries to the south, South America—one Western Hemisphere under the control of the United States?

Then money would come from these affrighted countries to Mexico. There would be support from these by men and arms for Mexico, every form of sustenance and aid given to Mexico that her victory may be their security and that our defeat may be their victory. War of greater proportions than ever contemplated would be precipitated on the United States from all Latin America.

Then, Mr. President, what would follow in Europe? I ask my opponents to behold the condition America is in to-day. The patriotism of America and the splendid statesmanship of Woodrow Wilson have brought peace where deadly conflict was threatened by our German national neighbors, and now—

> Those who late met in the internecine shock
> Now in well-beseeming ranks march all one way.

Germany has yielded to America. Austria has yielded to America. America for the first time in history establishes how one government, as against the world, by moral persuasion was able to indent its doctrine of humanity in warfare upon Europe's battle plans and have it acquiesced in by civilization. Without war, without the death of Americans on the battle field, without the destruction of commerce and agriculture, without the tramp of troops marching through the cities, without wasted fields, without stricken homes and mourning mothers and murdered children—in peace before God, America, our own—with her flag flying to the stars before the world, admired by nations and blessed by mankind has maintained by the code of universal justice and brotherly love the honor of her Nation and the friendship of the world.

Will our honorable opponents decline to applaud this? Now what will become of it, I ask you, if the policy you now propose as to Mexico should succeed in this body?

I am courageous enough and emboldened to reply to my own inquiry. Mr. President, we will not disguise the fact that these nations with whom we have had some differences, with prospects at times of serious altercation, still carry in their hearts the resentment of those who, believing themselves right, stand before the world vanquished. Their native sons in America have denounced the administration, characterized unfairly the President, and for want of proper knowledge on the subjects, have in haste blamed the United States for that for which we are wholly irresponsible.

But, my learned Senators, if this resolution of intervention were to carry in this Congress and this Government go into Mexico, and as a result we have brought on us the combined warfare of their people and aids which would surely follow, do you not think, then, these European countries, perceiving our predicament, beholding our confusion, and seeing their hour, would not choose it to vindicate by arms what in justice they could not do in diplomacy?

Should any repetition of these unfortunate horrors on the sea continue or the unjust obstruction of our commerce be persisted in, and we be called upon to again protest in order to maintain the law of humanity and justice to all in the world, what would follow? Our European opponents would flaunt us, oppose us, defy us. Seeing us busily occupied, as we would be, in Mexico, our European opponents would be conscious of our inability to defend ourselves from the east and the Atlantic and they would choose that as their hour to vindicate themselves against us by arms.

You, Senators, have educated them. You have educated Mexico. You have been holding up to the world that your country was now the most dastardly nation on earth. You have indicted her as a coward. You have told every enemy she ever had that she was defenseless before the world. You have heralded everywhere that America had neither arms nor munitions; that her Army was useless, her Navy decayed, and that she lacked spirit on the part of her Commander in Chief. That we had a supine and shrinking President; and then you have asserted that we are without spirit in America to repair these breaches to which you have pointed with gratification as you held up your country as a weak and comtemptible thing, deserving only the disdain and derision of its foes. Do you assume that the enemies in Europe would not profit by this situation as you would have made it, and would not avail themselves of it to every advantage possible, but ever to the embarrassment of the United States? Think you that, encouraged by the revelations you have given them, they would not be found to be a combined body against us in such an hour? This would be the fruits of the tree you would plant.

Then, I say to the distinguished Senators, to what will they lead? Have they contemplated to what end it would all come if the intervention were by the Government of the United States, intervening in Mexico and usurping all form of government there, and by power assume to take the place of the administration of all military and civil affairs as against any Mexican power or Mexican citizenship in a Mexican country?

Mr. President, I have assumed to offer a remedy for our present situation—one that achieves all that is necessary and avoids all that could endanger us. I offer it, of course, with that diffidence that one should have who is conscious of these motley conditions in Mexico and of the inability of any one man so far removed to comprehend the whole situation completely. But I tender a method that is in harmony with the policy of what the Democracy believes to be for the welfare of America and in no wise against the interest of Mexico itself. It is that, as we have recognized Carranza and sought to give him encouragement to maintain a government of peace and stability, we now authorize the President of the United States to protect all Americans and to punish all those who have violated their security, not by intruding into the Government of Mexico, not by usurping the regularly constituted power, not by producing more chaos in their country and rendering their citizens homeless and without a land, but, to the contrary, that he shall cooperate with the Government he has recognized, ascertaining from it if at this hour it can seize the offenders, punish them, and maintain the future peace and security of American citizenship. If Carranza can not prove that he can by immediate action, if he is powerless by virtue of the lack of force in competition with rivals who surround him, then that the President of the United States be authorized to render the aid of the American troops and the American Navy to the full extent as, in his judgment, would seem adequate, and to accomplish the end sought for America. Mr. President, we gave such aid in China to protect the Christians against the assaults of the Boxers, and subsequently under another administration—Republican—moved our marines into Nicaragua for suppressing a rebellion there, bringing order out of chaos and establishing the protection of American citizens and the security of American property. We have duplicated these protections in Haiti. We have, therefore, the precedents sufficient and conclusive. Let us emulate these established precedents for Mexico.

I tender the resolution to authorize the President of the United States to this cooperation; feeling that in doing so he will have the armed force sufficient to assure the protection; that he will not invade Mexico to usurp it; that he will not take the Government from those where it is established; that he will not frighten citizens to hate us on the theory that we have come to take their land and invade their country and with the power of conquest to appropriate it to America. Thus, with their cooperation and aid, we can secure the result for which all seek and pray.

Mr. President, there is no man not touched with the recital of the murder of one of his countrymen. I think it was Menander who gave us the famous observation of the slave poet Terence: "Homo sum; humani nihil a me alienum puto."

That is the sentiment of us all. We are men, and all things human touch us. But, sir, this body should never be reduced to where prejudice or inflammatory sensation should control deliberations. On the street, such may be, in the home, unhappily; throughout the thoroughfares, impossible to avoid; but, sir, the waves of resentment or partisan hatred must break and fall back when they strike the portals of this Senate. To every advance of such spirit our vigil at the gates must respond, "Thus far and no farther shall you come." On this altar must ever burn the lamp of justice, with its incense of humanity floating out to man. This flame shall not be snuffed out by the winds that would fan into enmity to us countries on the opposite part of our land who would punish our recreancy by the killing of our children in thousands while our honor as a Nation dies before the world.

In this, the Senate of the United States, let there never be a man who may indict this assemblage as a body that for any expedient of politics, on any chance of party victory, we so lost control of our judgment or so forgot our duty as to do the act that would make America lose forever confidence in the United States Senate as the legislative body of secure wisdom, sure action, and just results. For this the Constitution created this body as the preservation of the citizenship of this Republic against the fury of excitement and the madness of passion.

Therefore, Mr. President, I bring forth the resolution which I have tendered, assured, as I am, that if we will give support ungrudgingly, confidence without division, to the head of our Government as the President of the United States in such an hour as surround us, there will be established now security to the citizen for the future, punishment of those who have wronged him in the present, and this through the processes of a civilized Government, to the protection of every American citizen wherever he is and to the continued honor of America in her now exalted place in history.

I take the liberty at this point to ask that my resolution may be now read as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read as follows:

Concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. LEWIS January 13:

"Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be authorized and empowered to order the Army of the United States, or any necessary part thereof, to the country of Mexico and to there cooperate with any force there existing which to the President shall seem appropriate for the object of protecting the citizens and property of the United States and to punish those violating the security of United States citizens, and to authorize the President to use the military and naval forces of the United States in Mexico to the same extent as now by law permitted the Navy in Nicaragua and Haiti for the protection of American rights."

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I submit the resolution. I thank the Senate for its close attention and great courtesy.

Mr. STONE. The Senator simply wishes that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations?

Mr. COLT obtained the floor.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator from Rhode Island allow me?

Mr. COLT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to know whether the resolution has been referred or not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was introduced yesterday and printed and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand that, and now the Senator from Missouri, if I understood him correctly, moves its reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There can be no trouble about the matter. The Senator from Illinois simply had it read as a part of his speech.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I misunderstood the Senator from Missouri.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senate bill 381, the Philippine government bill, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the Senator from Rhode Island is recognized.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, I can hardly conceive of a more difficult undertaking than the transplanting of the Anglo-Saxon system of self-government in the Philippines. I do not mean to say that this is an impossible undertaking, but I do mean to say that it can only be accomplished in time, and that as to the length of time it will take no man can now predict.

I am aware that this bill is only a step in this direction, and that the United States will still retain a large measure of control. The bill, in fact, is simply a confirmation of our settled line of policy to install in the Philippines, step by step, the American system of self-government.

In this discussion we have constantly used the term self-government without defining its meaning. It is true that President Wilson's definition that self-government is not a form of constitution but a form of character has been quoted several times. While the President's words on this subject are most apt and comprehensive, I would like to state, at this stage of the discussion, what I conceive to be the essential characteristics of self-government in an Anglo-Saxon sense.

Self-government with us does not signify merely an extension of the franchise, the representative system, and the division of the government into separate departments, but it signifies much more. Self-government, as we understand it, means the supremacy of law in the sense "that no man is punishable or can be lawfully made to suffer in body or goods except for a distinct breach of law established in the ordinary legal manner before the ordinary courts of the land."

In other words, this supremacy of law means the entire absence of any arbitrary or discretionary power on the part of the Government to deprive any person of life, liberty, or property except by due process of law in the ordinary courts.

This supremacy of law further signifies equality before the law, which means that we have no administrative system of law such as prevails in France and other countries of Europe. The acts of Government officials are controlled by the same system of law as that which controls the ordinary citizen. This is another safeguard against the exercise of arbitrary power.

This supremacy of law in an Anglo-Saxon sense further signifies that our right to personal liberty, and all our individual rights, are based upon custom and usage and not upon general abstract propositions; that these rights were secured to the individual by the decisions of the courts in the conflict between the people and the Crown; and that the bill of rights in our Federal Constitution is nothing more than putting into statutory form preexisting rights.

It follows that the essence of the Anglo-Saxon system of self-government is a complex legal system based upon custom and usage and representing a growth of centuries.

Our history also demonstrates that this form of government can only be successfully carried on by an intelligent people long accustomed to self-restraint, experienced in the art of government, and who are imbued with a legal spirit.

This legal system of self-government seems to be specially adapted to a democratic form of government. It combines liberty with order. It is the only system under which a democracy extending over a large territory has been able to exist for any considerable period of time. This is illustrated by the fact that France has had 12 constitutions in the past century and a quarter, and it is further illustrated by the history of the Central and South American Republics during the past 100 years.

Mr. President, it is this system of government, as shown by the present bill, as well as by the organic act, which we are attempting to establish in the Philippines.

If the present bill passes, I can imagine the Governor General, following the precedent recently set by us, appearing before the Philippine Legislature for the purpose of explaining the provisions of this act. I can imagine him taking up section 3 and saying: "Gentlemen, this section contains our Bill of Rights—rights which lie at the very foundation of our Government. I have only time to refer to three or four of these paragraphs:

"That no law shall be enacted in said islands which shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or deny to any person therein the equal protection of the law.

"That no law impairing the obligation of contracts shall be enacted.

"That no law shall be passed abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and petition the government for redress of grievances."

"In order to ascertain the meaning of these and other important paragraphs in this section I must refer you to the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and the other Federal courts, the decisions of the various State courts, and to various textbooks, such as Cooley on Constitutional Limitations. These books comprise several thousand volumes. I regret that they are not published in Spanish. At the same time, as many of the questions raised are of great difficulty and complexity, and as some of these decisions are conflicting and not altogether clear, I do not think anything would be gained by a translation into another language."

Mr. President, the bill of rights contained in section 3 of this bill is the supreme law of the Philippine Islands. I do not know how far these laws interfere with or break down the customs, habits, and usages of the Philippine people, and, consequently, I do not know how soon they can be enforced.

There are two difficulties in the way of establishing self-government in the Philippines which must be overcome.

In the first place, you must abolish such customs, habits, and usages as are inconsistent with this bill of rights. When you consider the tenacity of customs and usages, especially among oriental peoples, the magnitude of this task is apparent.

In the second place, you must accustom the people to carry on the Government according to American methods. They must, of course, first give their consent to our principles of government, and this consent must then ripen into a habit. These principles must also satisfy the moral judgment of the people. Not until these conditions, which can only be brought about by education and long experience, exist will the people of the Philippines have solved the problem of the kind of self-government in which we are educating them.

Mr. President, if we are to continue our policy of establishing self-government in the Philippine Islands, I can see no danger in the present bill, because we still retain, in substance, the government in our own hands. Although the bill provides for the election of a senate by the people, we must remember that all legislative power is curtailed and limited by the bill of rights, by the veto power, and by a provision which reserves to Congress the right to annul any act of the legislature. So far as the executive and judicial departments are concerned, I understand that this Government still retains, in substantial matters, full control, either directly or by appeal.

The fact is, Mr. President, we are trying out a great experiment in government in the Philippines—an experiment which I believe is new in the world's history—and in order to try out this experiment we must from time to time increase the power of the Philippine people over their own affairs.

In dealing with this great subject I believe a liberal policy is better than a narrow policy, and for that reason I would leave the word "independence" in the preamble if the people so desired. History teaches that to deal with colonies in a fair and liberal spirit is by far the best policy. This word "independence" will be an inspiration to the people. It will help them in their long march toward self-government. Nor can I see any good reason why the United States should not promise the people independence when they have established a stable government founded upon the American model.

If we pursue a wise and just policy toward the Philippines, and thereby win the confidence and affection of the people, it is more than probable that, like Canada and Australia, they will prefer, if we so elect, always to remain a part of this great Republic.

Mr. President, the committee have given full and careful consideration to this subject, and I think that the present bill embodies the only action which this country should take at this time. In my opinion, we should not at present think of casting the Philippine people adrift on the stormy sea of self-government and independence. Those who understand the conditions existing in these islands fully realize that this would be most hazardous. Nor would I take any action at present in the line of asking other powers to join us in guaranteeing the independence of the Philippines. We have recently seen what national guaranties amount to in time of war.

The truth is, whether willingly or unwillingly, we are charged with a grave responsibility toward the Philippines, and let us not hesitate to continue to fulfill that obligation with the calmness, patience, and conscious strength of a great nation. Let us never be open to the charge of bad faith toward this liberty-loving people.

But, assuming that the time had now arrived when we deemed it just and proper to make some radical change in our policy toward the Philippines, I believe it would be unwise to make any such change during this world crisis. We have enough grave questions on our hands without further complicating the situation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Philippine bill has already been read, and I ask now that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the committee amendments. I believe it will not be necessary to read the bill, but only to take up the amendments in their order.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, before the bill is read for amendment, I should be glad for a few moments to submit some remarks, if the Senator from Nebraska has no objection.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I shall be glad to have the Senator from Minnesota discuss the bill.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, it was not originally my intention to make any remarks on the pending bill, but the discussion has taken such a wide range and in some respects has assumed such a peculiar phase, that I feel it incumbent upon me briefly to express my views.

It is unfortunate that this question has been brought into the political arena, but surely we Republicans are not to blame for that. The Democratic Party in their convention in 1900, when they nominated Mr. Bryan for President, made the question of imperialism one of the most prominent issues in their platform. That issue, as now presented by this bill and as it was presented by the Democratic platform adopted at Baltimore, is, to be sure, in a more diluted form than the doctrine of imperialism as proclaimed in 1900; but after all, Mr. President, it seems to me it is mischievous in the highest degree. Impressed, as I am, with the conviction that this proposed legislation, including the preamble, will be not only harmful and deleterious to the Philippine people themselves, but also to the welfare and interest of the United States, I feel that I can not remain silent.

What were the conditions that confronted us, Mr. President, and what was the situation we found in 1898 when we took possession of the Philippine Islands? While those islands had been occupied by the Spaniards for over 300 years—for some 325 or 330, as I recall—yet they had failed during all that period to develop the country and to give the people of the Philippine Islands any real self-government; in fact, it might be said that those people were at that time a schoolless, a roadless, and well-nigh a landless people. I mean by that that their titles to land were extremely vague and uncertain; they were in most instances titles by occupancy. They had had no experience in self-government, and were composed of a multitude of tribes and of several races.

Looking at the map of the country we find in the north the great island of Luzon, with an area of about 41,000 square miles. The most intelligent of the natives there were the Tagalogs, who numbered something like 2,000,000 people. As to the remainder of the people, while many of them were nominally Christians, they were in a great degree uncivilized. They ranged all the way from the Tagalogs down to the Negritos and the head-hunters. The inhabitants of the islands were not a homogeneous people. While they were in the main from the Malay race, yet they may be grouped into three great classes. In the islands of Luzon and Mindoro perhaps, the principal, the most intelligent, and the most representative people were the Tagalogs and some of the Ilocanos. South of those islands is what is known as the Visayan Group, composed of six or seven large islands. The Visayans are a different people to some extent, although fundamentally like the Tagalogs. Though of the Malay race, they have a considerable admixture of Chinese and Spanish blood.

There is a feeling of ill will and hostility, which still remains to some extent, or at least a want of confidence between the Visayans in the Visayan Group and the people in Luzon, the Tagalogs; in other words, the Visayans, who are in larger numbers than the Tagalogs, for there are some 2,500,000 of them, have no confidence in the Tagalogs and do not desire to be ruled by them.

Then, south of the Visayan Group, we have the great island of Mindanao, and southwest of that the Jolo or Sulu Archipelago. Mindanao and the Sulu Group are inhabited to a large extent by the wildest and most savage people in that country, the Moros, who are Mohammedans. The people in those islands had scarcely been brought under subjection and control by the Spaniards. They had no self-government, for the Spanish government in the Philippine Islands was practically a quasi military government, which ruled the people through the army, through the priests and the friars of the church. What little self-government they had in their local municipalities was only nominally such in fact. Even in those municipal organizations, in their barrios, as they are called, the priests were the controlling factor, and we all know that at that time a large portion of the best land in the archipelago was owned by the friars and that a large proportion of the people of the Philippine Islands were mere tenants, cotters, cultivating the land.

The people of the islands had become so restless and desperate under Spanish tyranny and despotism that as early as 1823 there was a rebellion, which the Spaniards suppressed by the sword. In 1896, two years before Dewey sailed into Manila Bay, there was another rebellion against the Spanish Government, which the Spanish Government suppressed partly by the sword and partly by buying off the leaders with money.

When we took possession of the islands such was the condition of their people. They were utterly helpless, not accustomed to any self-government, and speaking a variety of languages and dialects. Perhaps only about 8 or 10 per cent of the most civilized and the most intelligent among the so-called civilized tribes could speak Spanish. The remainder spoke a variety of dialects. The Tagalogs had one dialect, the Visayans another, and the Ilocanos another, and while they could converse with one another in these respective dialects, they had practically no books, no literature, and their school system, such as it was in the islands under Spanish rule, was the feeblest imaginable. Nominally there were about 2,000 schools in the islands, but the annual appropriations for all those schools was less than $300,000, and the bulk of that appropriation was devoted to the schools in Manila. It will readily be seen, in view of that condition and that small appropriation, what a limited opportunity for education the poor Filipino people had; and most of that education was of a religious character. I am not finding fault because of that, but I simply call attention to the fact that what little education they did get in the schools of those days was mostly of a religious character, not of a character that would broaden their intellect and make them capable of becoming a self-governing and self-sustaining people. As a matter of fact, when Dewey sailed into Manila Harbor the poor Filipinos were more oppressed, more tyrannized over, and in a more deplorable condition than were the people of Cuba.

When we took possession of the islands, what did we do? We were confronted by three alternatives. We could have relinquished the islands into the hands of the Spaniards, which would have been to have tied the hands and feet of the poor Filipino people and to have put them back into Spanish tyranny and oppression. We might have given them what they, or, at least some of them, now pine for—independence. In their condition at that time independence would have led to chaos, butchery, and destruction. We have evidence of that fact, Mr. President, for in 1899 when Aguinaldo inaugurated his rebellion against the United States, and, by the aid of Mabite—I think that was his name—established a government, and adopted a constitution at Malolos, we know how tyrannous, how oppressive, and how arbitrary that government was. Anyone who would not then support Aguinaldo's government was butchered in cold blood. There are many instances where Aguinaldo's party in those days buried men alive. So, I say, Mr. President, that if we had turned the Filipino people over to themselves at that time it would have led to utter chaos, and to their destruction.

The other alternative was, that we might have left them there, helpless, as they were, to become the prey and to be seized and occupied by one of the great powers—Japan or Germany—who, in those days and ever since, have been anxious to secure colonies.

There was only one righteous, moral thing for us to do after we had taken possession of the Philippine Islands. It would not have been just and right for us to hand them back into the oppression and tyranny of the Spaniards; it would not have been proper to have handed them over to themselves, in their then condition, and leave them to the self-destruction that would have been sure to follow; it would not have been right to leave them in such a condition that they might have been absorbed by some great power, like Japan or Germany, or some other nation. We did the only righteous thing we could have done. We assumed possession and control of the Philippine Islands, and set about educating, civilizing, and training those people as no people of that kind or quality have ever before been taught, trained, and civilized.

There was as much justification, after we had taken possession of those islands, for our occupying them and establishing a good government there as there was for our taking possession of Cuba, occupying that country, and establishing a civil government there. And what a record we have made in the Philippine Islands! Is there any American citizen anywhere who is not proud of that record?

We have established a system of public schools, in which our own language, the English language, is taught; we have given them an abundance of roads; we have improved their harbors; we have furnished them with pure water in their cities; we have established a telephone and telegraph system; we have sounded and charted their harbors and their islands; we have built lighthouses, and made navigation safe; we have extended the railroad system of the country; and we have aided them in every possible way; but still the work is incomplete.

Compare the work of other countries with people of such blood—and most of these people, as I have said, are primarily of the Malay blood—compare our record with that of the Dutch in Sumatra and Borneo; compare it even with that of the English in India, or with that of the French in Cochin China, or with that of the Spaniards in the Western Hemisphere before the South and Central American States became independent, and it will be seen that no nation can point to such a record as we have made in the Philippine Islands in civilizing those people and making them fit for self-government and citizenship.

But, as I have said, the work is incomplete. While we have done a great deal of good there, much remains to be done. Their school system is only half developed; only about half of those who are of school age can find school accommodations, and there is an insufficient number of teachers in the islands. We had at one time 1,000 American teachers in that country, and, to my mind, it was a great mistake ever to diminish the number, which has been reduced to somewhere about 600. But the result of our educational system is that we have made the English language among the growing generation the paramount and leading language of that country, and if we are not interfered with, if our work is allowed to go on as we have planned it and carried it on, within a generation we shall have the people of those islands an English-speaking people. Taking young and old together, there are to-day in the islands more people who speak the English than who speak the Spanish language.

The great trouble is, Mr. President, that after the children have gone to school and have learned the English language, when they return to their homes they hear nothing but Spanish or one of their dialects—that of the Tagalogs, or that of the Ilocanos, or that of the Visayans. It is the same trouble that we have experienced here in our schools when we have sent Indian children to school. We have had many prosperous Indian schools here. The Indian children have attended them, have received a high degree of education, and become efficient and proficient; but when they returned to their tribes and to their affiliations they would relapse and lose the progress and attainments they had acquired in the schools. And so there is danger here.

I am very ambitious, as an American citizen, to see the great work that we have done in the Philippine Islands carried on to success.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. I have read the report of Gen. McIntyre, just published.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir; certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to ask the Senator from Minnesota one question, or possibly two questions: First, Is English the native language of the Filipinos?

Mr. NELSON. As a race they have no native language. They have a variety of languages.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But is English their native language?

Mr. NELSON. No; nor is Spanish.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is English one of their native languages?

Mr. NELSON. No.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No. Now, how would the Senator like to have somebody say to us that unless we would learn to speak Norwegian or German or French they were not prepared to recognize that we were civilized?

Mr. NELSON. Oh, that cuts no figure in the question. I simply referred to it as an incident. The fact that they have learned the English language, instead of the Spanish language, does not necessarily make them more civilized.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; but——

Mr. NELSON. And the interrogatory of the Senator is a little wide of the mark. It does not relate to the question of civilization at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, then, if the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. NELSON. It relates to the other question, and that is, while the Filipinos are under our control and under our possession naturally, as American citizens, we prefer to have them speak the language of our country instead of the language of Spain. What is more, they have no single language of their own. There are perhaps over a dozen—probably 20 or 30—different dialects in those islands. They are not a homogeneous people.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that. Of course the Senator and I are the very best friends in the world.

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And when we ask one another questions and when we debate we do it purely for the purposes of instruction and never for purposes of antagonism.

The Senator says—and he says very properly, too—that he does not contend that these people would prove that they were any more highly civilized by speaking English than by speaking Spanish.

Mr. NELSON. I want to correct the Senator from Mississippi before he goes a little astray.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have not gotten through.

Mr. NELSON. While we are on this matter of language it does not necessarily follow that one language is intrinsically more civilizing than another; yet I am enough of an American citizen to believe that a man who speaks the English language and is educated in American schools is a little more civilized, a little more intelligent, and more worthy of American citizenship than a man who speaks some other language or dialect. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will be obliged to admonish the occupants of the galleries that it is against the explicit rules of the Senate to exhibit approval or disapproval of any remarks.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I would not do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If it is repeated, the Chair will be obliged to request the Sergeant at Arms to clear the galleries. The Chair trusts it will not be necessary to refer to this matter again.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I want to say something to my good friend the Senator from Mississippi——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator let me finish?

Mr. NELSON. And I say it in the most Christian spirit. I am not anxious to make a long or extensive speech.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know that.

Mr. NELSON. I am only making a few scattering remarks.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. And I should be greatly delighted if the Senator from Mississippi would not interrupt me too much on this occasion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not going to do so; but since the Senator has surrendered to one interruption I thought he might leave me uninterrupted long enough to finish the question.

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator takes the position that in America when a man can speak the American language, which happens to be English, he is better prepared for American tasks and American duties than if he could not I agree with him absolutely; but the Senator is taking the position that when a man in the Philippine archipelago speaks the English language, therefore that man is better able to grapple with Philippine archipelago questions than if he did not.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And, if I understand the Senator, he has taken the position that we can not yet quite turn loose the Philippine archipelago because so few of the people there speak English, and there are so few school-teachers there who teach English.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, that is only a part of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, I should like to ask the Senator a question. How many school-teachers does he think would be necessary to teach German or French in the Philippine Islands in order to make the people of the Philippines more fitted for self-government?

Mr. NELSON. I should like to ask what the teaching of German and French has to do with the Filipino people?

Mr. WILLIAMS. They are equally foreign with English.

Mr. NELSON. That does not matter. They are not the language of our country; and it is our country that has taken these people in charge. We have taken them in hand and are educating them in our system of government and giving them our system of education. Why should we not use our own language instead of German or French or Tagalog or any other foreign tongue?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then we had better use their respective languages, whatever they are; and whenever we send American school-teachers there to teach Tagalogs and Visayans and all the balance of them in a language which they can not even understand in the primary grades we are committing an act of stupidity. We ought to send no American teachers there unless they can teach the native children in the native language.

Mr. HITCHCOCK and Mr. LIPPITT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I wanted to suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that the best reply to the Senator from Mississippi is this: The teaching of the English language in the schools of the Philippine Islands is preeminently necessary, because unless a single language is taught there will be no coherency or solidarity to the Philippine people. The only hope of ultimate independence for the Philippine people is to give them a common language.. With 8 or 9 or 10 or 15 Filipino dialects there is no hope for independence, no hope for solidarity, no hope for union of action. It is not because we desire to impose the English language upon them so much as it is a desire to give them a common language in which they can understand each other and by which they can govern each other.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me one moment further? Then I will sit down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota further yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In reply to the Senator from Nebraska, I wish to say that the nation of all modern times with the most solidarity is Switzerland, with the most homogeneity of purpose and tradition and ideal, and that throughout Switzerland there are spoken three languages—German, Italian, and French—and that some 90 per cent of those people who speak either language do not understand anything of the other two.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The situation which has been discussed here with relation to the language is not so important in the Philippine Islands on this account: The natives there are taking to the English language. There is an almost unquenchable thirst for more knowledge in the way of the English language.

Five hundred thousand children are going to the English schools, where none of the grades are taught anything but the English language. All of that indicates a desire upon their part to acquire the English language, and I do not apprehend that there is going to be any difficulty in the matter by reason of the fact that we have the English language there.

Mr. NELSON. I suppose the Senator from Colorado is aware of the fact that the Senator from Mississippi thinks it would be just as well to teach them Tagalog or the Visayan language or French or German.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not French and German, but Visayan or Tagalog, at least.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think if they were averse to taking the English language, if it were obnoxious to them, a different situation would be presented. Under those circumstances I believe it is better for a nation that seizes territory to conform to the language of the country. But here they are enthusiastic over learning the English language, and consequently it is not a source of irritation upon their part that the English language is taught there.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Minnesota will allow me just a moment, I should like to call attention to another very important consideration, and perhaps the most important consideration, in regard to teaching the English language in the Philippines, and that is the fact that when a Filipino child has been taught to read and to write in English he has opened before him a great storehouse of knowledge. He has access to instruction on almost every great subject in the world. If he is taught to read and write in the Tagalog language there is no literature available. There is no accumulation of books in the Tagalog language; and he is scarcely better off in reading and writing in that language than though he were without the ability to read or write in any language.

Mr. NELSON. But, Mr. President, there is one reason paramount to my mind beyond everything else why the English language is of great value and of chief value to those who desire to be informed and instructed in the principles of self-government. So far as I know, Mr. President, there are no governments in the world where the system of free local self-government, free government in the broadest and most generous sense, exists as it does among English-speaking people. No man can be familiar with the history of free governments, or what may be called parliamentary governments, unless he is familiar with the English language and with English constitutional history, which lie at the basis of our system of government.

Mr. President, while we performed a great work for the people of Cuba—and we had to go back there once after we had let them loose—yet that task was insignificant as compared with the great work we have done in the Philippine Islands. Look at the progress that has been made in that country within 15 years. They are to-day further advanced as a whole in the matter of self-government than are the people of India, who have been under British control for nearly 200 years.

When in the distant future the history of this country is written, no page of American history will be brighter, no page will evoke the pride of American citizens to a higher degree, than will that page which portrays our record and our work in the Philippine Islands. That work, however, as I have said, is still incomplete. Their school system ought to be developed to a much greater extent, and, as Gen. McIntyre says, their agricultural resources ought to be developed to a greater extent. While we have built them a large system of magnificent roads, extended their railroads, improved their harbors, established sanitary regulations in the country, and established local self-government, still in two respects Gen. McIntyre finds that the people are still behind—in their agricultural development and in their educational development. As I said a moment ago, only about half of the children in those islands of school age can now attend school, and there is an insufficient supply of teachers. The native supply is almost exhausted, and we have reduced the American teachers from 1,000 to about 600 or a little more.

I think one of the greatest works we ever accomplished and one of the best pieces of missionary work we ever did was when we sent to the Philippine Islands 1,000 American school-teachers to educate those people and to put them in the way of becoming a civilized, self-respecting, and self-sustaining people.

I have read the interesting report of Gen. McIntyre, and in that report he states substantially—I am not quoting his exact language—that while the Filipino people are in favor of the highest degree of self-government, yet a large proportion of the better class of people are utterly opposed to absolute independence. The Filipino politicians who are shouting and crying for independence all insist, knowing, as they do, that they would not be able to maintain their independence against other countries, that even if we do give them independence we ought to retain a sort of guardianship and friendly oversight to protect them against the inroads of foreign nations.

Mr. President, if the Philippines were as near our shores as is Cuba, it might be an easy thing to exercise a protectorate; but in those distant parts to exercise a protectorate such as we could do in Cuba would be hardly possible without keeping an army there, constructing expensive fortifications, and keeping a part of our fleet there. So if we have to exercise a guardianship to protect those people from being swallowed up by other great nations and coming under jurisdictions that would never think of giving them the liberty and freedom that we have given them—while we have to exercise that guardianship, had we not better retain control of the country and let its people exercise the highest degree of independence?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. Wait until I get through, and then the Senator can ask me a question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. All right.

Mr. NELSON. There is a difference, to my mind, between self-government and independence. We can give them the highest degree of self-government and still let them exercise that government under the Stars and Stripes under the protection of the American people.

I now yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the issue that I wish to make with the Senator is that they are not asking for a protectorate. Let me read the Senator a statement which was made by the representative of that people before the Senate Committee on the Philippines. He was asked the question whether a protectorate was desired, and here is what he said:

> We do not want any protectorate if we get independence. You would not want it, because it would be unfair and unjust to the United States; and we would not, because protection can never be afforded without impairment of the absolute freedom of the protected States, and we are more concerned about the substance of freedom than about the word "independence." If we are going to have independence, we want real independence and not merely nominal independence.

I will state to the Senator that the commissioner, when he appeared before us, further said that America did not ask for a protectorate when she got her independence, and he made the assertion also that no government that ever had won its independence ever asked for a protectorate.

Mr. NELSON. I am surprised that the Senator from Colorado should compare the Filipino people in their present condition with the condition of the thirteen colonies at the time they won their independence.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, well, Mr. President, when people are struggling for liberty you will find that the same motives prompt them, whether there is a high degree of education or not. But I want to say that what they fear, no doubt, is that an iron-hand policy may be pursued by our Government at some time. They, no doubt, would like a protectorate if they were sure that the United States would never step in with an iron hand; but, as a matter of fact, in the case of every people that have been under the control of another nation there is at times a change of sentiment in the nation that conquers; and the possibility that that iron-hand policy may be invoked is what they dread more than they do conquest by another nation.

Mr. NELSON. I will ask the Senator from Colorado whether we have ever given any other people in the broad world reason to suppose that the American people would impose the iron hand upon them?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, Mr. President, there have been times over there when the iron hand has been invoked. Ex-President Taft in his statement said that perhaps the majority of the Americans over there wanted a firm, iron-hand policy, and he combated it and said that it would not do; that you would have insurrection if that were to occur. Now, of course, men are fearful of what may occur in the future, and they would rather take the chances of not being subjugated by some other country than to take the chances of a change in sentiment in our own country perhaps, the result being that an iron-hand policy might be invoked.

Mr. NELSON. All this, Mr. President, is visionary. It is only a few of those cantankerous politicians over there, whose meat is politics and who live and die politicians, that advance such gospel. No sane man, I take it, can ever have the opinion that we, the American people, now or in the future, would ever impose the iron hand, as it is called, upon those people or upon any other people on the face of the earth.

In this connection I wish to quote from Gen. McIntyre's report bearing on this question. He says:

> While I have given above the public views of the political parties of the islands, I am convinced that no serious part of the Filipino people desires separation from the United States at this time, and that the serious people of the islands are wholly without belief that they can foresee clearly the day they would desire this separation.

That is from a report printed just a few days ago, made by Gen. McIntyre. My own honest conviction is that, apart from a few political agitators who live by the dissemination of such doctrine, as Aguinaldo lived by during the rebellion of 1899, the great mass of the people in the islands are glad to remain under the American flag and are thankful that they have such a great father as Uncle Sam overseeing their welfare. They are quite content, if we give them a fair degree of self-government, to remain under his protection. It seems to me that the proper course is to give those people a high, fair, and good degree of self-government, but to let them remain under the Stars and Stripes as a part of the domain of the United States of America. It will be of great benefit to us and we will be of great benefit to the Philippine people. Let me read what Gen. McIntyre has to say about the city of Manila:

The city of Manila is fast becoming, if it is not already, the most beautiful of the larger commercial cities of the Far East.

In addition to being the capital of the islands, it is the chief commercial port and business center. It is the location also of the larger industrial plants.

Mr. President, what was the condition in that city when we took it? Outside of the Spanish buildings, the convents, churches, and schools, it simply consisted of shacks, and the only water they had to drink was the putrid water of the Pasig River that comes down from Laguna de Bay. We have now made Manila into a great city. We have established there one of the best sanitary systems known. We have given them a system of pure water such as they never had before; we have given them a system of schools there; and we have given them commercial connections with all the other islands, so that city is becoming the great metropolis of the Orient. That city will not only prove a blessing to the Filipino people themselves but in the hands of the American people it will be the commercial emporium of the East. It will be the jobbing center, the one resting place where American people can go with their trade and traffic and be at home. It will be a place where if we have a fleet, as we have always had in the China seas, it can go there and find a haven of rest and be at home in those oriental countries.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. COLT. I have the highest opinion of the judgment of the Senator from Minnesota and I consider this a very difficult question. I would like to ask the Senator if in the government of the Philippines he would pursue the colonial policy of Great Britain in the government in India? The government of India by Great Britain is an absolute form of government, so far as Great Britain is concerned, in all matters of sovereignty, but the Government of Great Britain permits the people of India to pursue their own local habits, customs, usages, and religion, not interfering with them in any way, except that Great Britain retains the absolute power of sovereignty.

I should like very much to ask the Senator from Minnesota whether he thinks we should pursue the same colonial policy with respect to the Philippines that Great Britain pursues with respect to India, and further, whether there is any intermediate course between that policy of mere sovereignty and the policy which we have heretofore pursued in the Philippines, namely, of establishing the American form of government there?

It seems to me that this is a practical question, and I would like very much to know what is the Senator's view as to the kind of policy America should pursue?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I have no specific paregoric to offer on the floor of the Senate. The science of government, as the historian Macaulay has well said, is an experimental science. To lay down in a hard and fast rule what would be the best for the Philippine Islands as compared with the system that England has pursued in British India would be utterly useless. We have not adhered to that policy so far. Nothing that we have done in the Philippine Islands will compare with what the English have done in British India or what the French have done in Cochin China, or what the Spaniards did in their day of glory in the Western Hemisphere. We have inaugurated a new system in the Philippine Islands, as I call it, an American system, and we will build upon that system, fortified and strong, regardless of what has been done in other countries. Those are my views, and so again I say I have no specific paregoric to offer on this occasion or for the relief of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. NELSON. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think I agree with the description which has been given to us by the Senator from Minnesota, with regard to our relations in the Philippine Islands and what we have done for the people of those Islands. I may not agree with the Senator with respect to his conclusion. I ask, therefore, is it in the mind of the Senator from Minnesota that the relation between the Philippine Islands and the United States should ever be entirely severed?

Mr. NELSON. I will be very frank with the Senator. I think not. For the good of the Philippine Islands, for the good of the people of those Islands, it never ought to be severed. That is my candid opinion.

Mr. CUMMINS. I rather inferred that was the position of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. That is my position, and I am very free to express it. For the good of the Philippine Islands, it is better to have them operate their self-government under the Stars and Stripes than under any other flag or even under their own flag.

We talk about how people pine for independence and how it is better for them to give them just what they want. We have an illustration, Mr. President, in the matter of the Boers during the Boer War. There were no doubt a great many people in America who sympathized with the Boers and who held that they were entitled to self-government, no matter if it was not a good government, that is was their government, and they ought to have what they wanted. The war came, the Boer rebellion was suppressed, and what is the result? A government has been established in South Africa under the British flag, under the guardianship of the British Empire, better than any government which the Boers ever possessed or ever thought of possessing.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. I will yield in just a minute. The people of the Dutch Republics are to-day better governed and have more rights and more liberties than they ever had during the palmy days of the Boer Republic. Now I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator has said that it would be a good thing for the people of the Philippine Islands if they should be permanently retained by this Government.

Mr. NELSON. Retained under the auspices of our Government with a measure of self-government.

Mr. WORKS. Does the Senator think it would be a good thing for the people of the United States?

Mr. NELSON. I do, most emphatically. It is because of my love for this country and my pride in its flag and its institutions that, first of all, I want to retain the Philippines. We acquired those islands by the valor of American seamen and American troops. We did not go there as pirates. We did not go there to exterminate the people. We went there as friends. We found them in a quasi-civilized condition. We have blessed them, educated them, established a system of government there such as they never dreamed of before and such as we have no right to be ashamed of. Pray, what should we do at this time; scuttle the ship and cast it adrift?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. I am utterly opposed, Mr. President, to this startling policy, as though the American people, after they had established a good government over a people, civilized them, and put them on their feet, were after that period a menace and danger to those people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NELSON. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator has given great thought and patriotic consideration to this question——

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator be kind enough to talk a little louder?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I said the Senator from Minnesota has given very profound thought and patriotic consideration to this question, as he does to all great public questions. Before he takes his seat I want to call his attention to an extract from a book which has been placed in my hands, Our Philippine Problem, by Mr. Willis. In speaking of the benevolence of the American people there and the spirit of humanity which characterized our dealing with the Filipinos, I call the attention of the Senator to the following. The author says, on page 23:

Further than this, "very drastic military methods" were adopted—

Speaking of the American control—

"Crops, houses, and villages were destroyed or burned for the purpose of depriving insurgents of means of support, and reconcentration was finally resorted to.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, to save the time of the Senator, if he will allow me, there is no use of reading the Old Testament. What he reads relates to the suppression of the Aguinaldo rebellion, in 1899, and there is no occasion to go back to those days.

Mr. VARDAMAN. No; I beg pardon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor by the courtesy of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. This author goes on:

> Crops, houses, and villages were destroyed or burned for the purpose of depriving insurgents of means of support, and reconcentration was finally resorted to. Gen. J. F. Bell estimated in 1902 that one-sixth of the natives in Luzon died as the direct or indirect result of the operations, a figure which would mean a total death roll of at least 600,000 persons.

That seems to me almost incredible, but I find facts almost equally startling in their brutality set out in other books which I propose to submit to the Senate at a later period.

Mr. NELSON. It is the opinion, then, of the Senator from Mississippi that our government in the Philippine Islands has been a bloody, tyrannous, and arbitrary government. Is that the Senator's opinion, and is it for that purpose that he quotes that author?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I just wanted the Senator's opinion of the accuracy of this statement. I am frank to say to the Senator that I do think it has been very, very tyrannous, bloody, and arbitrary.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say to the Senator I know nothing about the writer of that book. I never heard of him before nor do I take any stock in his statement; but I wish to say in that connection that there was undobutedly some violence and bloodshed at the time of the suppression of what I call the Aguinaldo rebellion. Let all remember what the facts were. Aguinaldo and his associates got up a rebellion in the Philippine Islands in 1896. That rebellion was suppressed partly by arms, mainly by paying off the leaders and sending them to China, to Singapore, and Hongkong. Aguinaldo at the time Dewey sailed into Manila was, I believe, at Hongkong. He was brought over there at his own request to help the Americans in driving out the Spaniards, for at first we had only our Navy there. We had very few soldiers at first. After we succeeded in eliminating the Spaniards Aguinaldo took it into his head that he would drive the United States troops out of the islands and take possession of the government. He held a convention at Malolos, in Luzon, and they adopted a sort of a constitution and organized an army. They set up a rebellion and the last part of our war in the Philippine Islands, if you can call it such, was in suppressing that Aguinaldo rebellion. Of all the good things we did in those early days for the Filipino people, of all the blessings we conferred upon them, the chief was the suppression of that wild, reckless, savage rebellion of Aguinaldo. If he had succeeded in that rebellion and obtained control of the country, the Filipino people would have been in a far worse condition than they were even under the worst condition of Spanish tyranny in that country.

No, Mr. President; I feel that while I am willing to give the Filipinos as high a degree of self-government as they are capable of exercising, I still want them to exercise that government under the Stars and Stripes. I want a place in those islands where the American people and the American troops, and the American Navy will not be strangers and be driven away from the shores. I want a place in the oriental countries so that when we send our fleets into those eastern waters, as we have done for years and as we will continue to do, there will be a haven—a home for our ships—where they can go and be taken care of and meet with the same treatment that they receive in ports of the United States here at home.

Pray, what injury or what damage would it be to the Philippine Islands? Is it any detriment; is it any damage or injury to the people of Cuba that we exercise a sort of supervisory power under the Platt amendment? Is it any harm to the people of Canada that Great Britain has the supreme sovereignty there, and can oversee them in the hour of distress? Is it any danger; is it destructive to their liberties, for the people of the Boer Republics in South Africa to have a government established there under the auspices of the flag of Great Britain?

No, Mr. President; let them remain under the flag of the United States; let them be a part of our dominion, but give them as much self-government as you please, even such as we have in some of the States, if they deserve it and are fit for it.

I am opposed to the preamble of the bill. I regard it as trifling with the American people; as trifling with the Filipino people, to say that at some time in the future we will let them have their independence if, in our judgment, we think it is for the best.

My idea is that we ought to say to the Philippine people, We will give you all the highest degree of self-government that you can stand—that you are fit to exercise—but aside from that we want you to remain under the protection of the United States so that you will not be liable to self-destruction or to the invasion of any foreign country.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do not want to annoy the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, it is no annoyance. I am glad to hear from the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am interested in the Senator's discussion of this question. I should like the Senator to explain how he is going to determine the capacity of the Filipino for self-government until the Filipino is given an opportunity to try. It is not self-government to permit him to govern himself under American supervision. That is not self-government, as I understand it.

Mr. NELSON. You have self-government in Mississippi, have you not?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. And yet you are a government under the United States of America. Pray, does it do injury to the people of Mississippi?

Mr. VARDAMAN. The people of Mississippi stand on an equal footing with the people of every other State in the Republic, but that is not true of the Filipinos. The people of Mississippi are sovereigns. The citizens of the Philippine Islands are subjects. In the American citizen is vested all the just powers of government, while the Filipino exercises only such right as the United States may accord him.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no; they are not subjects.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Filipinos ought to have the right of self-government given to them. To put the question more accurately, the right of self-government should not be withheld from the Filipinos. The people of Mississippi exercise those rights which inherently belong to them as sovereigns.

Mr. NELSON. We have no subjects in this country. That term is foreign to American institutions and foreign to American law.

Mr. President, owing to the interruptions I have taken up more time than I intended when I first rose to speak. I feel, Mr. President, that we have done a great work in the Philippine Islands in educating the people there, in teaching them the principles of good government, in building up the country, giving them schools, roads, railroads, good harbors, lighthouses, and everything of that kind, and we have done a great work in establishing a civil government there, a civil government in which practically now the control of the government is in the hands of the Filipino people. They have a majority to-day of the Filipino Commission and the lower house of the Filipino Legislature is entirely composed of those people. I think a majority of the judges of the supreme court and the judges of what they call the courts of first instance are Filipino people. Most of their municipal officers are Filipinos. Most of their school-teachers, barring some 600 and odd American teachers, are of their own nationality.

Now, the science of government is a progressive science. We will increase this system of government as fast as they are qualified to exercise it. We will aid them in every way possible.

I feel, as I have said before, that in two directions they need further help. I am not here to criticize the present government of the islands. That is unnecessary and wide of the mark, but I feel that in two respects they need help.

They need help in the educational field. They ought to have about twice as many schoolhouses and twice as many American teachers as they have there to-day.

In addition to that, they ought to be encouraged and developed more in the matter of agriculture. In that direction they have been exceedingly slack and have failed to make the progress they might have made in that country. It is a curious thing—and Gen. McIntyre's report points it out—that there is a colony in the island of Mindanao of some 52 American employees who have settled down there and formed an agricultural colony. They were men in the civil service of the government and were discharged. They have married native women and settled down there and have become successful and prosperous farmers, more prosperous than any of the Filipinos. That is a great object lesson, especially there in the island of Mindanao where the home of the Moros is.

It would undoubtedly be a good thing if here and there Americans would settle in the rural communities and give the natives an object lesson in the matter of agriculture, and thus in a way serve them as we have served them with our school system.

No, Mr. President; I have a love for my land as if it were my daughter. I am willing to smoke the pipe of peace or carry the tomahawk in war, but, Mr. President, I can not for a moment harbor the idea that now or in the near future we ought to scuttle and cast adrift the Philippine Islands after we have made them into such a prosperous and happy country as they are to-day. Let us retain those islands under the American flag. Let Manila become the great commercial emporium of the East for the distribution of American products and American goods. Let us show to those eastern people that we have a great city and those islands under the American flag. We can become a civilizing power not only for the Philippine people but for the people in the adjacent islands, in the Malay Archipelago, and the people in India and in Cochin China and Cambodia, and for the teeming millions in China. American influence, if it is retained in those islands, will by and by permeate the entire oriental country and work for its civilization.

What started Japan on the road to progress? It was the advent of the American fleet there away back in the fifties. It was Commodore Perry's visit to Japan. They then commenced to turn over a new leaf and become a great country. After our possession, with the control and experience we have had in the Philippine Islands, our influence will be effective and permeate the whole Orient.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. No, Mr. President; let us never scuttle the ship. The American flag was hauled up over the bay of Manila, on Corregidor Island, at its entrance. Let no American be foolish enough or base enough for political reasons or any other to tear down our flag.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NELSON. I yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator from Minnesota referred to the fact that Manila may become a great distributing point of commerce. Is the Senator aware that there is a charge now and always has been a charge from San Francisco to Manila of $4 per ton more than from San Francisco to either Hongkong or Shanghai? Does the Senator not realize that on the arc of the great circle ships sail from point to point, if it is possible for them to do so, and that arc of the great circle would go to the north, near the ports of Japan and to Shanghai?

To distribute freight from Manila would require the unloading in other vessels of the ocean-going vessels, and owing to that fact it never could be made a distributing point for the Orient. Hongkong is the distributing point for Great Britain, and so is Shanghai. Why? Because the ocean vessels go in there, and they unload from the ocean vessels to river vessels. Consequently, there is a minimum cost in transferring the freight. But if you have to carry it 640 miles to Manila, and there reload into another ocean vessel, and then unload the cargo from that ocean vessel into a river vessel there would be such a high amount of cost for freight that it would be impossible to make it a distributing point or a commercial point in the Orient.

Mr. NELSON. Such an argument, with all due respect, seems to me to be aside from this great question and of a Lilliputian character. If it is important, Mr. President, to Great Britain to hold the ports of Singapore and Hongkong to retain their trade in the Orient, why is it not as much so to the United States to have a place like Manila in those oriental countries—in the midst of the great Malay Archipelago, with Sumatra and Borneo on one side, and with China, Japan, and the other countries to the north?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to say simply that I only referred to the points of distribution in answer to the very position the Senator has himself taken.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, the spirit of our institutions, the form of our Government, is abhorrent to the idea or purpose of holding colonies under the sword or waving our flag over an alien and unassimilable people that can not in all time become an equal factor with our States in working out our destiny. I am astonished at the utterances just submitted to us by the experienced and honored Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. He insists we should hold these people in subjection on account of the great blessings we are bestowing on them and of the possible value, commercial or otherwise, that the Philippine Islands may yet be to us. He speaks in glowing terms of their liberty under our flag, of their independence under the blessings of our sovereignty. Every word of his remarkable address is the old time-worn language in excuse of tyranny. The suggestion or the open advice that we should keep these people forever under our control is not only the essence of tyranny but violates every promise we ever made to the people of these islands, as well as every principle on which our own Republic is founded. We must not let our admiration of our work in developing these islands blind us to the rights of these people or the duty we owe ourselves as exemplars and forerunners in the cause of human liberty. There is no such thing as my freedom under your control. No government can impress its ideas or ideals of government on an alien people while holding the victims under the sword and reading the Declaration of Independence and waving over their heads our emblem of the free.

Mr. President, we can not longer afford to spend our time and vast sums of money, wrung from the poor of our own land, in educating the inhabitants of the archipelago. The task is more than good sense or good morals will justify when we see so many of our own people in our own land, as needy and far more deserving of our charitable solicitude than these people, lying under a tropic sun in the remotest islands of all the seas, and crying to be let alone and spurning your misdirected and unwelcomed benefactions. Every people on the earth has that particular form of government best adapted to their condition. If a better general conception of a better government prevails, the old will pass away. The particular form of government of any people is an expression of their idea of the best possible one for them. The king rules only where the people consent, and only as long as that acquiescence exists. So let it be with the people of the Philippines.

Mr. President, we went into those islands without reason and remain there without any just cause to stay. They do not want us, and we do not need them. They are 3,000 miles farther from our shores than London or Berlin or Paris. From the Atlantic seaboard they lie exactly through the globe, and from New York it is as near to go through the Suez as the Panama Canal to reach them. They are no help to our trade or commerce. They are a menace in times of peace, a veritable danger to our prestige, if not a deep humiliation at the end of any war with any maritime nation.

Aside from these considerations, a greater reason for getting out is the violation of the Monroe doctrine involved in going there. We can not maintain the Monroe doctrine and hold dominion over these islands. But the supreme and compelling reason, to my mind, for getting out of there is because it is wrong to stay there. It is unjust, tyrannous, to them and a shame to us. What becomes of our boasted love of liberty while we hold an alien and unwilling people under the sword? The effect of such a policy on our people at home is, and must necessarily be, deprecated by all who love our institutions and glory in our history. Practicing usurpation on other people's rights will soon blind us to our own, and that justice and equality which we now revere will easily, on slightest hope of personal or State aggrandizement, give way to such temptation and visions of power, dominion, and glory as will veil the better and higher things that now engage our attention and hold our love.

The object lesson which the Senator from Minnesota presents of the American in the Philippines giving lessons in government does not compensate for the injury done our own people in beholding the object lesson of usurpation and injustice which we are by force dealing out to those people.

Mr. President, from the very first I opposed taking or holding these islands. I shall vote for any bill that will take our troops away from there at any named date, and the sooner it takes effect the better I will like it.

It is none of our business to tell those people what form of government they must have. Let them solve that problem as best they can. They are asking no advice; they ask only for freedom. Let them have it.

Mr. President, the right of the case seems so plain to me, all in favor of these unwilling subjects of ours, that it is hard to find any excuse for withholding justice from them except in case of some great personal interest so blinding the advocate of their further oppression that he loses sight of the rights of man. Others, maybe, are led by that self-sufficient consciousness of superiority that finds no hope for any people out of hearing of their precepts and advice. God spare the Philippines from both.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of interest to this discussion, and I would now say nothing but for the fact that I think there are some things which we have done in the past, as well as some things which have been done to us in the past, which will help us on this occasion to do the hardest thing for mankind to do, and that is to put himself in the other man's place and judge from the other man's standpoint rather than from his own possibly selfish standpoint. For instance, Mr. President, the phrase "iron hand" has been used in this discussion. It is said that the people of America are incapable of using the iron hand upon another people. Let us remember that in the not so very dim and distant past the people of enlightened New England governed themselves by "blue laws" and governed the Indian with the flintlock and the sword. Let us not forget that the people of Virginia not so long ago governed themselves by that same high standard expressed in the bill of rights of that State, but it was not until about 1830 that the people of Virginia repealed the law upon her statute books, making it unlawful to kill an Indian on Sunday; and yet a people with that kind of record are fooling themselves in the belief that they can use despotism upon another people and not use it just as every other people on earth have used power against another people when it was in their hands.

Mr. President, just before the people of the United States declared their independence and fought for it, certain things went forward in the British Parliament, even as we now are considering the rights of other people. Then, as now, people who had met and declared themselves superior in wisdom and morals to another people and had elected themselves to be the rulers of that other people, expressed themselves as to what was then the great American character and the great American civilization, even as we are now expressing ourselves of the Filipinos. It is very interesting to observe what the lords in the House of Lords and the great men in the House of Commons in England thought in the years 1774 and 1776 of the American people and of our civilization. It was for the purpose of putting those thoughts and comments into the RECORD that I arose. It seems to me most pertinent now that we should know what our rulers in anterevolutionary days thought of our ambitions and efforts to obtain self-government. It is instructive to us in getting correct bearings on that most difficult of problems, to wit, putting oneself in the other fellow's place. I read from the English parliamentary debates.

The Earl of Sandwich said this in the year 1775:

THE EARL OF SANDWICH. The noble lord mentions the impracticability of conquering America; I can not think the noble lord can be serious on this matter. Suppose the colonies do abound in men, what does that signify? They are raw, undisciplined, cowardly men. I wish instead of 40,000 or 50,000 of these brave fellows they would produce in the field at least 200,000, the more the better, the easier would be the conquest; if they did not run away, they would starve themselves into compliance with our measures. I will tell your lordships an anecdote that happened at the siege of Louisburgh: Sir Peter Warren told me that, in order to try the courage of the Americans, he ordered a great number of them to be placed in the front of the army; the Americans pretended at first to be very much elated at this mark of distinction, and boasted what mighty feats they would do upon the scene of action; however, when the moment came to put in execution this boasted courage, behold, every one of them ran from the front to the rear of the army, with as much expedition as their feet could carry them, and threatened to go off entirely if the commander offered to make them a shield to protect the British soldiers at the expense of their blood; they did not understand such usage. Sir Peter finding what egregious cowards they were, and knowing of what importance such numbers must be to intimidate the French by their appearance, told these American heroes that his orders had been misunderstood; that he always intended to keep them in the rear of the army to make the great push; that it was the custom of generals to preserve the best troops to the last; that this was always the Roman custom, and as the Americans resembled the Romans in every particular, especially in courage and love of their country, he should make no scruple of following the Roman custom, and made no doubt but the modern Romans would show acts of bravery equal to any in ancient Rome. By such discourses as these, said Sir Peter Warren, I made a shift to keep them with us, though I took good care they should be pushed forward in no dangerous conflict. Now I can tell the noble lord that this is exactly the situation of all the heroes in North America; they are all Romans; and are these the men to fright us from the post of honor? Believe me, my lords, the very sound of a cannon would carry them off, in Sir Peter's words, as fast as their feet could carry them. This is too trifling a part of the argument to detain your lordships any longer. The noble earl then went on to abuse the Americans for not paying their debts; he made no doubt that the real motive of their associations was to defraud their creditors. That the Congress, on which the noble lord had passed high encomiums, was a seditious and treasonable meeting of persons assembled to resist the legal and just authority of the supreme legislative power; and however dignified by his lordship, or any other noble lord, he should always continue to describe it by the latter appellation as its only true and proper name.

Of course this was a slander against the American character and soldier; but who can say that the noble lord who uttered it in 1775 was not in as good faith then as are the Senators here now who deny the ability and the right of the Filipinos to govern themselves?

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator who it was that stated that?

Mr. CHILTON. I gave the Senate his name. This was the utterance of the Earl of Sandwich in the House of Lords of England in 1775.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CHILTON. Oh, yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course the Senator from West Virginia does not agree with the sentiments expressed by the noble lord whom he has just quoted?

Mr. CHILTON. No more than I agree with the noble Senators upon the other side in their criticisms of the Filipinos at this time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will pardon me, Mr. President, I have been in the Senate during the greater part of this debate and I have not heard anybody question the courage of the Filipinos and have not heard any aspersions upon the character of the Filipino people. I should like very much if the Senator from West Virginia thinks that they have been slandered in any way, to have him point out by whom and when that occurred.

Mr. CHILTON. Oh, Mr. President, I have not said that any one has been slandered, and that is not at all my point here to-day. I am simply calling back to the mind of the Senate the admonition in Holy Writ, "Judge not, that ye be not judged." I am trying to get the Senate in the frame of mind in which possibly the American Colonies were in 1774, when another people had the power over them and were dictating the terms upon which they might have self-government, and when England made just as great a mistake in the courage of the people of Vermont and Massachusetts and New Hampshire and Rhode Island as possibly we may be making now in the ability and in the patriotism of the Filipino people.

Mr. President, I have read many speeches made in England just before our independence began, but I do not want to read all of them. They are all to the same effect. They called us a backwoods people, without courage, without ability for self-government, without education to govern ourselves. They talked about a protectorate over us. They stated then that we would become subject to some other kingdom, and mentioned some of the Scandinavian powers that would probably come over and take possession of us whenever Great Britain should release her protecting hand from us. In other words, Mr. President, all the reasons which Senators have given to-day why we should not do the noble, the generous, and the fair thing with the Filipinos now were offered in 1774 and 1775 as reasons why England should not extend to us the God-given right of self-government. All of the reasons offered against us then are being offered now, and I am simply putting the two positions side by side and asking that we put ourselves now where we wanted England to put hereself 100 years ago—that is, "in the other fellow's place." Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, without reading them, to put in the RECORD certain other speeches of the same period that the Senators may to-morrow read them and digest them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that privilege will be granted.

The extracts referred to are as follows:

[From Debate on an Address to the King upon the Disturbances in North America, 1775.]

Col. Grant said he had served in America and knew the Americans well; was certain they would not fight. They would never dare to face an English army, and did not possess any of the qualifications necessary to make a good soldier; he repeated many of their common-place expressions, ridiculed their enthusiasm in matters of religion, and drew a disagreeable picture of their manners and ways of living.

Capt. LUTTRELL. * * * Sir, that the Colonies are inseparably united to the Imperial Crown of this realm I trust will never be denied by the friends of either clime; but, though it has been asserted America can subsist without our commerce, I believe nobody will say she can flourish without our protection. If we abandon her to her present miserable situation, she must soon sue to us or to some power for succor. In securing their lives and properties the Americans must ere long experience the fatal consequences of being exposed to the depredations of marauders and lawless ruffians; they will soon cry aloud for the reestablishment of those judicial authorities that have been imprudently overturned and which are necessary not only to the welfare but the very existence of the subject among the rudest nations of the globe. Sir, I fear, indeed, the Americans at this hour can not properly be styled the most civilized people in the known world, but an unfortunate fatality seems to have awaited that unhappy country for a series of years past.

(By Lord Chancellor Northington.)

If they withdraw allegiance, you must withdraw protection, and then the little State of Genoa, or the kingdom, or, rather, Republic, of Sweden, may soon overrun them.

[From further debate on the bill for regulating the government of Massachusetts Bay, 1774.]

(Hansard's Parliamentary History, p. 1303.)

Mr. STANLEY. These bills certainly affect the interior policy of America and are intended for the better regulation of its internal government. Whatever may be the opinion of that propriety of regulation with the Americans I know not, but their submission to the laws of some country is necessary, as I can not conceive the independence of an American colony to exist whilst the balance of power remains in Europe, supported and protected by armies and navies. These people must resort to some State, and it must be a Protestant one; and were they to unite themselves with any other State than this, they would meet with a yoke and burden which they would not wish to bear. It is said by some that this is driving them to a state of slavery; by others that this proceeding will be ineffectual. As to the latter, if we do not go far enough, we are certainly on the right side; but I can not sit still and see with indifference the authority of this country submitting to every indignity they shall offer us. There are but two ways of governing mankind—by fórce or by consent.

(By Mr. St. John.)

It is not, sir, the strength of America that we dread; they have neither men, army, nor navy. What, then, have we to fear? Do we dread the loss of our trade? No, sir; the avarice of the Americans will prevent that. They theaten us with not paying their debts, but I am afraid, if we give way to them, they will not allow that they owe us any."

[From Parliamentary Debates, 1782.]

(By the Earl of Shelburne.)

With respect to America, he has always considered her independence as a great evil which we had to dread and to guard against. He had spoken of it in this manner for years past and when he believed he was joined in sentiment by every man in this country. He had always believed and declared that the independence of America was an evil as much to be apprehended and dreaded by America as by Britain. This had always been his opinion, and he had constantly labored, by every means in his power, to persuade men that this was the case in his applications to private men and to public men, to individuals and to bodies of men; he had always held the doctrine that the independence of America was an evil to be equally guarded against by both countries. He wished to God that he had been appointed to urge that proposition and to maintain it before Congress. He wished to God that he had been called to prove by argument the assertion that the independence of America must be as prejudicial to herself as to Britain. He would have gone much greater lengths and said much more at the bar of the Congress than he ever said in his place in the British Parliament.

Mr. CHILTON. My thought is that we can not be truly a free people as long as we hold another people in subjection, and these old speeches of 1774, 1775, and 1776 ought to come in thunder tones to warn us that what we craved then we should not deny to others now.

Mr. President, one other point. We can never have a discussion upon this floor without our friends on the other side bringing up the Democratic platform. Some of the Senators on the other side may not look upon it as they do the Constitution, and most of them may not regard it as they regard the Bible, but it is the greatest comfort to me and, in my judgment, it holds out the greatest promise for good government and progress in this country that recent years have directed the attention of the Republicans to the force and the power and the virtue of Democratic platforms. I am glad to see that they are willing to square their action to a Democratic platform, and I am glad to see them insist that we shall square our conduct to the demands of a Democratic platform.

Mr. President, I do insist now that the Democratic Party has been consistent in its policy regarding the Philippines if it has ever been consistent concerning anything—and I am always ready to take up the gage that it has been. I am always prepared to maintain, and think I can show from the record that we do come as near to sticking to our platform as any other party ever did. Of course, there are instances of Senators who never are wrong and who can settle the question of baptism, for instance, or any other point to their own satisfaction and who condemn to eternal damnation the man who does not agree with them. There is no use to argue with such men.

Why, Mr. President, men have been arguing for a hundred years how Philip and the Eunuch ordained baptism, and yet on a question of that very kind, a question upon which different minds might well come to different conclusions, my mind's eye has in view now Senators who would condemn to eternal damnation as being wrong those who believe in immersion. They have settled it in their own minds; and so with Senators who believe in sprinkling. So it is with platforms. Platforms are general statements of a party upon general questions. We could not look years and years ahead and decide how the details should be settled as to the Filipino question. However, Mr. President, the Democratic Party has stated from the start that imperialism is wrong; that it is against the idea that should control government in the United States for this great people to hold another people in subjection. From the beginning the Democratic Party has set its face against that idea, and it stands there to-day, and in its platform of 1912, which I now ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, it sets forth exactly the position of the Democratic Party to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from West Virginia to print in the RECORD the matter referred to will be granted.

The section of the Democratic platform of 1912 referred to is as follows:

THE PHILIPPINES.

We reaffirm the position thrice announced by the Democracy in national convention assembled against a policy of imperialism and colonial exploitation in the Philippines or elsewhere. We condemn the experiment in imperialism as an inexcusable blunder, which has involved us in enormous expenses, brought us weakness instead of strength, and laid our Nation open to the charge of abandonment of the fundamental doctrine of self-government. We favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands as soon as a stable government can be established, such independence to be guaranteed by us until the neutralization of the islands can be secured by treaty with other powers.

In recognizing the independence of the Philippines our Government should retain such land as may be necessary for coaling stations and naval bases.

Mr. CHILTON. That means that we will promise the Philippine people definitely, as a part of the plan of this Government in dealing with them, that they shall have independence and a government of their own, free from the control of the people of the United States; that we will give them the blessings of free government, which we fought for and obtained.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

Mr. CHILTON. One moment. Something has been said about the glorious record of the people of the United States in the Philippines. I agree with the statements which have been made to that effect. It is a glorious record, a splendid one. We will read it with pride in the future. The part that the Republican Party has taken in it I concede. The part that the people of the United States as a whole have taken I concede, with patriotic pride. We are all proud of it; but the best is yet to come; the proudest part is yet to be. There is nothing that we have done that will ever shine so brightly as the final act when we, as a free people, say to the Filipinos, "Go and work out your own salvation, free and untrammeled by any foreign government on earth." The Democratic Party is now hastening to that consummation.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CHILTON. Yes.

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator says that the policy of the Democratic Party on this question is to promise the Filipino people their independence.

Mr. CHILTON. And to give it to them; yes, sir.

Mr. LIPPITT. What the Senator said was that it was the policy of the Democratic Party to promise it.

Mr. CHILTON. There is no need of the Senator and myself bandying words. I stand on that platform. I have made the plank concerning the Philippines a part of my remarks. It was a definite promise to them to give them independence as soon as a stable government could be had, and, as I construe it, not an indefinite promise to depend upon our will, caprice, or pleasure. As I read the platform, we propose to put it down definitely that they are to have it at a fixed time. That is the Democratic position, and I am going to vote for it.

Mr. LIPPITT. That may be the Democratic position, but it is not the position as outlined in the bill now before the Senate for discussion.

Mr. CHILTON. Oh, yes; it is.

Mr. LIPPITT. I do not know how the bill may be amended, but the bill that is now before the Senate promises the Filipino people their independence "when, in the judgment of the United States, it will be to the permanent interest of the people of the Philippine Islands"; and that was the statement which the Senator made a moment ago, that the position of the Democratic Party was that they would promise, and that is the position of the Democratic Party as indicated in their platform of 1912.

Mr. CHILTON. I merely want to say to the Senator, in response to that suggestion, that I have not yet voted for this bill. I am not arguing what this bill is; I am telling the Senator what is the Democratic position; and we are going to whip this bill into shape to meet the promises of the platform.

Mr. LIPPITT. I wish the Senator would tell me what the Democratic position is. The Democratic position as stated in the platform in 1912 was that they would promise the Filipinos their independence on certain conditions.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, the Senator says——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair asks that the Senators give the reporters an opportunity to get what they say. Will the Senator from West Virginia allow the Senator from Rhode Island to complete his statement?

Mr. CHILTON. I have the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that, but the Senator from West Virginia yielded to the Senator from Rhode Island, and the Chair thinks the Senator from Rhode Island should have an opportunity to complete his statement.

Mr. CHILTON. I yielded to the Senator to ask a question, and I supposed he had asked it.

Mr. LIPPITT. For the joyousness of the debate I will now listen to the Senator from West Virginia for a few moments.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator asked me to tell him and to try to make him understand what the Democratic position is. I can only repeat, Mr. President, that there is no use for the Senator and me to bandy words. The Senator is not going to agree with the Democratic position, and there is no use for me to tell him a thing that, even though it came from the angels in heaven, he would not believe and would not understand unless it suited his side. Whenever it comes to a question of politics the Senator has his own peculiar iden, and that is that the Republican Party is always right and the Democratic Party is always wrong. As to everything else he has a most beautiful character and is most delightful in every walk of life; but when it comes to talking about the Democratic platform and the Republican platform his whole idea is to entangle the Democrats and to make the way smooth and plain for the Republicans. I say to him again that even though it were told him by an angel from heaven he would not believe. [Laughter.]

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I rather like eulogies on my personal character. I am always pleased to have somebody say something nice about me. What I might do if something was told me by an angel from heaven I do not know, but when it is told me by the Senator from West Virginia I usually question it. [Laughter.]

I want to say now that I rose to ask the Senator a question, because he said that the policy of the Democratic Party on this question was to promise the Filipinos their independence; and he then said that he stood upon the Democratic platform of 1912 upon the subject, which is also a promise to promise the Filipino people their independence.

On this phase of the question it seems to me there are just two positions that can be taken by the Senate of the United States: One is to give these people their independence now and the other is to say nothing about the question of their independence. It is not within the power of this Senate of the United States to promise to the Philippine people anything about what some subsequent Senate may do. We have the power to grant the Philippine people independence. We have not the power to promise the Philippine people that some succeeding Senate will grant them their independence. It seems to me it is a very unwise position for us to put ourselves in to attempt to promise something that we have not the power to carry out. It is deceiving the Filipino people into believing that they have an assurance when they do not have it. It is not justice to ourselves, and it is simply belittling the whole question.

Either the Democratic Party must grant the Filipino people independence or they must leave the question to be decided by some other Congress that is willing to decide it. For them to undertake in this Congress to promise those people that a Congress of 1920 or 1930 will grant them independence, either on the condition that it is for their own advantage or on any other condition, is making a promise that they are not in a position to carry out.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CHILTON. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next at 12 o'clock.

Mr. STONE. When will the Senate adjourn?

Mr. CHILTON. It automatically adjourns at 5 o'clock under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn until Monday at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 17, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 14, 1916.

SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS.

W. Burch Lee, of Minden, La., to be surveyor of customs in customs collection district No. 20, with headquarters at New Orleans, La., in place of Robert L. Knox, removed.

APPOINTMENT IN THE ARMY.

COAST ARTILLERY CORPS.

Second Lieut. Richmond Trumbull Gibson, Coast Artillery Corps, to be additional second lieutenant in that corps with rank from June 12, 1915.

The above-named officer was nominated to the Senate on December 10, 1915, and confirmed by that body on January 10, 1916, under the name Richmond Turnbull Gibson, a graduate of the United States Military Academy, for appointment as additional second lieutenant in the Coast Artillery Corps with rank from June 12, 1915. This message is submitted for the purpose of correcting an error in the name of the nominee.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

CORPS OF ENGINEERS.

Capt. Harold C. Fiske, Corps of Engineers, to be major from January 12, 1916, vice Maj. Horton W. Stickle, retired from active service January 11, 1916.

First Lieut. Earl North, Corps of Engineers, to be captain from January 12, 1916, vice Capt. Harold C. Fiske, promoted.

CAVALRY ARM.

First Lieut. James E. Abbott, Sixth Cavalry, to be captain from April 5, 1915, vice Capt. Frank Tompkins, Tenth Cavalry, promoted.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 14, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven, touch the hearts of these Thy servants and guide them through the changing scenes of the new congressional day that they may address themselves with firm and steadfast purpose to the problems which confront them and fulfill the obligations resting upon them as faithful servants of the people. And Thine be the praise through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PENSIONS.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 8493) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio calls up a pension bill and asks unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill for amendment, as follows:

The name of Jennie E. Nelson, widow of Edward Nelson, late of Company D, Sixtieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Ida Nelson, helpless and dependent daughter of said Edward Nelson and Jennie E. Nelson, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Jennie E. Nelson, the name of said Ida Nelson shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Jennie E. Nelson.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The language in respect to this particular bill seems to be a little out of the ordinary. It reads as follows:

The name of Jennie E. Nelson, widow of Edward Nelson, late of Company D, Sixtieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Ida Nelson, helpless and dependent daughter of said Edward Nelson and Jennie E. Nelson, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Jennie E. Nelson, the name of said Ida Nelson shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Jennie E. Nelson.

It seems to me that that is setting a trap up the stream and down the stream at the same time. You catch them coming and going. It does not make any difference what happens, somebody is going to connect up with Uncle Sam's pay roll.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing unusual about this provision. It is simply a provision authorizing the payment of $12 per month to a widow because of a helpless child, and as long as the child lives the $12 will be added to the pension of the widow and paid in her name; in all, $24 per month; but it also provides that in case of the death of the child this additional $12 per month shall then cease. It further provides that in case of the death of the widow herself, the mother, then the name of the child shall pass to the pension roll, and the $12 will be paid to the helpless child instead of to the mother. This is the usual language employed in cases of this sort where a pension is paid for the benefit of a helpless child.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, in commenting upon this particular pension, I think, as far as my observation of private pension bills is concerned, this is an unusual provision. It is very rare, at least, that such a provision as this appears in a private pension bill. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the report on the bill, which says, respecting this particular case:

H. R. 2572. Jennie E. Nelson, aged 67 years, is the widow of Edward Nelson, who served as a private in Company D, Sixtieth Regiment New York Infantry, from October 2, 1861, to October 16, 1862, and from December 24, 1863, to March 20, 1865.

The soldier was pensioned under the general law at $30 per month for disease of lungs and heart.

He and this applicant were married February 28, 1867, and were recognized as husband and wife to the date of his death, October 26, 1904. She was paid his accrued pension and has been pensioned as his widow at $12 per month since October 27, 1904, under the general law (certificate No. 597180), and now seeks increase of pension by special act of Congress by reason of having the care, custody, and support of a helpless and dependent child of the soldier by the name of Ida Nelson. It is shown in evidence presented this committee that this daughter has been helpless and dependent since the age of 3 months, which resulted from an attack of fever, paralyzing the throat and affecting her mental faculties, so that she is now and has been since prior to age of 16 feeble-minded and helpless, and that she was born September 7, 1871; that neither this claimant nor the child are possessed of any property; that they have no income from any source except the claimant's pension of $12 per month, which it is recommended be increased to $24 per month, provided that in the event of the death of the dependent child, Ida Nelson, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine; provided further, that in the event of the death of the mother, this claimant, the dependent child's (Ida Nelson's) name shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the death of her mother, this claimant.

The point I want to raise is this, that in the event of the death of the mother herself an imbecile child is left, and then is it proposed that the Government of the United States shall pay to this imbecile child a certain sum of money instead of providing that it be paid to the guardian or next of kin who has charge and custody and control of the imbecile child? I do not see how you can carry out the provisions of the law.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. My understanding is that the Pension Commissioner himself will provide for that by requiring the appointment of some suitable person to take the money for the helpless child.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, there is a provision of law which provides that if a person becomes insane or is insane that the person in custody of that individual shall receipt for the pension.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Of course this money will not be paid to an insane child, but to a guardian for the child.

Mr. LANGLEY. It is the universal practice in the Pension Office to do just what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] has stated will be done in this case.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. There is nothing unusual about this. This is the usual practice. The Pension Commissioner, under the law, takes control of that.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, the present pension law provides that where there is an imbecile child and that child is pensioned, being under the age of 16, the pension may continue throughout the life of the child, as I understand it. Is not that the law?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. It would continue at $2 per month, as I understand it.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman from Kansas is right.

Mr. TAGGART. Where the pension of the helpless child begins before it is 16 years of age.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Yes; but only at $2 per month.

Mr. TAGGART. Possibly so.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of George Hull, late of Company E, Ninety-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out lines 7 to 10, inclusive, on page 25, being the name of George Hull.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 25, by striking out the paragraph included in lines 7, 8, 9, and 10.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 12 of the bill for the purpose of offering an amendment to strike out the paragraph contained in lines 15 to 18, inclusive, being the name of Silas Morgan.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to return to page 12 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I now move to strike out lines 15, 16, 17, and 18 on page 12.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Nelson N. Boydston, late of Company B, Thirtieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page 30, lines 17, 18, 19, and 20.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Page 30, strike out lines 17, 18, 19, and 20.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, because of the death of this soldier, Maj. Nelson N. Boydston, I move this amendment, and in this connection desire to say a word or two to call the attention of the House to the fact that this soldier had a most remarkable record in his long and faithful service in defense of the preservation of his country and in behalf of the freedom of human slaves. He enlisted at the very first call of his country and served four years two months and two days—to the end of the war. During all of that service the statement of his superior officer sets forth that he never once failed to stack his gun at night. He never spent a minute in the hospital; he never drank a drop of liquor; and while he was promoted step by step from a private to a lieutenant colonel, he states that he served three years of that time side by side with the late lamented Col. Henry W. Lawton, who was killed in the Philippines. He also says that in all of his procedure in the war when foragers were sent out they were always instructed by him to purchase such supplies as were needed; where they found women and children needy they were to contribute of whatever means they had to their relief; and where he found men in his regiment who were given to heinous conduct in foraging expeditions he declares that he invariably used the "short shrift." I believe, Mr. Chairman, that this tribute is due to this soldier, one of the bravest, one of the most faithful, and one of the most loyal of the many heroes who entered the Union Army from the thirteenth congressional district of Indiana. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 30, by striking out the paragraph included in lines 17, 18, 19, and 20.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Emily Bashaw, widow of Alfred Bashaw, late of Company I, Seventy-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Mamie Bashaw, helpless and dependent child of said Alfred Bashaw, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Emily Bashaw the name of said Mamie Bashaw shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Emily Bashaw.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask if the same conditions exist in reference to this particular pension which existed in the Nelson case?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. This is exactly similar to the other provision?

Mr. HOWARD. It is; yes, sir.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. What is the question the gentleman asked?

Mr. HOWARD. I want to find out whether the same conditions exist in reference to this particular pension as the other?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. The same conditions. That is the usual provision in all cases where $12 is paid because of a helpless child. It is paid to the parent during the life of the child.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, in the rapid manner in which the bill is being read for consideration it is almost impossible to keep up with the process, but I want to call attention before we finally vote on this measure to three pensions which I noted, having just read page 15 of the report. It seems that the little town of Mena, Polk County, Ark., has been suddenly and prominently put on the map in the granting of pensions. I see that John W. Baker, aged 69 years, has only been allowed $30 a month for a service of 1 year 7 months and 21 days, while in the same little bailiwick George W. Tilman, who is 71 years old, who only served 7 months and 21 days, is allowed an increase to $36 a month.

A little further down is Edward T. Wolfe, aged 68 years, late private in Company B, who served 2 years 10 months and 26 days, with a record that is almost unequaled in the War between the States, and I see that the committee only gives him $30 a month. Stephen Clevenger, aged 67 years, post-office address not given, is only getting $24 a month. Now, Mr. Chairman, in the interest of my colleague, whoever he be, who has introduced these bills, I think when my good friends Tilman, Baker, and Wolfe commence to compare notes when these bills get back home it is going to be very embarrassing to my colleague, and I think that all of these men ought to be put on an equal footing and draw the same amount. I can not see any reason why Mr. Tilman, under this report here, should get $36 a month and my good old friend Baker should get only $30, or this gallant old soldier Wolfe only receive the meager sum of $24 a month. Now, of course, we all understand the modus operandi of these private pensions. That has been discussed. I have not got anything to say about the granting of these pensions. I have already said all I expect to say about these pensions, but I think it is an outrage, gentlemen, to show this favoritism in the granting of these pensions.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. It does not seem to me it is right. Here are these poor old fellows toddling about in misery and want, as this report shows, all of them indigent, if they were not they could not get a pension, and here is a distinguished Representative in Congress from Mena, Ark., going to the Committee on Pensions and asking that we given Tilman $36, Baker $24, and Wolfe $30 a month. It is not fair. It is not right. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. HOWARD. I yield to my distinguished friend and colleague.

Mr. LANGLEY. I desire to ask the gentleman if he is familiar with the facts in each of these cases? Does the gentleman know whether one man is helpless and needs an attendant while the other does not, and their financial condition? Does the gentleman know that these considerations are very material in guiding the Committee on Invalid Pensions to reach a conclusion in each case?

Mr. HOWARD. I will answer my good friend by saying my little smattering of medical knowledge would lead me to believe that my old friend Baker here was in a worse fix than my friend Tilman. [Laughter.] Now, here is this poor unfortunate creature Baker. He served a year and 7 months and 21 days, and here is this man Tilman, who served but 7 months and 21 days. Now, just listen, gentlemen.

The claimant was last examined—I am speaking about my friend Baker now, who is getting only $30 a month—the claimant was last examined by a board of surgeons on November 16, 1914, when he was rated at $30 a month for paralysis. I am not going further.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Read that other word.

Mr. LANGLEY. Read the whole statement.

Mr. HOWARD. Is there a doctor present? [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say for the gentleman that he said he had only a smattering knowledge of medicine.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not know what this is, but whatever it is is horrible. It must be horrible. But anyhow he is suffering from rheumatism, all drawn up with rheumatism, suffering pain and agony every moment of every hour of every day in the year. He is wholly unfitted for earning his support by reason of injuries sustained by a fall, having his shoulder and his right hip badly crushed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOWARD. He is supplemented by the testimony of others, indicating that his property consists of a house and two city lots; that he has no other means and no income from any source except his pension, which it is recommended be increased to $30 a month. Now, here is Mr. Tilman, a fine old gentleman I know, 71 years old, who goes out and fights 7 months and 21 days only as against a year and 7 months and 21 days for Baker. It happened that my good old friend Baker fought exactly one year longer than Mr. Tilman. Now, it says that this gentleman had something the matter with his heart and his lungs, and he had one of these peculiar hernias.

A MEMBER. Tell us what it is.

Mr. HOWARD. I would call it inguinal hernia. The last certificate by the board of surgeons, dated September 18, 1913, shows the claimant rated at $30 a month for diseases of the lung and heart, on an equal footing with Baker, which was right, absolutely right, and up to that good hour he did not have any hernia. He developed this hernia between 1913 and 1914. Now, the medical testimony presented to this committee indicates that the claimant is unfitted for manual labor by reason of impaired vision, both eyes, and infirmities from age and diseases.

Now, Mr. Chairman, without burdening the House any further with the details of these reports, it occurs to me that in the interest of fairness and fair play, when the Treasury door has swung wide open to this class of citizens, with no hindrance or hurdle that can be put in the way, it is useless for anybody to say anything here against these pensions. I would as soon try to stop a Texas cyclone with an Army blanket as to stop these pensions.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. HOWARD. In just a minute.

But there ought to be an equality between these old Union soldiers. Here are three pensions for Mena, Ark. I know that Mena is a splendid little community and I know from its location that it needs a little artificial stimulant in the way of a little extra pension money in there. I congratulate my colleague from Arkansas that he has been able to locate in one bill three pensions in one town in a Southern State. It shows that he is active, that he is energetic, and that he is an able Representative of his people. But I do not want my friend to be embarrassed when he goes back home.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The substance of the gentleman's argument, as I get it, is that no one resident of this fair city should be treated "Mena" than any other? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. That is exactly it. The gentleman has said it much better than I could. These people live in Mena, and this Representative is exemplifying the name of this town by treating two of them "Mena" than he did another. [Laughter.] My speech is not made so much for the purpose of calling attention to the inequalities of these pensions, because it has existed ever since I have been in the House, but I want to call the attention of my distinguished colleague to the fact that when he gets back home he is going to find he has made two enemies by this beneficent act of his of putting two men on the pension roll at a lower rate than another one.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. I will.

Mr. EMERSON. Did you read from the description of this case that Baker has some property and Tilman has not? Had you noticed that feature?

Mr. HOWARD. Well, I do not think that makes any particular difference, because under the general law multimillionaires are drawing pensions from this Government. That does not make any difference with the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman is mistaken about that, of course.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the talk of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD]. Now, personally, there is no man in this House I think more of than I do of the "Schley" gentleman from Georgia; but he is simply against pensions and against all pensions. I am for all pensions. That is the difference between us.

Mr. HOWARD. That is a very wide difference.

Mr. THOMAS. That is a very broad difference. I am going to get every pension that I can to go down to Kentucky. I would rather they would go to Kentucky than up into the icicles of Maine, and why should we not pension these old soldiers? I believe we ought to do it. I am a Democrat. There is not a man in this House who does not know that I am a Democrat of Democrats. [Laughter.] My father was a Federal soldier. If I had been old enough, I would have been in the Rebel Army. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. I believe that.

Mr. THOMAS. And to-day I am in favor of pensioning not only Federal soldiers, but every Rebel soldier. [Laughter.]

Now, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] gets up and talks and talks [laughter], and the other gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] also. I understand Mr. TRIBBLE has got an item in the bill here for a pension down in his country, too [laughter]—trying to rob the Government, you know—and the first thing you know SCHLEY HOWARD will slip in a bill for some fellow down in his country. [Laughter.]

I do not know about the merits of these particular bills about which they are talking, but I do know the gentleman from Ohio, Gen. SHERWOOD; I do know old JOE RUSSELL, from Missouri [laughter], and I know that those men and the other men upon that Pension Committee will not place in that bill any item that should not be there. [Applause.] And so I will say to my friend SCHLEY, you are butting your head against a stone wall. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to my good friend the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. THOMAS] that I admitted that. There is no necessity to prove it. I admit it.

Mr. THOMAS. Then why should you continue to be so foolish? That is what I want to know. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. If the gentleman will yield——

Mr. THOMAS. Why, certainly; always. I never fail.

Mr. HOWARD. I have butted in foolishly, I admit.

Mr. THOMAS. Everybody admits that. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. But I did it for the purpose of correcting an inequality in the three pensions at Mena, Ark.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not believe there is any inequality about it. When Mr. WINGO, from that district, introduced those bills, and such men as Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri and Mr. SHERWOOD approve them, I do not believe there is any inequality. You have got to prove it to me now, and I will give you a piece of advice, and that is to stay still hereafter. [Laughter.] That will be better, because we are going to pass these bills for these old soldiers, because they deserve them. That is the whole thing of it. [Applause.]

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. And the gentleman is glad to see some of the money going into the Southern States?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I want to see some of the money go down South, even to Georgia and these other Southern States.

Of course, everybody knows that I am a Democrat. But this stuff of these two gentlemen from Georgia, Mr. SCHLEY HOWARD and Mr. TRIBBLE, getting up here every time we have a pension bill is foolish. They hop up and raise the mischief about something and do not know what they are raising it about, and my advice is that they quit it. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, there have been up to this time in this Congress 4,000 private pension bills introduced. In the case of every bill that is introduced the examiner for the Pensions Committee, Mr. Ives, who has been detailed by the Pension Office to do that work, and who has had 25 years' experience in the Pension Office—and he does not know who introduced the bill—makes his report on that bill, and if there is a favorable report it goes to the subcommittee of this committee. Then, if there is a controversy, it goes to the full committee.

Take this case, for instance, of Stephen Clevenger, aged 67 years. His service was seven months and two days. He enlisted in January, 1865. He saw no battle service; and, in considering the value of a pension bill, the service of the soldier is always considered. And furthermore, if he is disabled, whether his disability occurred on account of the war or since, that is always considered, so that the pension examiner considers all these questions and makes his report, and his opinion on a question of this character, where all the evidence is before him as to the service of the soldier, when and where his disability occurred, is of more value than the opinion of a Member on the floor of the House, who only reads the report and does not know anything about the circumstances of the soldier's disability.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. While I know that anything that a Member may have to say on this bill will not have any effect to prevent its passage, still I think the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] deserves the praise of this House for pointing out the inequalities he has discovered in these bills, and the matter ought to have the consideration that it deserves.

I would be the last Member of this House, notwithstanding I am from Texas and am the son of a Confederate soldier, to withhold a pension from a worthy Union soldier who is entitled to receive it. But I do say that there are inequalities in this bill. I have heard the gentlemen who are pressing the passage of this bill state that the reason why one man in this bill gets $50 per month and another gets only $20 per month is because of his being in worse condition financially, and perhaps in worse condition physically. I heard the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD] say, on the other hand, that the term of service counted. I have no doubt that these things have been taken into consideration, but I want to call the attention of the House to a case mentioned here on page 59 of the report of this committee, where it is proposed to increase his pension from $17 per month to $24 per month. The case is this:

H. R. 3724. Stephen Clevenger, aged 67 years, late a private in Company A, One hundred and forty-seventh Regiment Indiana Infantry, from January 2, 1865, to August 4, 1865 (length of service, 7 months 2 days), is now a pensioner under the general law at $17 per month on account of rheumatism, diarrhea, and resulting disease of rectum.

Here is the medical evidence of his present condition upon which it is purposed to base his increase of pension, namely:

Medical and other information furnished this committee indicates that the claimant is in such physical condition as to prevent him from earning his support by his own labor by reason of rheumatism, enlarged prostate, cystitis, piles, associated with rectal ulcers.

Now, what worse physical condition could a man be in than that?

Mr. ASHBROOK. He might be blind.

Mr. BLACK. So he might. Now the report further states that the soldier has no property or income except his pension. There you have a man who is totally disabled, physically. He has no property, and no other income except his pension; and yet this bill grants a pension of only $24 per month, whereas other provisions in this bill grant private pensions amounting to as high as $50 per month, under conditions which I do not think are any more meritorious.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. SHERWOOD. The evidence does not show that his disability was contracted in the service. That is the point.

Mr. BLACK. The point I make, Mr. Chairman, is simply this, that these bills are introduced by Members of this House asking, some of them for a pension of $20 a month, some of them for a pension of $30 a month, some of them for a pension of $36 a month, and some of them for as high as $50 a month. It does seem to me that there ought to be some equality about this. I believe that the system as now practiced by this House in reference to these pension matters is wrong, and the sooner it is corrected, the better.

There ought at least to be some measurable equality.

Of course I admit that there are circumstances sometimes that justify the granting of these private pensions, but the abuse of the thing is what I am striking at and I do say that there is abuse along this line.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Does the gentleman think a man who had a very short service, after the war was practically ended, should have the same compensation as one who served a long time while the war was actually raging?

Mr. BLACK. No, I do not.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. I should like to suggest to the gentleman that God Almighty said that those who get in at the eleventh hour are given as good a seat in heaven as anybody else.

Mr. BLACK. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. We have not been proceeding upon that high plane here.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLACK. I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended two minutes, so that I may reply to the question which the gentleman from Missouri desires to ask.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Does the gentleman notice that this man Clevenger enlisted in January, 1865?

Mr. BLACK. I do.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Only about three months before the surrender of Gen. Lee.

Mr. BLACK. I notice that; yes.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. And my information from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD], who is an authority upon military matters of the Civil War, is that this man saw no actual service. There were no battles fought after that. Now, does the gentleman think he should be paid the same amount as a soldier who was engaged in the active part of the war, and who served longer?

Mr. BLACK. No, I do not, and I have taken no such position; but I call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to the fact that, on page 58 of the report, appears the case of George W. Tillman, of Mena, Ark., who served only 7 months and 21 days—or only 19 days more than the case just referred to—and yet he is granted a pension of $36 a month; a difference of $12 per month, notwithstanding the very short difference of time in their respective terms of service. I say there is no equality in that, and I again protest against it.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. But the gentleman will notice that his service was from 1862 to 1863, in the midst of the war, while the other man served from January until August, the greater part of which time was after the war was over.

Mr. LANGLEY. And he saw no actual service in fact.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. He saw no actual service.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I notice that this Stephen Clevenger, who is allowed $24 a month under H. R. 3724, on page 59 of the report, whose case has just been spoken of, had been recommended for $24 a month by the board of surgeons, but his application denied. Therefore this committee allowed him the $24 which had been recommended by the board of surgeons. That is the reason.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask the Clerk to proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of William R. Wolbert, late of First Battery Minnesota Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out lines 14, 15, 16, and 17, inclusive, on page 31. The beneficiary is dead.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 31, by striking out the paragraph included in lines 14, 15, 16, and 17.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a statement about the bill. It originally contained 201 names. Three have died since the bill was prepared. Eighty-eight per cent of this bill includes bills of the Sixty-third Congress. We were crowded out of two regular pension days in the last session of that Congress, and 88 per cent of the names in this bill are to cover bills introduced by Members in the last Congress and reintroduced in this Congress, having been passed upon before.

There are in this bill 133 claims for invalid pensions, representing original pensions amounting to $2,953 monthly, which total monthly amount has been increased by $1,399, making a total annual increase for invalid claims of $16,788, the average increase per month for each being $10.44.

There are in the bill 68 widows and helpless children's claims, having original pensions of $630 monthly, which have been increased $748 monthly, making the toal annual increase for these claims $8,976, or the average monthly increase for each claimant $12.80. The total annual increase carried in the bill is $25,764. Included in the above are 10 original widows' claims allowed at $12 per month and 5 helpless and dependent children's claims allowed at $12 per month.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if no Member wishes to occupy time, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the same do pass as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HENRY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, on the Private Calendar, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8493) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. CALLAWAY made the point of no quorum, but subsequently withdrew the point.

COAL AND OIL LEASES.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 406) to authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium, with Mr. CULLOP in the chair.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire if the amendment changing the number of the section has been agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that that amendment has been adopted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Oklahoma to the fact that at the bottom of this section it says:

And the tract and deposits of oil or gas therein shall thereafter be subject to lease as prescribed in section 16 hereof.

The sections have all been renumbered.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; but we will change that after we get through with the section.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I moved to strike out the last word, but I desire to withdraw that amendment and offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming withdraws the pro forma amendment and offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 23, strike out the words "patent for one-fourth," and insert the words "leased for one-half"; and after the word "permit," in line 24, add "at a royalty to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I called attention to the very extraordinary provisions of this section last evening. This is a leasing bill, and yet the provision in this section is such that one-quarter of all of the oil lands of the country could be patented, and patented without expense or cost to the patentee. Gentlemen will say that they feel that it is necessary to give the explorer in a new field, or the wildcatter, this bonus in order to encourage him to develop. Well, if that is true, it is a very large price to pay for the inauguration of a leasing system. We now dispose of our oil lands under a law that requires thorough and complete development and the payment of $2.50 an acre. If it is necessary to give away one-quarter of all the oil lands of the country without price and without requiring development, in order to start a leasing system or to make a leasing system successful, then it must be confessed that we are paying a very large price for this system.

Not only that, but the land it is proposed to give away would in every case be the best of the land. In the first place, a prospecting permit is granted for 640 acres, 1 square mile, or 2,560 acres, or four sections, depending on the distance from a producing well. If oil is discovered at any point on that area the permittee may then select from the area of this prospecting permit the most desirable one quarter of the same, or any one quarter, and receive a patent for it out of hand and without cost.

That, of course, will mean that a driller, having started at a point which the geological conditions indicate are the most favorable for oil development and having discovered oil, will select the best portion of his area, and two or three or even one such permittee might take the entire dome and practically all of the valuable land in a given field, returning to the Government only the comparatively worthless land lying outside of the oil dome or oil basin, as the case may be. Some of the oil lands in California are worth millions of dollars to a quarter section, and yet we are proposing to give from one quarter section to a full section of lands to these people.

I realize that this is done in good faith. The trouble is that gentlemen have not sufficient faith in the system they are proposing; they have not as much faith as I have. I do not believe that it is necessary to give away 25 per cent of the oil lands of the country, and the best 25 per cent of it, in order to get men to lease and develop oil lands.

There are other reasons than these why this should not be done. Why are we entering on a leasing system? In order that the people of the country may receive revenue? No; because no one receives any of the revenue except the people of the general country in which the development is to be. It all goes into the reclamation fund under the bill, and we hope when it becomes a law that one-half will be retained within the State for schools and roads. But in no event does it go into the Federal Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. We are therefore not inaugurating a leasing system with the idea of enriching the people of the United States. I believe we must come to a leasing system whether we like it or not. That being so I have favored a leasing system because of the hope that it will bring us a larger income for local use from mineral deposits, but there are other arguments in favor of a public leasing system. One of them is that through the public control that comes under a leasing system you may prevent waste, and so control the operation as to prevent, on one hand, development not warranted by the market and, on the other, the plugging of wells and failure to produce, with a view of enhancing the price when the product is actually needed.

If these benefits are to be obtained under a leasing system, they can only be obtained in the largest and best way by having all the lands under this control; and if instead of retaining these lands in public control under a leasing system we patent 25 per cent of them, and the best 25 per cent, we lose that control over a large part of the territory which we seek to secure under our legislation.

Of course all this is on the supposition that the provision we have been discussing will be carried out in accordance with its terms. It probably would not, and therefore holds out a hope of patent that, except in a few favored or fortunate cases, would not be realized.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman knows about the situation in the oil and gas country, and he knows it costs a good deal to drill a well for oil or gas?

Mr. MONDELL. I had some painful experience in that line some years ago.

Mr. BORLAND. There is an outlay of considerable expense. Does the gentleman think that anybody could be induced to prospect upon public land and locate oil or gas at a depth of 500 feet or more upon the mere prospect of obtaining a lease in competition with others; or is it not necessary that they have some more substantial right?

Mr. MONDELL. I have tried to make it clear that I have more faith in the leasing system than these gentlemen who are handling the bill seem to have. Answering the question directly, yes. Under a proper, straight leasing system, under a reasonable system you can secure more development, in my opinion, of the right sort than you would obtain under this provision of legislation.

Mr. BORLAND. What is the proper system of leasing?

Mr. MONDELL. A system under which the opportunities are made definite the leasehold secure the acreage sufficient and the royalty reasonable. May I suggest that all of the development in the oil fields of Oklahoma has been under lease. That answers the gentleman's question. There is no ownership there. There is the greatest oil development in modern times, and none of the operators hold an acre of land. There is no doubt about that. If you give men proper leases, real legitimate operators would prefer to have a lease to half a section rather than a patent to a section, particularly when there is grave doubt of your getting the patent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has again expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, in a word, the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming seeks to strike out the inducement offered to a prospector. The House will undoubtedly want to know what the present law is. Under the present law in mining oil on public lands the developer gets all of the land by a payment of $2.50 an acre, which is a nominal sum, in the event that you strike oil. Under our provision he gets one-fourth of his prospecting permit and we retain three-fourths of the developed oil land for the benefit of the Government. The amendment of the gentleman, of course, is all out of harmony and is entirely awry with every contention that he has made heretofore. He has been against the bill in its entirety, because he wanted the lands for patenting and taxation and all that sort of thing. The committee has anticipated that some controversy of this kind might arise, though hardly expecting it from the gentleman because this is at right angles with all of his other contentions, and we have had this put up to the Geological Survey and to the Interior Department, had them analyze it and justify it, and I have their verdict here summed up in a few words. The Interior Department says:

The reason it is advisable, after the discovery of oil or gas by a permittee, to give him a patent for one-fourth of the area covered by the permit is to induce citizens to undergo the labor and expense of prospecting for and finding workable deposits of oil or gas. The present mining laws and the mineral development of the country have been largely secured without expense to the Government because of the reward held out to the prospector in the form of a patent for the lands containing the deposits. While present laws are ill adapted to the discovery or disposition of oil or gas, it is doubtful whether the mere prospect of a lease would stimulate prospecting to the same extent as would a reward in the shape of a patent for a part of the land upon which oil is discovered. Furthermore, the oil claimant may desire to have the fee simple to a small area on which to erect permanent improvements, houses for his men, etc., and this provision will enable him to get patent for a limited area for those purposes. (b) The reward of not exceeding 160 acres within a 10-mile limit and not exceeding 640 acres without the 10-mile limit is not too great when it is borne in mind that the sinking of an oil well may involve expenditures of from $5,000 to $75,000, and that in many cases the expenditure of thousands of dollars will result in dry holes, the exploration being repeated several times before a paying well is disclosed. In any event, the United States is left with three-fourths of the area covered by the original permit, the value of which has been demonstrated by the drilling operations and discoveries of the permittee. (c) Ninety days within which the permittee may secure a patent for the areas given him as a reward for his discovery is not too long, because of the fact that he may be 60 or 100 miles from the local land office, requiring considerable time to proceed thereto from his claim, the preparation of the necessary proofs, in the form of affidavits, plats, etc., as a basis for the application for patent. Homestead settlers upon unsurveyed lands are allowed 90 days after survey within which to present their applications.

We knew the Geological Survey had charge of this, and we knew that they knew the practical side of it, that they had gone over it, and made surveys and drillings and tests and prospecting holes, and this is what they say:

The issuance of a patent for one-fourth of the area covered by the prospecting permit to drill for oil or gas is merely the prospector's reward for his expenditure of time and money in the discovery of such deposits. The Government reaps the advantage in the enhanced value of the remaining portions of the area covered by the prospecting permit. This enhanced value will be much greater than the cost of such prospecting operations and will be somewhat commensurate with the value of the property obtained. If the Government is not to do the prospecting work itself, it must hold out some inducements to have the work done by others. The improvement of the remaining three-fourths of the area is such a valuable return for the concessions granted that there should be little quibble as to the size of the reward.

(b) The reward, in the bureau's estimation, is not too great. The permittee within the 10-mile zone is probably taking less risk and incurring a lesser expenditure than would be the case as regards the permittee beyond such zone. It is doubted whether a lesser reward would prove sufficiently attractive to induce capital to make the large expenditures required in oil and gas prospecting. The cost of a single well in California often times runs from $25,000 to $50,000, while in other sections of the country it runs from $3,000 to $15,000.

If a man takes $75,000 and goes out onto the public domain—onto worthless, poor land—and expends $75,000 to develop that and make that land worth something, if he gives the Government three-fourths of it and only retains one-fourth of it for himself by reason of discovery, he has certainly done pretty well by the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I really hope the House will not agree to the amendment, for the reason that I fear the gentleman wants to make unpopular a bill that now holds out some inducement to these people. We want the bill to work. We want the bill to be a razor that will shave. We want a bill that will accomplish something. The gentleman does not like the legislation. I am sorry that he does not, but surely we can not agree to permit him to make the bill inoperative by amendments that are all out of joint with all of his views. We must beware of the "Greeks bearing gifts."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto conclude in 15 minutes, 10 minutes of the time to be occupied by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and 5 minutes by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry, but it seems impossible for the Committee on Public Lands, whatever it may do, to satisfy the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. For hours he has declaimed upon the floor against the policy of the committee retaining title in the Government to this character of resources upon the public domain. He has insisted in other bills that he himself has introduced that the Government part with all its title to the public lands. When we come to this bill, however, where we have a provision in it that does grant a title in fee simple to one-quarter of a certain area the gentleman objects. The ground of his objection to the policy of the committee has been that it means absentee landlordism; that it deprives the States of their power to tax the land within their borders, but when we come to the provision of this bill we eliminate, in part, this objection that he has made. We grant title in fee simple to a portion of the land. Then he turns squarely about face and says he objects to that; and now he is in favor of absentee landlordism; now he is in favor of the States being deprived of their right to tax that portion of the public lands. Why, in general debate upon that very bill, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman used this language:

The one thing that affects us most immediately—the one thing that renders the bill obnoxious to practically everybody in all the vast area to which it applies—is the feature that proposes to lay for all time a burden of Federal royalty and take it out of the community, make Uncle Sam an absentee landlord in a larger way and under conditions certain to be more onerous and trying to live under than any system of landlordism established since the beginning of time.

We certainly expected when we came to this provision, where we grant title to one-fourth of the land in the prospecting permit to the man who made the discovery, that would have been one provision in the bill, at least, that would meet the approval of the gentleman from Wyoming. But we find here that he assails this provision quite as bitterly as he has assailed other provisions of the bill, regardless of the fact that he is abolutely inconsistent in the position which he takes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is the reason for this departure from the general policy that has been pursued, so far as it relates to this particular resource—the matter of oil? There is very good reason for it. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming knows better than most of us that oil is not discovered by merely going upon the land. The gentleman knows that it requires a very large expenditure of money before any discovery is made. The gentleman knows that usually these oil lands are upon the desert. The gentleman knows that every acre of these lands is subject to entry of the surface, with the reservation of the oil on them; and the gentleman knows, too, that under an act of Congress recently passed it is open to the entryman to disprove the mineral character of that land, and get title not only to the surface but in the oil itself, if it be there. The gentleman knows, too, that if his proposition be adopted, away from those proven and developed fields, in many portions of the country, with not a sufficient inducement to prospect that land, it will lie undeveloped, and that the time will come when the private owner will get the full title to the land under the provisions of the act that I have mentioned, without reference to the mineral character, because the Government will not be in a position to assert it, and the lapse of time will be strong indication that it is not mineral and no effort made to develop or discover it.

Now, with the provision we have we offer a liberal inducement to the prospector to go upon the land and discover oil, if there be oil there. If he makes the discovery, he has added value, tremendous value, to all of the remaining Government land in that vicinity. That is not true of water-power sites; that is not true of coal, because the Geological Department of the Government can determine that fact, but they can not with reference to oil. So it is very clearly in the interest of the Government, even to the extent of parting with a portion of its title, to reward the man who goes upon the land and thereby adds millions of dollars of value to the other lands belonging to the Government, and that he be given this reward in this particular case. And the reason, as I have said, is because the mineral character of that land, so far as oil is concerned, can not be determined by the Government, can not be determined by anybody except by putting a drill upon the land and drilling down to find out whether there is oil in commercial quantities or not.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I sympathize with the gentlemen of the committee. I realize the trying situation they are in. They have brought in a bill here that, in the first place, as to its fundamental principles, is objected to by an overwhelming majority of the people of the territory which it affects, a bill which contains a great many features which are believed to be very unwise and harmful by those from the region affected who are favorable to the general principles of the bill. They have been very unhappy in their work and the results which they have obtained, and I do not wonder they feel bitter about it, and if they get any consolation through abusing me and misstating my position, why, all well and good. I am as much opposed to the provision which gives away 25 per cent of the land, which takes from the control of the Government 25 per cent of the land, as I would to a provision which would render the bill inoperative. I believe leasing legislation can be so drawn as to be workable, but I do not believe it is in the interest of development; I do not believe it is in the interest of proper control to have any such provision as this in the bill. The chairman of the committee did not attempt to defend this provision. He read from statements made by the Secretary of the Interior and the Chief of the Bureau of Mines. Why, certainly the Secretary of the Interior is for it; it is his provision. Everybody understands the Secretary of the Interior suggested this proposition; that it never occurred to a member of the committee. It was never contained in any leasing bill until the Secretary of the Interior, after consultation, I presume, with the California oil men, concluded this would be a wise thing.

Probably it was well intended. Of course, he was defending it. Why should he not defend his own child? It was his proposition. He wants it done. Now, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], having misrepresented my position half a dozen times, I trust in the future will remember that I am and have been for coal and oil leasing legislation if we can have a fair, reasonable, and workable bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield?

Mr. MONDELL. And the gentleman knows very well that what he has been quoting from my statements are an expression of the opinion of those people who oppose leasing legislation and of the fears that are still in the minds of the people of the West, who have brought themselves to the belief that whether we like it or not we must accept it. This provision will simply add to the difficulties, add to the confusion, and largely reduce the benefits which we hope to secure, if benefits may be secured, through a medium of this sort.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman then disclaim as being an expression of his own views the quotation I read from the RECORD?

Mr. MONDELL. Those are my views. The gentleman has quoted a part of what I said. I said that we objected to the Government being a landlord and taking a toll from our resources without giving a part of it to our State for our development. And certainly we do. I mean that. But in the very same speech, as the gentleman knows—and it is useless for me to continue to reiterate it because my position is well known, and I trust the gentleman will not again attempt to misstate it—I said I was for this class of legislation if we can get it in a workable form, and it is just as important to my people that we be not overliberal in a harmful way as it is important to them that it shall not be overrestrictive in a harmful way. And I am against this provision, because no such unnecessary and harmful liberality is required in order to put a leasing system on its feet, and it will bring confusion and bring harm. The patenting provision will not only confuse and complicate the situation if carried out in accordance with its evident intent, but it is objectionable from the fact that it is not likely to be administered for any length of time in a free and impartial way. Let some one who has a prospecting permit bring in a bonanza well and the cry go up that the Government is giving away property valued at millions of dollars. Do you not imagine there would be some difficulty in getting a patent? Let those answer who are now trying to secure patents to oil lands. If a patent were finally secured in such a case, would not a cry go up at once for the Secretary to amend his rules, which, in the exercise of his wide discretion he would have the right to do, so that nothing of the kind could happen again? Some rule would be adopted under which few would ever get the opportunity for a permit or patent. We would then have the ill effect of this provision and little or no benefit from it.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that, on page 13, line 20, the word "sixteen" be stricken out, and the word "eleven" be inserted in lieu thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FERRIS. Now, Mr. Chairman, on page 13, line 20, the word "sixteen" has reference to a section that was stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. That section, the Chair desires to state, has not been read yet.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, yes; it has. We have just concluded it. On line 20, page 13, I want to strike out the word "sixteen" from the text, and insert in lieu thereof the word "eleven."

The CHAIRMAN. Is that a committee amendment?

Mr. FERRIS. No; it is not a committee amendment. It is an amendment that we now desire to make. It is a reference to another section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, line 20, strike out the word "sixteen," and insert the word "eleven."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 16. That all permits, leases, and patents of lands containing or supposed to contain oil or gas, made or issued under the provisions of this act, shall be subject to the condition that no wells shall be drilled within 200 feet of any of the outer boundaries of the lands embraced within any permit, lease, or patent, unless the adjoining lands have theretofore been patented or the title thereto otherwise vested in private owners, or unless the lessees or patentees of such adjoining lands shall, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, agree to the drilling of wells and removal of the oil or gas from the 200-foot tracts or reservations herein created, and to the further condition that the permittee, lessee, entryman, or patentee will, in conducting his explorations and mining operations, use all reasonable precautions to prevent waste of oil or gas developed in the land, or the entrance of water through wells drilled by him to the oil sands or oil-bearing strata, to the destruction or injury of the oil deposits. Violations of the provisions of this section shall constitute grounds for the forfeiture of the permit, lease, or patent, to be enforced through appropriate proceedings in courts of competent jurisdiction.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out the last word. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BORLAND. I wanted to ask the chairman of the committee in regard to the meaning of this section. I notice that it says:

That the permittee, lessee, entryman, or patentee will, in conducting his explorations and mining operations, use all reasonable precautions to prevent waste of oil or gas developed in the land or the entrance of water through wells drilled by him—

And so forth.

Now, it is my understanding, if I am correctly informed, that the Bureau of Mines has found some way of sealing the gas strata in an oil well so as to prevent the useless waste of gas where there is no immediate market for it; that instead of allowing the gas to be turned loose in the atmosphere as a permanent waste it can be sealed up in the strata and kept there until such time as there is a market for it. Can that requirement be imposed upon the lessees and permittees under this section?

Mr. FERRIS. It can. That is one of the purposes of the section.

Mr. BORLAND. In what way would you require it besides this forfeiture? Is there any supervision that takes place before the forfeiture is ordered?

Mr. FERRIS. We have a section later on—section 30—that authorizes the Secretary to make any needful regulations and work out any detail to bring about these results. And I have the justification here of both the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines and the Department of the Interior, if the gentleman would care to have it. I think more of it, however, is on this drilling provision.

Mr. BORLAND. I think it would be well, if the gentleman will, to put that in the RECORD. In the Oklahoma gas fields, and in the southern Kansas fields, as the gentleman knows, persons have been anxious to find oil, because there is a market for the oil. They frequently find gas above the oil strata, and in many cases the gas has no immediate market unless they have money enough to pipe it to the town. It is used for nothing except the small portion used by the operator in drilling or for power on the ground. It is necessary to conserve this gas. It is worth something to people in the cities, where they have use for it.

It is worth nothing at the place of production, but if it could be conserved until a market for it could be established, then it would be very useful indeed to the wage earners and consumers in the cities. The same is also true as to the locations where gas is found, and it seems to me that instead of waiting to forfeit a man's lease, there should be some supervision exercised by the Secretary of the Interior in the nature of requirements for drilling and the methods of drilling, and so on, that would compel the conservation of that gas.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's suggestions are very timely, and that is one of the advantages of the leasing process. In the first place, the initial rights of the oil developer only attach on the making of a lease drawn by the Federal Government. If the land went to patent immediately the exact thing would happen that the gentleman complains of. It has happened a good many different times in my own State. Men are eager for the oil, which is very valuable, and they do not pay much attention, unless they are compelled to, to the gas, which is not so very valuable.

This section is written to bring about proper supervision and to prevent the condition of which the gentleman complains. In addition to that, over in section 30 we specifically provide language giving the Secretary extended authority to place these regulations in effect. The language used in section 11 is:

That the permittee, lessee, entryman, or patentee will, in conducting his explorations and mining operations, use all reasonable precautions to prevent waste of oil or gas developed in the land, or the entrance of water through wells drilled by him to the oil sands or oil-bearing strata, to the destruction or injury of the oil deposits. Violations of the provisions of this section shall constitute grounds for the forfeiture of the permit, lease, or patent, to be enforced through appropriate proceedings in courts of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. BORLAND. If the gentleman will pardon me at that point. I am not complaining of the section, I simply want to understand that it goes to the full extent expected. Reasonable precautions may be a matter of judgment in the mind of the patentee, but if there are regulations provided that he must comply with, that would be a different proposition. If you undertake to forfeit his lease, you must forfeit it for not complying with some regulations, and not on the question of taking reasonable precautions.

Mr. FERRIS. Hear what the Geological Survey has to say about the proposition. I read:

The language used in lines 20 to 23, of section 15, is considered sufficient in connection with section 31, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to prescribe the necessary rules and regulations to carry out the purposes of the act, to permit of the promulgation of rules which will prevent waste of resources, either open waste or by reason of water menace. It is considered far better to have such provisions generally stated, rather than to attempt to enumerate them in detail, because the rule of statutory construction that the inclusion of some is the exclusion others would undoubtedly be invoked to the detriment of the property interest of the United States.

I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that the same question that he has brought up arose in committee, and I thought we perhaps had better go on and say first just how the gas and oil should be handled; but the Bureau of Mines and the Geological Survey people, who are familiar with it, came to us and said to us that if we gave them the authority provided in section 30, and we used the language in this section 11, it would give them authority to do everything necessary in the interest and for the benefit of the Government. Here is what the Interior Department says:

The provisions for the exercise of all reasonable precautions to prevent waste and water troubles, in lines 20 to 23, seem to be fairly adequate, although the section would be strengthened if line 20 were changed to read, "use such reasonable precautions as shall be specified by the Secretary of the Interior to prevent waste of oil or."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. I understand the Secretary of the Interior says, "reasonable precautions, to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior." I understand you use that provision?

Mr. FERRIS. In the last paragraph of section 30 we provided generally and specifically and in every way to do all that we desired to do, so that it is not necessary at the end of every section to repeat such a provision. The matter has been resubmitted to the Secretary, I may say to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the Bureau of Mines is one of the most important bureaus in the Government, and is doing exceedingly good work, but all of its recommendations ought not to be taken too seriously. That bureau has probably made more discoveries in the last two years of old matters that were known before it was created than any other bureau of any Government ever did in the same length of time. Recently it reported in its annual report that it had discovered a new process for the production of gasoline which would reduce the price of gasoline, and which would certainly reduce the relative price of gasoline as compared with crude oil, and between the time that was written and the time it was printed and submitted to Congress the price of gasoline, in connection with this wonderful discovery, rose some 5 or 6 cents.

Mr. MADDEN. It is still going up.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of three minutes' time debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to defend the Bureau of Mines. As a matter of fact, I do not think the bureau requires any defense. I am sure the gentleman from Illinois himself is a friend of the bureau.

Mr. MANN. I certainly am.

Mr. MONDELL. And perhaps the bureau itself will not object to the little friendly fling he took at them. They have been pretty active in announcing discoveries, some of which some of us have thought we had heard of, in a way, some time ago. But it is true that the bureau, or a gentleman by the name of Rittman connected with that bureau, has discovered a new method under which they are producing a large additional amount of gasoline from the crude oil. There are, of course, other methods.

I happen to know something about the Rittman method by reason of the fact that an oil company of my State has recently entered into an agreement with the Bureau of Mines, under which they are to use the Rittman process, and they are now erecting quite a large refinery, I am told, to put the Rittman process to the test and to develop under it, and they expect to be able to produce a largely increased amount of gasoline from our crude oil.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Why do they have to enter into an agreement? Is not the process open to the world?

Mr. MONDELL. I understand that if they make any improvements on the process those improvements are not to be patented by them but left free to all who may desire to use them.

Mr. MANN. What control has the department over the process which it has discovered and given to the world?

Mr. MONDELL. The Rittman process is patented, as I understand, patented in the interest of the Government.

Mr. MANN. Patented for the use of anyone who may use it?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; upon agreement to certain conditions.

Mr. MANN. By whom has that money been collected?

Mr. MONDELL. My understanding is that that was not the intent. The intent was to have the process patented for the use of the people generally, and to allow anyone to use it who would use it for increased development. That is my understanding of it, and therefore those who use this process must make some sort of an arrangement under which the public shall get the benefit of all improvements which are made in the process.

Mr. MANN. I had supposed that that process was open to the world to use. If it is not, it ought to be; and if anybody has to make a private agreement with somebody in the Department of the Interior for the use of a patent which the Government has paid for producing, then we ought to know about it.

Mr. MONDELL. I think that is a matter of public interest. We have a bill before us covering many pages, under which a great many agreements will be made by the Secretary of the Interior as to matters and things, and I think it entirely proper that an agreement should be made in regard to those patents for the protection of the public. This is, however, only one feature of the good work of the Bureau of Mines.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time on this section has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 17. That all deposits of oil or gas and the unentered lands containing the same and classified as oil or gas lands, or proven to contain such deposits, except, however, those embraced in any prospecting permit during the life of the same, those patented or for which application for patent by the permittee is pending under the provisions hereof, may be leased by the Secretary of the Interior through competitive bidding under general regulations in areas not exceeding 640 acres and in tracts which shall not exceed in length two and one-half times their width, such leases to be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of such royalty as may be fixed in the lease, which shall be not less than one-tenth in amount or value of the production, which royalty, on demand of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be paid in oil or gas, and the payment in advance of a rental of not less than $1 per acre per annum thereafter during the continuance of the lease, the rental paid for any one year to be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for a period of 20 years, with the preferential right in the lessee to renew the same for successive periods of 10 years upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods: Provided further, That upon relinquishment or surrender to the United States, within six months from the date of this act, by any locator or his successors in interest of his or their claim to any unpatented oil or gas lands included in an order of withdrawal, upon which oil or gas had been discovered, was being produced, or upon which drilling operations were in actual progress January 1, 1914, and the claim to which land was initiated prior to July 3, 1910, the Secretary of the Interior may, within his discretion, lease, on such reasonable terms and conditions as he may prescribe, to such locator or his successors in interest the said lands so relinquished, not exceeding, however, the maximum area of 640 acres to any one person, association, or corporation, said leases to be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of a royalty of not less than one-eighth of the oil or gas extracted or produced from the leased premises or the proceeds thereof, each lease to be for a period of 20 years, with the preferential right in the lessee to renew the same for succeeding periods of 10 years, upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

With the following committee amendment:

Amend, on page 14, in line 18, by striking out the figures "17" and inserting the figures "12."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of the proviso on page 15, line 16, running over onto page 16 and down to and including line 12, be postponed until the end of the bill.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California objects.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] has just asked to pass over this proviso which relates to the California oil lands, and the gentleman from California [Mr. CHURCH] has objected. I do not know the reason for the request or the objection.

I wanted to make an inquiry concerning this provision. I believe this proviso is in the identical language that it passed the House last year. There has been a good deal of discussion on this subject. Legislation relating to it has been pending for a number of years. Different proposals have been made. Last year, when we inserted this provision in the bill, I thought it was entirely agreeable and satisfactory to these oil prospectors, or oil owners, or whatever they may be called, in California, Wyoming, and elsewhere. I may be mistaken in my recollection of it. I know I thought we were very liberal to them, more so than they were entitled to. My understanding is now that, having secured this much in prospect, without any possibility of taking this much away from them, they now want more, the old cry of "More, more!" Having secured a chance that they would have been glad to have received in the first instance, when it looks as though that was certain to go through, then they say they must have something else which will give them greater rights.

I want to say to the gentleman in charge of the bill that I think we have gone quite the full length in favor of these people, who have no legal rights, or if they have legal rights are unwilling to stand upon them—that we have gone quite as far as we ought to go, indeed a little further than we ought to go, in this provision in the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, a moment ago I asked unanimous consent that this proviso go over. The committee are entitled to know why I asked that. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], as usual, has pretty well stated the historical phase of the proposition. This provision appeared last year in two forms. First it was in the so-called Church bill, proposing permanent relief for the California oil development. Then it was added as an amendment to this bill on the floor, and passed the House and went over to the Senate. It later passed the Senate in an enlarged form; later got into conference and died. The oil men think we are not doing half enough for them. The California Representatives here on the committee and in the House think we are not doing half enough for them by this provision. They have earnestly urged, here and elsewhere, that Congress do more than this does. On the other hand, the Navy Department and the Department of Justice have been taking a hand in this matter. The Department of Justice has been carrying on some suits out there. The Navy Department has made some so-called naval petroleum reserves there. They are now debating in their minds whether, in giving the permission granted in the bill, we are not doing too much. I had some conversation over the phone with both those departments this morning, and they were anxious that we let this provision go over to the end of the bill, feeling that they wanted to wire to some field men they have out there to see if even this was not doing too much for them. I told the Navy Department this morning that I would ask that this proviso go over to the end of the bill, and that would give them a little time to find out whether or not this proviso as it stands was satisfactory to them. I personally can see no objection to it going over to the end of the bill, but objection was made.

Mr. MANN. Which department was that?

Mr. FERRIS. The Navy Department.

Mr. MANN. Last year the Navy Department did not wake up until this bill was disposed of, and this year they have been asleep ever since. Have they just now awakened again?

Mr. FERRIS. Let me state what they have done. The Navy Department, anxious to conserve what they think they should, called on the President to make some withdrawals of land called naval reserves.

Mr. MANN. I know about that.

Mr. FERRIS. And they feel that after the President has issued that order these reserves ought to be passed over to their jurisdiction. Of course, the House knows that the disposition of land has always been in the Interior Department, and, in my own judgment, ought to continue there, and it would be impracticable to allow two departments to dispose of land. I tried to explain that to them this morning.

My own notion is that the proviso as it is in the bill is the thing that ought to be done. I have no doubt that it will ultimately be found entirely satisfactory to all of the departments, but just at present they seem to want a little more time. Of course, they will have a chance at it in the Senate, and also in conference, so if there is any change needed later it can be done. This amendment bears the recommendation of the Interior Department this year. It also was recommended last year as an independent bill. However, they still want to investigate further, and they hope that the House will allow them to do it without agreeing to this provision. In other words, what we are doing is not half of what the oil men claim they are entitled to, and the two departments are of the opinion that we are doing too much, and they want to investigate further. The committee, in inserting the provision, is entirely with the Interior Department, and thinks that at least this much relief ought to be had. The committee feels that it has done its duty in doing this. I believe that the Government ought to do this, and I have not so far seen my way clear to do any more. With that statement the House can take any action it sees fit.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Oklahoma knows that a year ago a separate bill on this subject was not considered in the House for some time, because at that time the Navy Department wanted a little more time to investigate and talk it over. Now, I am quite in sympathy with the Navy Department on this subject, but it does seem to me that if they have any rights, as they have, they have had plenty of time to think it over.

Mr. FERRIS. I am inclined to think perhaps that is true, but they have some additional views on the subject, and in addition to that—I want the House to know all about this—of course in 1909, when the first withdrawal order was made, a lot of people were mining for oil on some of these lands and made a big strike in oil and large capital was invested.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. The same controversy was up last year, and the Public Lands Committee was anxious to do full justice to the oil men, and we invited the three departments to meet and get together and see if they could not agree on what was just and best. At that time all three departments apparently agreed to this proposition and it passed the House by unanimous consent as an amendment to this bill when it was up before. It went to the Senate and passed the Senate even in a more liberal form to the oil men. My own opinion is that if you adopt this provision, thereby causing the oil men to relinquish their claim to a patent, clean up this whole mess, and require them to begin to pay a fixed and determined royalty to the Government we will have done a wise thing. I think this will finally be the conclusion of the three departments, as it is now the opinion of the Interior Department.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the committee as to the extent of the oil lands to which this provision applies, the number of acres withdrawn, and the number of acres on which the Government is now contesting the right of the prospectors?

Mr. FERRIS. I can give the gentleman a pretty good idea. The oil fields where the most of this controversy arose are in California and Wyoming. They have struck an oil field in California, called the San Joaquin, which is about 300 miles long and from 6 to 10 miles wide. I think there are 5,000,000 acres withdrawn altogether, but not all involved in this. I think there are about 17,000 acres involved in this rich strike. They are clamoring for patents, and this amendment requires them as a condition precedent to relinquish all claims to a patent, and then they can come in and have a lease of 640 acres and pay one-eighth royalty on it.

Mr. STAFFORD. This does not include the lands in litigation which last June were held by Judge Bludsoe to have been appropriated unlawfully by the Southern Pacific Railroad, the estimated value of which was $250,000,000 or $300,000,000.

Mr. FERRIS. It gives the Secretary of the Interior the discretion to lease those lands to them when they are willing to relinquish their claims for patents.

Mr. STAFFORD. I did not know whether those lands involved in that suit would come under this provision.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; I think so. It is for the purpose of cleaning up all this trouble out there.

Mr. STAFFORD. Those lands are said to be worth $250,000,000 or $300,000,000.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not know about the value of them, but one receiver has impounded $1,200,000 of oil on one tract and has over a million dollars on deposit. This litigation is holding California back, and it is a proposition that requires the very best attention of the House. The two gentlemen from California sitting near me know more than I do about it, and perhaps the gentleman from Wyoming does, although for three or four years I have had this under observation in one form and another as it has come before the committee. The committee thinks that if you can have the oil operators now clamoring for patents come in under a lease and begin to pay the Government one-eighth royalty, it will be the best thing that can be done under the circumstances. It will be the thing the Government could do with the land if the controversy had never arisen. It does not sacrifice any interest of the Government. It really protects its interests. There is, I think, some different views among the departments, but this does not sacrifice anything to any of them. We can also hear them in the Senate and in conference on it if they desire to be heard.

Of course it is true, as above said, that the Interior Department in reporting on this bill makes reference to this proviso under discussion. They recommend it. They are for it. I present herewith the part of their report on this proviso:

The proviso to the section is remedial in its nature, designed to meet existing conditions in the oil fields. There are at present many developed oil wells upon the public domain held by those whose claims are invalid under existing law, for the reason that no discoveries were made prior to the date of the withdrawal of the lands from entry or because the original locators were "dummies." These persons have no legal rights, but their large expenditures and the ensuing development present an equitable situation which this proviso is designed to relieve by giving them the right to secure a lease to the deposits so developed, upon payment of a royalty of not less than one-eighth of the oil or gas.

Last year this same provision passed the House. It also had the indorsement of the Interior Department. I quote here their report of last year on this same matter as an independent bill:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 17, 1914.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FERRIS: I am in receipt of your request for report on H. R. 15661, a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to lease certain unpatented public lands on which oil or gas has been discovered. The measure is peculiarly applicable to conditions existing in the oil fields in the State of California, but may apply to a lesser extent to similar claims in the State of Wyoming and other portions of the public domain.

On July 3, 1910, there were promulgated various orders of withdrawal made by the President, under the authority of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., 847), withdrawing from location and entry areas of public land believed to contain valuable deposits of oil and gas, pending classification and the consideration by Congress of the advisability of enacting legislation better adapted to the production and disposition of these minerals than the present general mining laws.

Prior to the withdrawal and the act of Congress mentioned, many claims had been initiated or attempted to be initiated under the provisions of the general mining laws to lands within the areas subsequently withdrawn. With respect thereto Congress provided in section 2 of the act of June 25, 1910, supra—

"That the rights of any person who, at the date of any order of withdrawal heretofore or hereafter made, is a bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas bearing lands, and who at such date is in diligent prosecution of work leading to discovery of oil or gas, shall not be affected or impaired by such order so long as such occupant or claimant shall continue in diligent prosecution of said work: And provided further, That this act shall not be construed as a recognition, abridgment, or enlargement of any asserted rights or claims initiated upon any oil or gas bearing lands after any withdrawal of such lands made prior to the passage of this act."

The latter clause had reference to certain withdrawals theretofore made by the Secretary of the Interior.

In the case of H. H. Yard (38 L. D., 59) the department ruled that a placer location for 160 acres made by eight persons, and before discovery of minerals thereon transferred to a single individual or corporation, was invalid because not preceded by a discovery of mineral and could not, under the law, be perfected by the transferee upon a subsequent discovery. Many existing claims for deposits of oil and gas being for this reason invalid, Congress passed the remedial act of March 2, 1911 (36 Stat. 1015).

It now transpires that numerous locations upon lands containing oil and gas deposits were made by associations of individuals for and on behalf of corporations or other individuals and not in the interest of the locators, and covered a larger area than could have been embraced in single locations by their principals. Such locations have been held illegal by various decisions of the Department of the Interior and the courts. It appears, however, that many such locations have finally passed by transfer, lease, or contract into the hands of oil operators who in good faith and without actual notice of any defect in title have, at large expense, drilled and developed producing wells upon the tracts, and that the cancellation or denial of the claims under existing law will result in depriving these operators of their labor and expense. The condition is recognized and temporary relief proposed in H. R. 15469, recommended by this department and favorably reported by your committee, which bill proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to enter into temporary arrangements with the operators for the disposition of the oil or gas and the proceeds thereof pending final determination of title. However, as stated in my said report of April 10, 1914, H. R. 15469 will give temporary relief only and does not provide a method for disposition of the lands or the deposits after final adjudication of the cases if the claims of the applicants be finally denied. H. R. 15661 proposes to provide for this condition by authorizing the locators or their successors in interest in cases where oil or gas has been discovered, was being produced, or upon which drilling operations were in actual progress January 1, 1914, upon lands the claims to which was initiated prior to July 3, 1910, by authorizing the Secretary of the Interior, upon surrender to the United States by the claimant of his interest in the defective location to lease to him the lands so occupied, improved, and developed, not exceeding in any case 2,560 acres, upon payment by such lessee of a royalty of not exceeding one-eighth of the oil or gas extracted or produced. This measure will, in my opinion, not only afford relief to operators who, as stated, have in good faith made large expenditures in the development of oil or gas from such lands, but will operate to relieve the land department from a large amount of expense and work in investigating and adjudicating claims to such lands presented under the general mining laws.

It is in line with the general policy of the bill for the future leasing of oil, gas, and other minerals now before your committee and before the Senate, but because of its being designed to meet and cure an existing condition properly forms the subject of a separate and remedial measure.

I recommend the enactment of H. R. 15661.

Very truly, yours, FRANKLIN K. LANE.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask for 15 minutes to discuss this section and a number of the provisions.

Mr. FERRIS. Let us see if we can not get some agreement as to closing debate. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the end of 40 minutes all debate on the section and amendments thereto be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that debate on this section and all amendments thereto be limited to 40 minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. Fifteen minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Wyoming and 25 minutes by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Fifteen minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Wyoming and 25 minutes by the gentleman from Oklahoma. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have no intention of stirring up things here so that gentlemen will need to have considerable time in which to reply. In fact my remarks on this occasion will be with a view to reaching an understanding later with regard to some of these provisions. I first want to call the attention of the committee to certain provisions in this section which are identical with the provisions in the section relating to coal. I desire to have the attention of the chairman of the committee, because I think the committee ought to remedy this situation. You provide here for a lease under competitive bidding, but in lines 2 to 4, and down in line 10, you provide what the lessee shall pay, and make no reference to the bonus or additional royalty that might be paid under competitive bidding. You provide for competitive bidding, expecting a bonus or additional royalty, and later provide that the lesesee shall pay only the royalty fixed before the bidding and the price per acre assessed against the land. You would have some difficulty in collecting your bonuses, in my opinion, under that provision. Further, I want to call the attention of the committee to the period of the lease. You provide in the case of coal for an indeterminate lease. In this case you provide for a lease of 20 years and in the case of water power for a lease of 50 years. To one who did not understand the genesis of this legislation that might seem extraordinary, but the fellow who wrote the bills did not write them all at the same time, and he had different views at different times; and then, when they were all brought together, of course all these different views appeared in the bill. I am not charging any one occupying a seat on this floor with having done that.

The indeterminate lease is the best lease, in my opinion, for oil as well as coal, and I prepared an amendment to this section in harmony with the provision in the coal section, but I realize that the committee will not accept anything that may be offered, even though their judgment commend it, and therefore I shall not offer the amendment, knowing it would not be worth while to do so.

I want to talk a little while about this matter of relief. It is unfortunate in a way, very unfortunate, for the States that are interested in this legislation that there has been any question before the committee with regard to relief for the oil men, for that question has overshadowed the entire legislation in all of its provisions. The hearings, page after page, hundreds of pages of them, have had to do in the main with the hearings of oil men who desire some remedial legislation. The men who have appeared before the committee seeking remedial legislation have been interrogated as to whether they approved the provisions of the bill. Of course they did. There was not anything so extreme or extraordinary that could be written in the bill that they did not approve, providing they got what they wanted. Everyone familiar with the situation knows that is true, and it is most unfortunate that it is true. Otherwise many of the provisions of the bill that I have discussed at length would have been more thoroughly discussed before the committee than they have been. We have not had the support in many matters that we would have had had it not been for the great questions involved relative to the relief of the oil men. I am not criticizing anyone in that connection. I simply regret that the situation was as it was.

Now, as to the relief provision of this bill. You are really doing very little for the California and Wyoming oil men in this legislation in your provision for relief beginning on line 17. If you did not have that provision in the bill at all, the oil men might fare better, because under the discretion lodged in the Secretary of the Interior he could lease 640 acres to these people, and you do not allow him to lease any more in your bill. They might be better off under his discretion if he leased to them, taking into consideration their equities, and it is to be assumed that he would do that. They might be better off without this legislation if they secured a lease, because in that case the minimum royalty would be one-tenth, whereas here you fix it as one-eighth. So that without any criticism of the committee in connection with this particular matter, let us not be embarrassed by any suggestion made from the outside that we are doing too much, because as a matter of fact we are doing very little, assuming, of course, that the Secretary, exercising his discretion, would lease to them under the minimum terms of the bill the maximum acreage provided for under the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. If it were not for this provision of the bill, would it not be open to competitive bidding, and is not the Secretary required, in other words, to have competitive bidding?

Mr. MONDELL. That is true, assuming these operations were to come under the sections of the bill providing for competitive bidding, but that brings to my mind another thing. Let us look at that in another way. These men were in the nature of prospectors when they started. They started into a new field. Some of them expended $75,000—and I am speaking now of the California cases—in discovering oil on a single tract. Under the provisions of your bill, which I mildly criticized a short time ago, were they to do that in the future you would give them a patent to from a quarter section to a section of their land. What they did a few years ago was to develop what was then a comparatively undeveloped field.

If they were to do it in the future, under the bill, they would receive title to a quarter of the land contained in their prospecting permit. As to whether or not the committee has done all that it should do in relief of these cases I think I can speak without bias, because this provision in the bill, if fairly interpreted, would, I think, except for the matter of acreage, save the situation for the oil men in my State—the few who are affected by it—but you must take into consideration the general situation, and particularly the California situation. There is a serious question of interpretation involved in the provision contained in line 24, "The claim to which land was initiated," and so forth.

In some cases the whole matter will hinge on the determination of the Interior Department as to what constitutes the initiation of a claim. I am assuming the department will want to be fair, but the department has made some rather far-reaching decisions in times past as to what constituted an initiation of a claim. The courts have gone far in their decisions as to what constitutes an initiation of a claim or right. There has been some confusion between the initiation of a claim and the establishment of a right. Now, if the department shall not attempt to hold that the initiation of a claim and the establishment of a right are the same thing, and liberally construe the words "initiation of a claim," then most of the cases which are governed by those words will come through in good shape. The department should be liberal in their construction as to what constitutes an initiation of a claim. I heard a gentleman connected with one of the departments the other day express himself to the effect that they would hardly consider as an initiation of a claim a mere paper claim, a mere setting of a stake. Well, I hope that would not be the view of the department under this legislation, as that is about what often constitutes an initiation of a claim on oil land. The oil locator goes on the land and places his stakes, large or small, carefully or casually, as the case may be, at each corner of his claim or thereabouts. He may sink a 10-foot hole or he may not. He goes to the county clerk of the county and records his claim, pays $2.50, and that is about all that he can do that is worth while until he begins actual drilling operations. It sometimes requires months for men to get into a position to actually drill. These lands, many of them, are far distant from a railroad; they are out in a new country; it is difficult to get capital; it takes time to get machinery, and it may be months, it may be a year or more, after the man has gone through this simple performance of staking and recording his claim, before he can begin drilling. And if the department should attempt to hold that he must have done something in the way of drilling to initiate a claim, that he must have done something more than the oil man ordinarily does, then few will be safe under that particular provision of the bill.

Now, very briefly, I want to state what I think the Congress may very properly do in this relief legislation. I think the committee might very properly say that where a man was on the ground before the Taft withdrawals and in good faith had made some motion toward establishing his claim, and subsequently went on and developed oil, that man ought to have a patent. If we give him a patent, we will not be doing any more than it is proposed to do under the provisions of the bill to the man who in the future under the same circumstances, the withdrawal excepted, does the same thing. Such a man was there before there was any withdrawal, but the withdrawal bill only saved him in case he was actually drilling at the time of the passage of the withdrawal bill, and there might have been some very good reasons why he could not be drilling at that time, and therefore he was not saved by the provisions of the withdrawal bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. LENROOT. Upon what authority does the gentleman make that statement—that there must be actual drilling at the time?

Mr. MONDELL. He must have made discovery or be actually in possession—I do not remember the exact language—but actually in possession and doing work looking to the discovery and development of oil.

Mr. LENROOT. But not necessarily actual drilling.

Mr. MONDELL. That is practically what it comes to in many cases. The gentleman knows that the man if not drilling must be preparing to drill, or, having drilled, must have continued development operations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. May I have just one minute more, in order to finish that sentence?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California has control of the time.

Mr. RAKER. I yield two minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. I thank the gentleman from California. Now, the department is bound by the language of the withdrawal act, and there are many cases where men were not doing those things that clearly bring them within the withdrawal act, and yet who were acting in just as good faith as the man who was brought within the provisions of the withdrawal act. In such cases it seems to me there should be no question about the man being entitled to his patent. He would be entitled to his patent under the same conditions under your bill. Now, when he began, after the Taft withdrawal—and do not let us be carried away with the idea that those men generally went on there in an attitude of contemptuous defiance of the Taft withdrawal law—there were comparatively few people who believed the Taft withdrawal law had any force or effect—I do not believe it did—until the Supreme Court said otherwise. Where men went on after the Taft withdrawal and proceeded diligently to the discovery of oil and the development of the claim, they ought to have a lease without question and should not be limited to 640 acres, because in many such cases larger areas have been developed, are piped and pumped together, machinery has been installed, and everything arranged and going. It would not be in the public interest to compel such plants to divide up and operate as separate units, so long as the public gets oil at the same price. The public has no concern as to whether one man in such a case or one company has 640 acres or twice that amount. And so it seems to me in the one case patent should be issued without question, and in the other case an opportunity be given for a lease in such excess of the minimum fixed by the bill as may be necessary to provide for the development that has taken place, and the royalty in such case should be fixed by Congress and at a reasonable rate.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. I have 10 minutes, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. Ten minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Just a word, Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Wyoming. In the first place, this withdrawal order, which is the primary cause of all this condition, or the last paragraph of it, is in this language:

All locations and claims existing and valid on this date may proceed to entry in the usual manner after filing investigation and examination.

That, Mr. Chairman, meant, and has been so declared by the courts, that anyone upon these claims at the date of this withdrawal order, in compliance with the placer-mining laws, was not affected in any way by this withdrawal order, but could proceed to patent. And the Land Department has been allowing claims wherein they have complied with the placer-mining laws that were in existence at the date of the withdrawal of the order.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman further than to make this suggestion. The gentleman knows that the department has gone far in determining what constituted a compliance with the placer laws. In some cases the people who were in good faith are held not to be in compliance with them.

Mr. LENROOT. The Land Department in that respect has followed the ruling of the Supreme Court of California, and has taken as its guide the rule laid down by that court. And the United States district court for the southern district of California has adopted the same rule applied by the Land Department and the Supreme Court of California.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman reserves seven minutes.

Mr. NORTON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Now, under these terms of the proposed law one can secure a permit for two years to 2,560 acres, where there are no producing oil wells within 10 miles of the tract. What rights would the lessee have to the surface of the land? Would he have the right to graze that land and keep all other parties off of it? There does not seem to be any provision made for that.

Mr. RAKER. He has the control of the entire amount of the lease.

Mr. NORTON. Of the 2,560 acres?

Mr. RAKER. It is up to the Secretary of the Interior to so regulate it. He will be protected.

Mr. NORTON. It occurs to me that considerable abuse might arise as the bill is now framed.

Mr. RAKER. It is provided that he get full protection. If there is any land that he does not need for drilling and it is agricultural land, he is fully protected.

Mr. NORTON. Do you hold that entries for agricultural purposes might be made for the surface of the land during the time of the lease?

Mr. RAKER. I think so.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, if you will pardon me, there is some section here that provides that at the time of making the laws there can be some provision of that kind made.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HOUSTON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 7611. An act authorizing the Seaboard Air Line Railway Co., a corporation, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge or bridges and approaches thereto across what is known as "Back River," a part of the Savannah River, at a point between Jasper County, S. C., and Chatham County, Ga.

The message also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On January 14 1916:

H. R. 136. An act granting an extension of time to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in the State of Illinois; and

H. R. 4717. An act to authorize Butler County, Mo., to construct a bridge across Black River.

COAL AND OIL LEASES.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 18. That rights of way through the public lands of the United States are hereby granted for pipe-line purposes for the transportation of oil or natural gas to any applicant possessing the qualifications provided in section 1 of this act to the extent of the ground occupied by the said pipe line and 10 feet on each side of the same under such regulations as to survey, location, application, and use as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and upon the express condition that such pipe lines shall be constructed, operated, and maintained as common carriers: Provided, That no right of way shall hereafter be granted over the public lands for the transportation of oil or natural gas except under and subject to the provisions, limitations, and conditions of this section. That failure to comply with the provisions of this section or the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior shall be ground for forfeiture of the grant by a court of competent jurisdiction in an appropriate proceeding.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

On page 16, in line 13, strike out the figures "18" and insert "13" in lieu thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 17, in line 4, strike out the words:
"A court of competent jurisdiction."
And insert:
"The United States court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by adding after the words "United States," in line 5, the word "district."

Mr. RAKER. That ought to be.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by inserting, after the words "United States," in line 5, the word "district."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, the Clerk overlooked one amendment, in line 18.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was going to call attention to that. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 18, strike out the word "ten" and insert the word "twenty-five."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. When this section was under discussion in the last Congress I called attention to the fact that there was only one law on the statute books relating to the public land providing for oil pipe lines. That is a law passed from 15 to 16 years ago, if I recollect rightly, applying only to Colorado and Wyoming. It is a rather liberal, but not too liberal, a law. Under its provisions a wider area is allowed for the right of way than under this section, and opportunity is given for taking from the adjacent public land the material that may be required for the construction. It is a most excellent bill, and last year I attempted to amend this provision by saving from repeal that Wyoming and Colorado pipe-line law under which we have built some very good pipe lines in Wyoming. I think some have been built in Colorado. The provisions of this section are very illiberal. They are not sufficient to give fair opportunity for the building of large pipe lines such as are essential to a large oil business. I wish it were possible to amend it by at least saving the Colorado and Wyoming pipe-line law. That is evidently impossible from the present attitude of the committee, and I realize that no amendment would be favorably received liberalizing this section, therefore I offer none.

Mr. RAKER. On that last statement, the gentleman does not mean that, because the committee were very anxious when they considered this very matter to make it so wide there would be no question that the people would have opportunity to have enough land to build their pipe lines upon. Fifty feet would not have been objected to if they had thought it was necessary. Does not the gentleman believe that material—stone and dirt—can be procured from the adjoining land under the provisions of this section, as provided for in lines 19 and 20 and 21, under the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary?

Mr. MONDELL. Of course, if you have a good-natured Secretary, and he feels that he has the authority to give away Uncle Sam's property without express provision of law, then that might be done; but there is nothing in this law warranting the Secretary of the Interior in allowing any material to be taken even on a strip 50 feet wide, much less from the adjacent land.

I do not understand how any considerable pipe line can be built under this provision. I said that a year ago, but I have gotten sort of tired calling attention to these things, which seem to me to be so clear. Think of a provision of this kind from a committee upon which is a gentleman from a State producing more oil and needing more pipe lines than any other State in the Union! I am amazed that the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] should allow a provision of this kind to appear in the bill without at least an earnest protest, because I do not believe that under the provisions of this section you can build the oil pipe lines necessary to carry the oil in California or Wyoming. It is an awful handicap, and I know of no reason why there should be such a handicap. I know of no public interest to be served by such a handicap. Fifty feet is the maximum; no right to take any material for the pipe lines. Why, certainly it is not a satisfactory provision.

Mr. RAKER. I think that the argument that the gentleman is making is not well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 17, by inserting from line 7 to line 14, inclusive, the following:

"PHOSPHATES.

"SEC. 14. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to lease to any qualified applicant under this act any deposits of phosphates or phosphate rock belonging to the United States, under such regulations and upon such terms as are herein specified, through advertisement, competitive bidding, or such other methods as the Secretary of the Interior may by general regulations adopt."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk is not through reading the amendment. The amendment embraces two or three sections.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry is in order. What I wished to ascertain was whether this was to be treated as one amendment or considered by sections.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I think we had better read it section by section.

Mr. MANN. That is always done.

Mr. FERRIS. That will give everyone an opportunity.

Mr. MANN. It is in order to ask unanimous consent to consider it section by section.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment, being so long and it being an entire substitution for the phosphate material, be read section by section and so considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the amendment be read and considered section by section. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word, and is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Just for the purpose of making a facetious remark. This section says, "The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to lease to any qualified applicant under this act." Section 2 of the bill did read "any applicant qualified under this act," and the committee carefully changed it to read "any qualified applicant," and left out the words "under this act." They did it in line 12 and again at the bottom of the page in line 22, and they insert it again on page 3, and all through the bill elsewhere they were very careful to strike out the words, "under this act" on the ground that it was superfluous language, as it is; and, having taken the trouble by amendment to strike out "under this act" where it was superfluous language, why do they take the trouble, while writing a new amendment, to insert it?

Mr. FERRIS. It is undoubtedly an error of omission. We will gladly take it out now, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Of course I know how it occurs. It is not the fault of the committee.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, I move that on page 17, line 9, the three words "under this act" be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the committee amendment by striking out the words "under this act," in line 9.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 17, insert committee amendment beginning with line 15 and ending with line 23, as follows:

"SEC. 15. That each lease shall be for not to exceed 2,560 acres of land, to be described by the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys, or, if unsurveyed, to be surveyed at the expense of the lessee in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing the survey of placer mining claims: Provided, That the land embraced in any one lease shall be in compact form, the length of which shall not exceed two and one-half times its width."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to an oversight. It is very evident that the astute bureau chiefs were not wide-awake to their opportunities when this phosphate bill was drawn in the bureau; otherwise there would have been the same provision here that we find in the coal bill, providing that they shall divide the land into leasing blocks and lease those blocks. Of course, it is true that the opportunity presented in leasing phosphate is not so great as in leasing coal, because there are 50,000,000 acres of withdrawn coal land and 19,000,000 acres of classified coal land and less than 5,000,000 acres, so far, of classified phosphate land; but there would be quite a lot for the department to do in dividing up into leasing blocks even 5,000,000 acres of phosphate land. They have overlooked that opportunity. [Laughter.]

Now, seriously, this is the sort of a provision that we should have had under the coal section, under which land could be leased, leaving it to the individual to go out and prospect this land and find where the mineral is and determine what land he can economically mine, and then apply for a lease.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman refers to the provision in section 3, line 15, and other places where it speaks about marking the land or dividing it into blocks or tracts of 40 acres each. The idea was taken up by the committee, and I suggested that the word "blocks" ought to be taken out, leaving it "tracts," 40-acre tracts being well known by the survey. The suggestion was made, and after I heard it I thought it was wise. The coal lies in peculiar shape, the territory being very heavy and deep in places, and the Secretary might desire to reduce the size of tracts from 40 acres each and let them be in various blocks, not calling them 40-acre tracts. It would do no harm, and in other words would be practically carrying out the real intention of the provision of the survey of the public land which is provided for in this bill.

Mr. MANN. I will ask both gentlemen what is the distinction between a block of 40 acres and a tract of 40 acres?

Mr. MONDELL. I pass that up to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. If I may answer the gentleman, I will say that there is none. They are both intended to mean the same thing. The only difference is that in the public domain we know what a 40-acre tract is. When put in the form of a block in this case it would be a 40-acre tract just the same.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am afraid the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] entirely missed the purpose of the provisions in the coal-leasing section to which I have referred. Here are leasing provisions that contain no reference to the dividing up of the lands into leasing blocks. There is no necessity for anything of that sort. It is not necessary for the Government to send out a great force of men to prospect and develop, and spend a large amount of money for the purpose of deciding how big a tract should be included here and how small a tract there in a mining lease. Not in one case out of a hundred would they ever get it in a way that would be satisfactory to anyone who wanted to lease. This provision is in proper form. It provides for the leasing of the lands, and leaves it to the lessee to go out upon the public domain where these lands are situated, do his prospecting, find how and where the veins lie, the places where they can be successfully attacked, locate the place for storage tracks, survey out his land in compact form, and then ask for a lease. Of course, the Secretary still has the discretion to cut down the area and to change its form, to make it compact, but the prospector takes the initiative. He does the work, he spends the money, and of course he finally comes to a conclusion that is really satisfactory to himself.

But in the coal sections you are proposing to send wandering bands of prospectors, educated down here in the mines of Washington, I suppose, out to my State to prospect and develop, and determine just where coming lessees may want to locate a coal mine or where they ought to locate it. Well, after some of these fine-haired young men have had the experience I had as a youth in trying to find coal veins where they were hidden, and in trying to find where they could be successfully opened and mined, they may not be so happy over that provision. We may get our revenge in that way.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman is not objecting to this section because it makes the proper disposition to get a survey?

Mr. MONDELL. No; I am calling the attention of the committee to the fact that when the man wrote this section he was in his right mind, but he was overlooking the opportunity of the bureau. When he wrote the other section, he was thinking about what the bureau might want to do in the matter of wandering back and forth over the public domain at public expense, trying to do something that the lessee alone is competent to do and prefers to do or pay for doing, rather than have the Government attempt to do it for him in an unsatisfactory way.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. A little while ago my colleague [Mr. MANN] made some statement in reference to the Bureau of Mines. My colleague [Mr. MANN] seems to find some fault with the Bureau of Mines. I do not know why, but I judge for reasons satisfactory to himself. Now, the question came up as to what pay, if any, Dr. Rittman received from this discovery of the extraction of gasoline and benzol and totuol from crude oil. I want to say that Dr. Rittman does not receive one cent nor does the Government receive one cent from it.

Mr. MANN. There was no suggestion made that he did. Nobody dreamt that he did.

Mr. FOSTER. The matter was talked of, and it might be in doubt as to whether that was the case or not. That is the reason I mentioned it. I did not say my colleague said Dr. Rittman had received anything, but in the colloquy between the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and my distinguished colleague [Mr. MANN] it might be left as a possible inference that there was some doubt whether Dr. Rittman did not get something out of this patent or that it went to the Government. As I say, there is absolutely nothing in that, because Dr. Rittman in patenting this process did so in the interest of the Government. But the Government has already given to half a dozen firms the right to manufacture under this process, with the understanding that whatever improvements may be made in this process the Government shall have the right to give them to any other firm and that the rights shall be free. Now, that is all there is about that. I might say that the Government patented it so that it might give to any responsible firm that desires it, if it is really going into the manufacturing business, a chance to use it.

Mr. MANN. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Can any responsible firm use it unless the Director of the Bureau of Mines permits them?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. MANN. Does my colleague think that is right?

Mr. FOSTER. There has never been a refusal on the part of the Government to permit them to do that.

Mr. MANN. I do not know about that. I presume my colleague may not know.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, I do not know all that goes on in the Bureau of Mines, and I do not pretend to speak in that way; but I do believe it when they tell me they have never refused the use of this formula to any firm that came to them and said that they wanted to engage in the extraction of gasoline or these other products.

Mr. MANN. The truth is that they have given permits to less than half a dozen concerns.

Mr. FOSTER. About a half dozen.

Mr. MANN. Under an agreement that is longer than your arm, which every concern has hesitated to enter into; and notwithstanding this wonderful improvement which is going to reduce the cost of gasoline, there has been up to date practically no gasoline made under it.

Mr. FOSTER. That may be true up to this time.

Mr. MANN. I do not say that it is not a good thing, but I think it would look better, and at least be more modest, if the Bureau of Mines would tell about something which it had really accomplished instead of always thundering in the index and telling about something that it has accomplished when, as a matter of fact, it has not yet begun.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken about that. The process I have no doubt will be a success.

Mr. MANN. I am not mistaken, because I read their report, and I can point out many places in their report this year where that is all that there is to it.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman has often criticized the Bureau of Mines.

Mr. MANN. Let me assure my colleague that I have missed a thousand opportunities to criticize the bureau when it ought to have been criticized. [Laughter.] And I have taken many opportunities of complimenting the bureau when it did something.

Mr. FOSTER. I think in criticizing it in this case the distinguished gentleman from Illinois is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has just got his information from the Bureau of Mines now.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; because I was not sure as to some details. I thought I was right, but wanted to be sure.

Mr. MANN. There are not many people who can hypnotize my colleague from Illinois. He is usually very cool, but the Director of the Bureau of Mines has hypnotized him, and he is really not responsible for what he says on the subject here. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSTER. Let me say this: The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], always alert, I might say is usually right, but sometimes mistaken, and in this case I think so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is this for mutual admiration?

Mr. FOSTER. No, it is not; but I am his friend.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I can say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON] that there is a mutual admiration society between my colleague and myself. There is on my side, anyway.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I can say that I have a great admiration for my colleague from Illinois, and I did not rise to criticize him. I do believe that he was a little severe in his criticism of the Bureau of Mines. Let me say this also to the committee, that the Bureau of Mines has adopted a course which has not always been adopted by all other departments of the Government, and that is that no discovery is ever made, so far as the Bureau of Mines is concerned, where the employee is permitted to take out a patent for it in his own interest. It has always been given to the Government, given to anyone who wants to use it. The employees, too, are always loyal to the bureau in all its work in this regard. That can not be always said of every other department of the Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. In a moment. An employee of the Bureau of Mines, I think, patented a safety device, a breathing apparatus, with which one could go into mines where he could not go without using such an apparatus. His device reduced the weight of the apparatus one-half. These machines had all been formerly imported from foreign countries. That is another illustration of what the bureau is doing. They do not permit an employee to take out a patent, and he reaps no benefit himself. That is done in all those cases.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain to the committee how this bureau places that restriction upon the individual right of an employee from taking out a patent for his own invention?

Mr. FOSTER. If they make that rule, the employee lives up to it. If he does not, they would expect him to get out of the service.

Mr. STAFFORD. I did not know whether it was a condition of employment or not. Of course an employee has a right to patent his own invention, and, of course, if he would not observe the rule he could take out the patent and leave the service.

Mr. MANN. There is quite a question as to whether he has a right to take it out if he does it at Government expense.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Supreme Court has held that he has the right.

Mr. FOSTER. Dr. Rittman immediately when he made this discovery, I understand, was offered a large salary to go with a private concern with this discovery, but being loyal to the Government he preferred to stay with the bureau, and he remained there. He gave his valuable discovery to the people of the United States for their use without charge and without the Government reaping any benefit from it.

Now, I say this in justice to the Bureau of Mines because I believe it is fair that I should say it. The Bureau of Mines is doing good work. I think it is doing splendid work in all its undertakings. As to oil and gas, what they have been able to do in Oklahoma has been worth thousands of dollars. And so it has been in many States.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. I will.

Mr. FERRIS. I want to supplement the gentleman's statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I repeat that I want to supplement what the gentleman from Illinois has said. I have not consumed a great amount of time in the defense of anybody or eulogizing anybody, and do not intend to. I want to supplement what the gentleman has said by saying something about what the Bureau of Mines has done in our State. I visited a month ago, just before Congress convened, the largest oil field in the country, where the oil sand is 300 feet deep. It is a big boom oil town and a large field. They told me that they had relied largely on the geological survey of the Bureau of Mines and getting great benefit constantly from that source. I thought that was a practical example of one instance where one bureau of the Government was doing some good. I got this information from the oil men and the drillers, and they said it was passing strange and remarkable how often they hit it. I had the idea, as a good many Members have, that a good many of these investigations and bulletins were paper propaganda without much substance, but, as a matter of fact, their prophecies and field notes and notations were as a rule on where to go and where to bore for oil had been wonderfully correct.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, anyone acquainted with an oil field must know something about the great waste that takes place in the way of oil and gas. The gas is usually turned loose and permitted to burn day and night. I know it has been so in the country I came from, and if a discovery can be made whereby that gas can be preserved for the use of the people in the way of fuel, it is of great benefit to save it. I think the Bureau of Mines went into the oil fields of Oklahoma and demonstrated how they could wall off the gas, leave it in the ground until such time as they should need it for fuel and lighting purposes. I think that is worth a great deal to the people of that southwestern country.

These are a few of the things the Bureau of Mines has accomplished.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that the methods of casing off gas has been in use a great many years. I presume the system adopted by the Bureau of Mines is an improved system, but still we have been casing off gas from oil wells for many years.

Mr. FOSTER. You have done that with a casing that you put down the oil well. That is not what I mean; I mean walling off the gas by cement and mud.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, that was done years ago.

Mr. FOSTER. That method has been worth a great deal to the people of the southwestern country in showing them how it can be done.

Mr. ESCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. ESCH. Owing to the war potash has been barred from export from Germany. I understood that the Bureau of Mines was seeking to develop a potash field in California, and I think they said that there was a small plant. Has the gentleman any opinion or information about the success of that experiment?

Mr. FOSTER. I can not give the gentleman any information in regard to that.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I can give some information in regard to the experiment, although it was not conducted by the Bureau of Mines. One of these days I may say something about the Bureau of Mines, because I have been collecting some interesting information concerning that bureau and its activities. I will simply let my colleague know, because it is his duty as chairman of the Committee on Mines to defend whatever they do, whether it be bad or indifferent. I know he would not like to defend anything bad or indifferent.

Mr. FOSTER. No; I could not do that.

Mr. MANN. I am not so sure of that; the gentleman could do it and could do it well, because he has just demonstrated that. [Laughter.]

When I came to Washington this fall I read in one of the daily newspapers a statement coming from one of the experts, I think in the Department of Commerce, telling how the Government by its investigations had found a way of making potash commercially of kelp on the Pacific coast. Just what the Department of Commerce or its expert had to do with that I do not know, although they had rushed in where angels fear to tread and told how it was being done. The experiment had been conducted by the Department of Agriculture, so it was neither in the Interior Department nor in the Department of Commerce; but the expert said, "Now we are free from Germany; now we are able to produce potash on a commercial scale out on the Pacific coast, and we are doing it."

While out there last spring I visited the commercial plant at San Diego—about as big as a dog house, not much larger—and it never had been operated and has not been yet. But this expert told us how we had become commercially independent, and that is like a good deal of the stuff we are fed on at times. And let me say it is not because it is a Democratic administration, because it was just the same when it was a Republican administration. [Laughter and applause.]

Amend by inserting committee amendment, beginning page 17, line 24, and ending page 18, line 25, as follows:

"SEC. 16. That for the privilege of mining or extracting the phosphates or phosphate rock covered by the lease the lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as may be specified in the lease, which shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior in advance of offering the same, which shall be not less than 2 per cent of the gross value of the output of phosphates or phosphate rock at the mine, due and payable at the end of each month succeeding that of the extraction of the phosphates or phosphate rock from the mine, and an annual rental payable at the date of such lease and annually thereafter on the area covered by such lease at such rate as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior prior to offering the lease, which shall be not less than 25 cents per acre for the first year thereafter, 50 cents per acre for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively, and $1 per acre for each and every year thereafter during the continuance of the lease, except that such rental for any year shall be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for indeterminate periods upon condition of a minimum annual production, except when operation shall be interrupted by strikes, the elements, or casualties not attributable to the lessee, and upon the further condition that at the end of each 20-year period succeeding the date of the lease such readjustment of terms and conditions may be made as the Secretary of the Interior shall determine unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting committee amendment, beginning page 19, line 1, and ending page 19, line 8, as follows:

"SEC. 17. That any qualified applicant to whom the Secretary of the Interior may grant a lease to develop and extract phosphates, or phosphate rock, under the provisions of this act shall have the right to use so much of the surface of unappropriated and unentered lands, not exceeding 40 acres, as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior to be necessary for the proper prospecting for or development, extraction, treatment, and removal of such mineral deposits."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

POTASSIUM OR SODIUM.

SEC. 19. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant to any applicant qualified under this act a prospecting permit which shall give the exclusive right to prospect for chlorides, sulphates, carbonates, borates or nitrates of potassium or sodium, or associated similar salts on public lands belonging to the United States for a period of not exceeding two years: Provided, That the area to be included in such permit shall not exceed 2,560 acres of land in reasonably compact form.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

In line 11, page 19, amend by striking out the figures "19" and inserting the figures "18."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Amend, in line 12, by striking out the words "and directed."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Amend, in line 13, by inserting, after the word "any," the word "qaulified."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Amend, in line 14, by striking out the words "qualified under this act."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Amend, in line 17, by striking out the word "public."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, just what is the object in striking out the word "public" here?

Mr. FERRIS. Well, there was some question whether public land took in reserved land. The gentleman from Illinois knows that in one form or other there have been a lot of reserves—bird, and different kinds of reserves, by Executive order under the Pickett Act, and we made inquiry to know if public land meant land which was subject to entry or not. Did it mean all lands belonging to the Government? And there seemed to be some question, and some of the committee and some of the department were of the opinion that if we said public lands it would only refer to the 330,000,000 acres of land not yet subject to entry, and we want to include a lot of these bird reserves and forest reserves and other reserves.

Mr. MANN. Does it include a post-office building?

Mr. FERRIS. No; we have some exceptions back here.

Mr. MANN. Where are those?

Mr. FERRIS. Back in the first section.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, I know——

Mr. FERRIS. We omit national parks, naval reservations—and I will say to the gentleman that there is not a section here that directs the Secretary to make leases.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is involving it. If you strike out "on public lands belonging to the United States" entirely, then you leave it as it is provided for in section 1, where you provide what lands may be investigated; but you change that in this section by saying on "lands belonging to the United States"; and you provide in section 1 "that deposits of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium," which includes what is in here, shall be subject to disposal in the manner provided in the act, and then you make certain exceptions. Now you change it entirely in this section.

Mr. FERRIS. Does not the gentleman think, even granting what he says is a fact, that under lines 11, 12, and 13, which authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue regulations and to promulgate them, we would hardly expect or assume the Secretary would make a lease of that sort?

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not know. The Secretary is to make rules and regulations. We supposedly give the right to go wherever we let them go.

Mr. FERRIS. But there is nothing here that is mandatory on the part of the Secretary, that he is to lease it.

Mr. MANN. Practically it is mandatory because it is not a matter of favoritism, and can not be a matter of favoritism.

I do not see why the gentleman would not be perfectly safe in striking out the language, "on public lands belonging to the United States."

Mr. FERRIS. Then what shape would we be in?

Mr. MANN. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized then to grant prospecting permits giving the exclusive right to prospect for chlorides, sulphates, carbonates, borates, or nitrates of potassium or sodium, or associated similar salts; and he is given that right under the terms of this bill. I do not think we ought to give a right to somebody to demand of the Secretary of the Interior a permit to go and occupy a piece of land that the Government itself wants to occupy at the time.

Mr. FERRIS. Neither do I.

Mr. MANN. It is not necessary to use that language to cover everything you want in the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Then let it go out.

Mr. MANN. I think it ought to go out.

Mr. FERRIS. What we have tried to do—I will say we got hung up on the proposition of public lands, that public lands only mean unentered lands——

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. FERRIS. The committee struck it out because, of course, if there is any sodium or phosphates or potassium on these bird or other reserves we want to get it. All of these reserves should be included and we did this in an abundance of safety.

Mr. MANN. If we have those anywhere, we want to get it at any place. That is true, as a matter of fact.

Mr. FERRIS. There was a little controversy as to what "public lands" meant. I hope the gentleman's amendment will be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will state his amendment to the Clerk.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in lines 17 and 18, the words "on public lands belonging to the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 19, by striking out, in lines 17 and 18, the words "on public lands belonging to the United States."

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, a request for information. Now may I have the matter read as it would appear as amended?

Mr. MANN. Read the section as it would be as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the section as it would read as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant to any qualified applicant a prospecting permit which shall give the exclusive right to prospect for chlorides, sulphates, carbonates, borates, or nitrates of potassium or sodium, or associated similar salts, for a period of not exceeding two years.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries.

COAL AND OIL LEASES.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 20. That upon showing to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that valuable deposits of one of the substances enumerated in section 18 hereof have been discovered by the permittee within the area covered by his permit, the permittee shall be entitled to a patent for 640 acres of the land embraced in the prospecting permit, to be taken and described by legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys, or, if the land be not surveyed, by survey executed at the cost of the permittee in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. All other lands described and embraced in such a prospecting permit, from and after the exercise of the right to patent accorded to the discoverer, and all other lands known to contain such valuable deposits as are enumerated in section 18 hereof and not covered by permits or leases, may be leased by the Secretary of the Interior, through advertisement, competitive bidding, or such other methods as he may by general regulations adopt and in such areas as he shall fix, not exceeding 2,560 acres, all leases to be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of such royalty as may be specified in the lease and which shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior in advance of offering the same and which shall not be less than 2 per cent on the gross value of the output at the point of shipment, and the payment in advance of a rental, which shall not be less than 25 cents per acre for the first year thereafter, not less than 50 cents per acre for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively, and not less than $1 per acre for each and every year thereafter during the continuance of the lease, except that such rental for any year shall be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for indeterminate periods upon condition that at the end of each 20-year period succeeding the date of any lease such readjustment of terms and conditions may be made as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 21. That in addition to areas of mineral land to be included in prospecting permits or leases the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may grant to a permittee or lessee under this act the exclusive right to use, during the life of the permit or lease, a tract of unoccupied nonmineral public land, not exceeding 20 acres in area, for camp sites, refining works, and other purposes connected with and necessary to the proper development and use of the deposits covered by the permit or lease.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Line 10, strike out the figures "21" and insert "20."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Line 13, strike out the word "exclusive."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Lines 14 and 15, strike out the words "nonmineral public."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the committee amended section 18 on the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. In order to make the bill harmonious, it seems to me, there should be a change here.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. This section relates to land other than is necessarily covered by section 1. It may be nonmineral.

Mr. MONDELL. That is true; but it seems to me that in using your language, "belonging to the United States," in this case there is even greater danger than there would be in other cases.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Wyoming will permit, we are not to that amendment yet. It will be the next amendment reported. We are on the one just preceding that.

Mr. MONDELL. We are on the amendment including the words "nonmineral public."

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The "nonmineral public" there is involved in the question I have raised. There is a little difference; but if there was reason for that change in the other section, there is more reason here, because no one would apply for a lease on lands for the purpose of extracting these minerals unless they contained the minerals, or they believed they did, whereas one might apply for any sort of land for this purpose. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] suggested a post-office site. A post-office site might be the very tract one might desire.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield; yes.

Mr. NORTON. The provision in paragraph 1 provides for the distribution of lands containing deposits of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium. Now, this paragraph provides for the disposition of 20 acres of land to the permittee or lessee which does not contain mineral.

Mr. MONDELL. Not necessarily contain mineral. All the more reason, it seems to me, why, if there is any danger, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, you should not include the all-embracing term "belonging to the United States." This would seem to be a case where the term to use is "public lands."

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will notice, however, that a lease is made in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior and is for unoccupied land.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, all the leases are in the discretion of the Secretary.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I do not think so.

Mr. MONDELL. Absolutely.

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not think so.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman can not find a place in that bill where there is any right to lease except as the Secretary may grant it.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, that is true; but where we use the term that a department head may do a certain thing in his discretion, that means in his discretion. Where we authorize him to do it, that means he is required to do it when the conditions are presented.

Mr. MONDELL. I am not so sure as to that.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee concerning a matter that occurs to me in connection with this paragraph.

This paragraph provides for the leasing of a tract of unoccupied land, leasing the surface right, for use by the permittee or the lessee. Now, is there anything in this bill which would prevent anyone from going on the land covered by a permit and using the surface right for grazing purposes or agricultural purposes, or is there anything in this bill which would prevent one desiring to secure title to the surface rights of lands included under the lease from going on and securing the surface right for agricultural purposes?

Mr. FERRIS. I am not just sure that this section has that in contemplation. This is a section authorizing the leasing of some additional areas for camp sites. This is what the department says in justification of it:

> There will be numerous instances, particularly in the case of phosphates, potassium, and sodium deposits where the land actually occupied by the minerals will be so rough and mountainous or swampy that it will not supply a proper site for the reduction or refining works or for camp ground for the miners, and it was, therefore, deemed necessary that the Secretary should have the discretion to grant the lessees a tract of vacant nonmineral land suitable for those purposes. This is in line with the general mining law which, in addition to allowing a patent for the lands actually containing mineral, permits the miner to obtain a mill site for not exceeding one-fourth the area of a lode claim upon which to put reduction works or other structures used in connection with his mining or milling operations.

Now, these minerals—potassium and sodium—are found in the desert. There are lakes of them—as a rule, sunken lands—where salt and sodium and potassium are found, and the department says the ground is sometimes so marshy and wet that it is not suitable for the erection of camp houses and is not suitable for camp sites.

Now, that may not quite answer what the gentleman asked, but I think it applies partially to it.

Mr. NORTON. This paragraph provides for the leasing of areas of coal or gas as well as potassium. This has a general application, has it?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. Now, here is a question which I would like to have the gentleman reply to. Make it a hypothetical case: In case I should seek a permit for prospecting for oil on 2,560 acres I would secure that permit for two years, or a permit is granted to me for two years to prospect for gas; could I use that 2,560 acres during that two years for grazing purposes or agricultural purposes? Could I keep everyone else off who might desire to secure a surface right for agricultural or grazing purposes?

Mr. FERRIS. Of course, if you leased both the surface of the land and the deposits you could, but if you will turn back to the paragraph you will see that the leasing of deposits is provided for in one place, and elsewhere we provide for the leasing of the surface.

Mr. NORTON. You say you do provide for that in the bill?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. On page 23, if the gentleman will allow me, old section 25, new section 24, it is all taken care of, I think.

The Chairman. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, line 15, after the word "land." insert the words "belonging to the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 22. That the Secretary of the Interior shall reserve the authority and shall insert in any preliminary permit issued under section 18 hereof appropriate provisions for its cancellation by him upon failure by the permittee or licensee to exercise due diligence in the prosecution of the prospecting work in accordance with the terms and conditions stated in the permit.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, lines 20 and 21, insert the words "GENERAL PROVISIONS APPLICABLE TO COAL, PHOSPHATE, OIL, GAS, POTASSIUM, OR SODIUM LEASES."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 22, strike out the figures "22" and insert the figures "21."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 23, insert after the word "reserve" the words "and may exercise."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 24, strike out the word "preliminary" and insert the word "prospecting."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lines 24 and 25, strike out the words "section 18 hereof" and insert the words "the provisions of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment by the insertion of a new section.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman wait until I offer an amendment?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I certainly will.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] if that is an amendment in lieu of the committee amendment now pending?

Mr. LENROOT. It is to strike out a portion of the bill, including an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, line 23, after the word "authority," strike out "and shall insert in any prospecting" and insert in lieu thereof "to cancel any prospecting permit and shall insert in every such."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, the only purpose of this amendment is to make the language grammatical, which it is not now. It accomplishes identically the same purpose that was intended by the language heretofore used.

Mr. FERRIS. I have no objection to that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, in order to harmonize with the amendment, I move that, after the word "him," in line 1, page 22, a comma be inserted, so that the condition will relate back to the authority.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, line 1, after the word "him," insert a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey:

"After section 21, on page 22, at line 4, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 22. That every lease or patent of coal, oil and gas, phosphates, potassium, or sodium provided for in this act shall be on the condition and shall provide that the business shall be so carried on that all profits on the original cost of the plant in excess of cumulative annual profits at a rate or per cent of such cost to be fixed in such lease or patent and not to exceed an annual cumulative profit of 25 per cent of such cost shall be annually distributed by the holder of such lease or patent among the persons who purchase from him according to the amount paid him by such purchasers in the year; and to this end every such lease and patent shall be on condition and every such lease or patent shall provide that detailed accounts shall be kept of construction and operation in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and annual statements thereof filed on such day as he may order, so that the original cost and the totals of every branch of the business may be ascertained at any time: Provided, however, That profits may be invested in permanent improvements and may then be paid over to the person entitled thereto by scrip or certificates of such investment, on which local legal interest shall accrue and be paid annually until they shall be made part of a funded debt or preferred stock at not over the said legal interest. And every such lease or patent shall provide that expenses for salaries, offices, and other headquarter expenses and commissions shall be reasonable and subject to approval by the Secretary of the Interior, and shall be limited annually to not over one-quarter of the money spent for material and labor in construction and operation. And that prices or rates for the articles mentioned in this act shall be equal in each locality according to quantity and cost, and shall be fairly apportioned as to different localities."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take the time of the committee to give any more argument on this subject than I gave the other day. It is sufficient to point out that whenever Government grants are made which are either franchises or grants of property that ought to be conserved like franchises for the benefit of the public, some proper limitation ought to be made upon the profits to be derived by the holder, so that all of the benefits shall not go to the holder and leave none to the public. The holder should receive a liberal profit, and this amendment proposes 25 per cent on his original investment every year as a limit. In order that the profits may be fairly ascertained it is also provided that exorbitant expenses for headquarters and for other things outside of the real work shall not be incurred.

This is not a new thing, except in this particular use of the principle. It is the principle of the cooperative store and of the mutual life insurance company. It is a principle that sooner or later will be applied to great public grants of this sort.

As I have said, I will not take the time of the House, because I hardly expect that without perfection by a committee of this House having the matter in charge any such great change as this is likely to be adopted in the Committee of the Whole; but I have felt that on every bill involving a grant of public property for private use for the benefit of the public this principle ought to be presented by me in the form of an amendment, so that it may receive the mature consideration of the members of the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I feel an interest in the proposition presented by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER]. Mr. Blackstone tells us that a corporation has no right to exist except for the public good, and that every corporation is an arm of the Government. We have seen this Government extend its arms out into the hands of greed, and then we have seen those arms turn back and cudgel humanity to death, and take the proceeds of our toil and walk off with millions. So far as I am concerned, I do not propose while I am here to turn loose any corporation or lease that extends God's blessings into the hands of a lot of fellows, then pull the bridles off and say "Go it." I want to keep the bridles on all the way through. Men with power are prone to use it for their own private gain. Almighty God tells us that where a man's treasure is, there shall his heart be also. So you have got to keep the bridles on people who have great power. Otherwise they will run away with suffering humanity. I just want to stack up by the side of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BORLAND). The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

GENERAL PROVISIONS APPLICABLE TO COAL, PHOSPHATE, OIL, GAS, POTASSIUM, OR SODIUM LEASES.

SEC. 23. That no person, association, or corporation, except as herein provided, shall take or hold more than one lease of each of the classes of deposits herein named and described during the life of such lease; no corporation shall hold any interest as a stockholder of another corporation in more than one such lease; and no person shall take or hold any interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions hereof which, together with the area embraced in any direct holding of a lease under this act, or which, together with any other interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions hereof, exceeds in the aggregate an amount equivalent to the maximum number of acres allowed to any one lessee under this act; and the interests held in violation of this provision shall be forfeited to the United States by appropriate proceedings instituted by the Attorney General for that purpose in any court of competent jurisdiction, except that any such ownership or interest hereby forbidden which may be acquired by descent, will, judgment, or decree may be held for two years and not longer after its acquisition.

With the following committee amendments:

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 22, line 7, strike out "23" and insert "22."

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 22, line 25, strike out the words at the end of the line, and at the beginning of line 1, page 23, "any court of competent jurisdiction," and insert "the United States court for the district in which the property or some part thereof is located."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the words "United States," in line 1, page 23, the word "district."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by inserting after the words "United States," in line 1, page 23, the word "district."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This section limits individuals and corporations to a single lease of oil, coal, gas, phosphates, or sodium land, and attempts to prevent corporations and individuals from holding an interest in more than one lease. The provision is rather long and involved, and I presume is entirely intelligible if one takes time to exame it carefully.

Yesterday I called attention to the fact that there would probably be a good deal of difficulty in granting leases to railway companies over the question as to whether any stockholder in a railroad company could have an interest in another lease; and if so, to what extent.

It seems to me that that might involve a good deal of difficulty and a good deal of trouble, and the way to remedy it would be to strike out the provision allowing the railroad company to take leases. My own opinion is that the leases under the conditions fixed would not be worth much to them ordinarily.

I want to call attention to the very marked difference between this bill and the water-power bill in the matter of the number of interests that one may acquire. There is a great multimillionaire water-power company out West that has been referred to here a number of times, the name of which I do not recall, but it is a sort of bugaboo held up as the type of monopoly that should be avoided, and yet the fact is that under the water-power bill the Secretary of the Interior could lease to that octopus all the water powers in the United States on the public domain. There is no limit to the number of water-power leases that could be acquired by a single individual. The Secretary could lease them all to any one corporation. That is the provision in regard to the sort of development of which there is said to be very great danger of monopoly.

Now we come to mining coal. There has never been a monopoly of mining coal or sale at the mine of bituminous coal in this country. As a matter of fact, Federal bureaus have rather bewailed the fact that competition was so very intense between bituminous coal miners and operators that they were tempted to neglect proper regulations for safety and were tempted and almost compelled to be wasteful in their operations.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. COX. Has there been an attempt on the part of the miners or operators to get the department to consent to some kind of a combination which would not be a real violation of the Sherman antitrust law and yet one which would aid them in this particular?

Mr. MONDELL. I did not know that there had been such an attempt.

Mr. COX. I know that they did make that attempt in my State.

Mr. MONDELL. I know that the Government has felt that the competition between the bituminous coal operators was so keen as to make it difficult for them to provide the necessary means for conditions of safety or to adopt less wasteful methods. As to the class of enterprises, to wit, water power, with regard to which there is said to be the greatest danger of monopoly, we have made no effort to prevent a monopoly in the holdings. On the contrary, we have left it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to lease to any one monopoly all of the wonderful water powers of all the public domain.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of 10 minutes all debate be closed on this section and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, it occurred to me during the discussion of the water-power bill that there ought to be some limitation or restriction on the authority of the Secretary. But you have assumed that the Secretary will exercise a wise judgment and a proper discretion in leasing, and that he will not allow a monopoly to be established or maintained.

Still there have been Secretaries of the Interior who were not highly esteemed on this floor. There have been Secretaries with regard to whom very unkind things have been said, and still we place in the hands of anyone who may become Secretary of the Interior authority to lease for water-power development all the public lands in the entire United States that might be used for that purpose to one corporation or to one individual.

When we come to coal, an industry in which there never has been a monopoly, an industry in which it is difficult to establish anything like a monopoly as to mining and sale at the mines, we provide that no individual or corporation shall have more than one lease. I shall not offer an amendment—first, because I would not expect it to be adopted under the present frame of mind of the committee; and, second, because it is not absolutely essential that it should be adopted at this time. But I venture that it will be necessary to modify this section if we are going into the leasing business. We can not confine one individual or one corporation to a single lease anywhere in the United States.

The coal-leasing bill I introduced provided that no individual or corporation could hold two leases in the same immediately competitive field. I made that provision, perhaps, out of excess of caution, but it is certainly as far as we ought to go. A man who has a coal lease in Wyoming certainly ought to be allowed to have one in Washington if he desires because there is no competition between the two fields. A man with an oil lease in California ought not to be denied one in Montana. The oils are of different character, and they enter into an entirely different territory. They do not compete with each other in any possible way. In fact, as to oil, it is not clear to me that any hard and fast limitations as to the number of leases one was interested in was necessary. It has seemed strange to me that these two provisions of legislation presented by the same committee—one following quickly on the heels of the other—should have such divergent provisions in regard to this matter of leases. The only explanation is in the one heretofore suggested, that the clerk who wrote the bills in the Department of the Interior had one idea of the matter at one time and another view of it at another, and that in their consideration of the matter the committee never got the two things adjusted and failed utterly to carry the same thought or theory throughout the legislation.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the very reason that brought me to the support of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] brings me to oppose the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. I undertook the support of the gentleman from New Jersey because he was seeking to provide for the people to share in the profits and to put the bridles upon the corporations that may control these institutions hereafter. But I have been sitting here for about three weeks, and it seems to me that if the gentleman from Wyoming has anything to talk about it must be for a press bureau out in the West that defends him and big business, and they are taking account. There is one consolation, however, I have in listening to him, and that is that it reminds me of the verse of the Scripture where it says, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever." He has been on the floor all of the time.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Of course, I will yield. I have been led into temptation a few times and have got caught. Now, if you have got your hook, put it in my gill.

Mr. MONDELL. In the power bill, the gentleman from Texas did not put the bridles on the discretion of the Secretary to lease all of the power in the country to one corporation.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. I have done what I thought best all the way along without bringing up any obstruction, and I just want to state this in regard to the gentleman's position. The second law book that I ever passed an examination on told me that the prime object of all government is to restrain the strong and vicious, assist the weak and helpless, establish and maintain that which is right, and condemn and prohibit that which is wrong, and so when these strong and vicious institutions that are created by law, called corporations, that live without mercy and do business without charity, and know no God, and know no law, because they have no neck to break and no soul to damn—when they are to be considered, I think they ought to be restrained, especially when they prey upon the weak and helpless, and so I am opposed to the gentleman's whole process, so far as I have been able to understand what he has been shooting at since I have been here.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the period at the end of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Page 23, line 5, strike out the period at the end of the line.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to debate his amendment?

Mr. MANN. No; debate is closed.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FERRIS) there were—ayes 22, noes 20.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment. I would like to see some Democrats stay in the House once in a while, however.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, even the withdrawal of this amendment would not make clear the fact that during the discussion of this leasing bill the better part of the afternoon there have been present only 10 Democrats and about 20 Republicans, and the bill is of great importance.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 24. That no person, association, or corporation holding a lease under the provisions of this act shall hold more than a tenth interest, direct or indirect, in any agency, corporate or otherwise, engaged in the sale or resale of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium obtained from such lessee; and any violation of the provisions of this section shall be ground for the forfeiture of the lease or interest so held.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 6, strike out the figures "24" and insert the figures "23."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not understand the purpose of this section in this bill. It seems to me that it puts a restriction and limitation on trade that is very bad. That section forbids a coal company or a lessee under this bill establishing an agency of its own to sell its own coal. It would be impossible for it to sell coal through an agency of its own. It seems to me that the legislation would simply require an additional middle man in the coal business. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Oklahoma, what is the purpose of that section in the bill, and if that would not be the effect of it?

Mr. FERRIS. What effect?

Mr. STERLING. Would it not have the effect of preventing the coal company from establishing an agency of its own for the commerce of its coal at a distant point from the mine?

Mr. FERRIS. No; I think not. If the gentleman is through, I will answer him and give him the view of the committee and the department.

Mr. STERLING. I would like to have the gentleman answer me.

Mr. FERRIS. The requirement that no lease shall be assigned——

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no; I refer to section 23, which prohibits the ownership of more than one-tenth interest in any agency for the sale of coal.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think so. Complaints came before the committee to the effect that where the producer of the coal was also the carrier of the coal and was also to be the selling agent of the coal it developed a bad condition.

The gentleman knows that all through Pennsylvania in the anthracite regions they have had strikes, troubles, and various oppressions that have appalled the whole country, and out in Colorado last year the gentleman will recall that she had all kinds of labor troubles, and she had to have out the militia all the winter, and we had a congressional investigation. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] went out and sat there with his committee for weeks hearing about their troubles.

Mr. STERLING. But I call the gentleman's attention to the language of the section. It does not have reference to the railroad that carries the coal, but prohibits the mining company from owning more than a one-tenth interest in any agency for the sale or resale of any coal—its own coal.

Mr. FERRIS. There is specific provision in the coal part of the bill that does divorce production from carrying, and one of them is that the railroads are entitled to mine it for their own use, and can only take one lease for every 200 miles——

Mr. STERLING. But suppose a coal mine is developed under this law at one point, and at some distance from the location of the mines it desired to establish an agency for the sale of its own coal, it would have some one there to handle its coal, which would be purely an agency for the sale of its own coal. Now, this section would prohibit that. That may not have been the purpose, but the language of this section will produce that effect. The result of it will be this, it seems to me, that every company or lessee under this law that develops a coal mine and desires to sell the coal at some distant point, it would have to sell to some independent concern, which is creating an additional middleman in the sale of the coal. It would just add that much expense to the consumer's price. I do not believe the gentleman can make anything else out of this section.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman's opinion is in entire variance with the Geological Survey, is in entire variance with the Bureau of Mines, and with every bit of testimony we have. On the contrary, they assert that at times it would have a very salutary effect on the consuming public not to allow the coal producer to also control the agency that sells the production, and, too, oftentimes the railroad that carries it, and thereby charge the public just what it pleases for the coal.

Mr. STERLING. A mining company must sell its coal, and what is the difference whether it sells it direct from the mine or sells it at some distant point through some agency that has been established by the mining company? If that is not permitted, then it will be bound to sell its coal to some other concern which would necessarily add an additional profit to the product and sell it to the consumer at the increased price.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, certainly it is the purpose of the committee and it is my opinion that the language properly bears the construction the committee intended and that was there should be no interference or prohibition upon the part of the producer of coal to sell wherever it chose and to whomever it chose. It may establish offices throughout the entire country if it itself is the principal. That is not the kind of an agency that is referred to in the section, but here is a selling corporation whose business is the sale or resale of coal, and the purpose, then, was to prohibit a greater than one-tenth interest in such a corporation or in such an agency of that class.

Mr. STERLING. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes, sir.

Mr. STERLING. I think the purpose of the committee, as the gentleman states it, is all right, but this section of the bill does not so state it. This bill permits the very thing you seek to prevent and prohibits the thing you seek to encourage, if the gentleman has stated the intent of the committee correctly.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. But the language of this bill prohibits such an agency. It does not say corporate agency that buys and sells coal and that would not be an agency at all. If a mining company should ship coal to a distant point and sell to a corporation or to an individual who buys it for the purpose of resale, that is not an agency. It is an independent concern, representing no principal. This bill forbids ownership in agencies, not in independent concerns buying and selling on its own account. I expect it was the purpose of the committee to prohibit the mining company from owning more than a one-tenth interest in any kind of concern that does that kind of business, and I think that would be all right. But by this you say "agency," and the explanation of the gentleman of the purpose of the committee does not relate to an agency at all.

Mr. LENROOT. Let me ask the gentleman. Suppose a producing company establishes an office in some city under its own name and sells coal in that city; is that an agency?

Mr. STERLING. Purely an agency, and it could not be maintained under this bill.

Mr. LENROOT. It is not, according to my theory of the legal definition of the word "agency."

Mr. STERLING. No; I would not think so. I think they ought to be allowed to own agencies and sell their own coal. It would make no difference whether it was individual or corporate, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to say to the gentleman if that is true, then all the restrictions we put in the previous sections seeking to avoid monopoly become absolutely valueless, because if a coal company can organize a corporation, having no relation or privity with the Government in this line, then you might as well strike out the previous section.

Mr. STERLING. The gentleman does not understand my point. It would not make any difference whether they engaged an individual or a corporation to handle their product. Presumably such an agency would handle it without charging an additional profit.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STERLING. Just right there. It would simply handle the product for the owner, as the agent of the owner, either on a commission or a salary. Now, the owner ought to be allowed to establish an agency and sell his own product, whether an individual or a corporation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STERLING. Let me just complete my statement. But if that mining company should sell it to a corporation or an individual or a company somewhere else, then, I think, it is perfectly proper that their ownership of that kind of a concern ought to be limited, because then there would be a profit added by this middleman, this middle concern; and if that is the purpose of the bill, it is all right; but I am very sure the language of the bill does not express that purpose.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, the gentleman states that, in his judgment, it would be entirely proper to permit a producing company to organize another corporation whose business would be the selling of the coal of the producing company. But in that event it is entirely clear that that corporation, organized by the lessee, would not be amenable in any way to the provisions of this law, while if the company itself established an office and itself conducted a transaction, then, whatever it did, they would be subject to the provisions of the law. While we all have the greatest admiration for the ability of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING], I do think that he has an incorrect construction of the use of the term "agency" in this connection.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 25. That any permit, lease, occupation, or use permitted under this act shall reserve to the Secretary of the Interior the right to permit for joint or several use such easements or rights of way upon, through, or in the lands leased, occupied, or used as may be necessary or appropriate to the working of the same, or of other lands containing the deposits described in this act, and the treatment and shipment of the products thereof by or under authority of the Government, its lessees, or permittees, and for other public purposes: Provided, That said Secretary, in his discretion, in making any lease under this act may reserve to the United States the right to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of the surface of the lands embraced within such lease under existing law or laws hereafter enacted, in so far as said surface is not necessary for use of the lessee in extracting and removing the deposits therein: Provided further, That if such reservation is made it shall be so determined before the offering of such lease. That the said Secretary, during the life of the lease, is authorized to issue such permits for easements herein provided to be reserved.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Line 14, page 23, strike out "25" and insert "24."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to read the next paragraph of the bill.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. NORTON. I wanted to make some suggestions with regard to the last paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The last paragraph, I will say to the gentleman, has been concluded.

Mr. NORTON. I was on my feet, but did not ask for recognition. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will return to paragraph 24.

Mr. NORTON. I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if there is any good reason why in lines 23, 24, and 25 there is not reserved to the Secretary the discretion to lease or otherwise dispose of the surface rights of the land during the period for which the permit is issued?

Mr. FERRIS. Now, there is a proviso down below on page 24, beginning with line 4, which provides that if any such reservation is made it must be made before the lease is entered into. I think that answers the question.

Mr. NORTON. No; there is no provision there made for reserving to the Secretary of the Interior the right to sell or lease the land during the time for which the permit is made.

Mr. FERRIS. In case the lessee has to go out and borrow money and capitalize his concern and make a going company of it, we thought, in the interest of good development for coal, as well as other development, where large expenditure is likely after they start in, we ought to give them some fixed, definite tenure during that time; and it was therefore up to the Secretary to make such reservations of surface right or other rights that were necessary before beginning the lease, so that the leasehold might not be tampered with during its lifetime.

Mr. NORTON. I offer the following amendment:

On page 23, line 24, after the word "any," insert the words "permit or."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, line 24, after the word "any," insert the words "permit or."

So that the line will read:

In making any permit or lease under this act—

And so forth.

Mr. NORTON. By the adoption of the amendment I have offered this would be effected: During the two-year period for which the permit for prospecting is issued the surface right to the land could be leased or otherwise disposed of. Entries for agricultural purposes could then be made upon the land the same as is now provided can be made during the time for which the lease is made.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. NORTON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman other amendments to go with it?

Mr. NORTON. Yes; I have other amendments to offer to the paragraph to supplement the one I am now offering to perfect that. I believe this reservation should be made.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. What is the purpose of the gentleman in permitting the Secretary to lease or otherwise dispose of the land that a man may be seeking to get a permit upon?

Mr. NORTON. My purpose in that is just the same as the gentleman's purpose in giving to the Secretary of the Interior the right to lease or otherwise dispose of the surface of the land during the time for which the mining lease is given. Can you tell me any good reason why the surface right to the land should not be disposed of for agricultural purposes during the permit period?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I think so.

Mr. NORTON. Why? Any more than during the lease period?

Mr. RAKER. Yes. There could not be any permanent agricultural work upon the land pending the two years except the mere fact of permitting it to be used for grazing purposes. Here, for example, is a man having 640 acres of land that he is going to prospect upon. You would not let Tom, Dick, and Harry go in there and use that land and occupy it and interfere with the permittee, would you?

Mr. MANN. Right there, will the gentleman from North Dakota permit me to ask a question of the gentleman from California?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Under the law as it now stands we do lease for grazing purposes a large amount of the public domain, do we not?

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. MANN. None of it in the forest reserves?

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. MANN. We do not make any leases there?

Mr. RAKER. No; we do not permit any leases in the forest reserves or anywhere else.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman mean that the Government does not permit leases in the forest reserves?

Mr. RAKER. I do. They grant permits.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is simply dodging. He is not frank, and I will not ask him any further question if he does not want to be frank.

Mr. RAKER. I was frank. I answered "no" and "yes." There is no question about it. There is no leasing permitted. That is the policy. But the Department of Agriculture permits four or five men to inclose a part of the territory in a forest reserve so that they may use it for the purpose of rounding up their cattle in the fall or spring, and not otherwise, except that a bill was passed last year permitting small tracts to be leased to people who desired to build summer homes temporarily in the forest reserves—leases for 20 years, I think. But there is no leasing of the lands, as leasing, in the forest reserves or elsewhere, so far as I am able to find. That is my candid answer.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is candid. He may be correct, but that is not my understanding of the situation. I was going to ask him another question but will not, because it is dependent on the answer to the first.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I propose to offer amendments to perfect this section, so that if a man secures a permit for two years for exploring the land for purposes of securing oil, during that time homestead entries for agricultural purposes may be made upon the surface rights. It seems to me that if this law is not safeguarded in this way, then any man may go out upon the public domain and secure a permit on 2,560 acres of land for two years with the main idea in view of having the free use of that land for grazing purposes for two years. I believe that that possible abuse should be guarded against.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. NORTON. I ask unanimous consent to continue for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. I shall be pleased to.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to say to the gentleman that that would be impossible under the provision of section 9, which provides for a due measure of diligence, and the Secretary is authorized to cancel the lease upon any breach of the conditions.

Mr. NORTON. Yes; and in such proceedings it will likely take two years to cancel it.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of 10 minutes, 5 minutes of which shall be used by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] and 5 by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], all debate on this section and amendments thereto be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, after the consideration of this amendment, if it is adopted by the committee, I shall offer other amendments to the paragraph, to make the paragraph read so that when the bill becomes a law it will not be possible for anyone to go on the public domain and under the guise of securing a permit for exploring for oil or gas or phosphates to use the surface of the land for some other purpose.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, going back to the colloquy with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], relative to the matter of leasing, as I understand the law to-day there are no leases authorized on the public domain. The public domain does not refer to the forest withdrawals.

In the Forest Service last year for the first time the Secretary of Agriculture was permitted to lease certain tracts of land—my impression is not over 5 acres, although it may be 2 acres—for the purpose of summer homes, the leases not extending beyond 20 years. As a lease I know of no other provision.

I have been looking that up carefully, and I feel that that is the general position as it stands to-day. The permit authorized by the Department of Agriculture is such that on the great majority of forest reserves men are permitted to turn out their stock at so much per head. The time is fixed, commencing in the early spring or late spring, and running until the early fall or late fall, and the price is fixed according to the time the reserves are used. There are some larger tracts and some smaller ones given to parties under a permit to use the land for their stock. Sometimes a half dozen, by paying so much per year, may have permits to use a particular tract of land, and, in a few instances, where it relates to a tract where they may use a meadow or a spring, which is a good place for gathering up and rounding up their stock in the summer or fall, a permit is granted sometimes to one and sometimes to a dozen or 15 stockmen, so that they may have the feed in the field when the round-up occurs. That is my understanding generally, that those are permits and are not considered to be leases.

I have tried to answer the gentleman from Illinois. Getting back now to the amendment, I think the committee considered that general feature in this bill, permitting the leasing, selling, and other disposition after the man had leased, or at the time he leased, that he then knew exactly what he was going to do and could prepare his house accordingly.

Mr. FERRIS. Is there not a good deal in what the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] says, and is it not barely possible that cattlemen could go out and secure a permit when in truth and fact they wanted to do grazing on the land?

Mr. NORTON. I have especially in mind the probability of the passage of the 640-acre grazing law that is now before the Congress; and if you leave this provision as it stands in this section it means the withdrawal, under a permit, of 2,560 acres for two years.

Mr. RAKER. Getting back to the point, the permit is given to the man for the purpose of prospecting, for the purpose of investigation, for the purpose of determining in advance, before he makes a lease, whether or not there are minerals in the ground which are of the character referred to in the bill. He determines this by the investigations that he makes in good faith, untrammeled by the department. The Secretary of the Interior is given power to see that he complies with that permit and works diligently for the purpose, and the only purpose for which the permit is granted; and I ask the members of the committee now, when a man is willing to go upon the public domain a long distance from civilization, where hardships are encountered at every turn, whether he should be hampered by others using the same land that he is attempting to use?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 26. That no lease issued under the authority of this act shall be assigned or sublet, except with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior. The lessee may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be permitted at any time to make written relinquishment of all rights under such a lease, and upon acceptance thereof be thereby relieved of all future obligations under said lease. Each lease shall contain provisions for the purpose of insuring the exercise of reasonable diligence, skill, and care in the operation of said property; a provision that such rules for the safety and welfare of the miners and for the prevention of undue waste as may be prescribed by said Secretary shall be observed, including a restriction of the workday to not exceeding eight hours in any one day for underground workers except in cases of emergency, provisions securing the workmen complete freedom of purchase, requiring the payment of wages at least twice a month in lawful money of the United States, and providing proper rules and regulations to insure the fair and just weighing or measurement of the coal mined by each miner, and such other provisions as he may deem necessary for the protection of the interests of the United States, for the prevention of monopoly, and for the safeguarding of the public welfare.

With the following committee amendments:

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 25, line 6, insert the following proviso:

"Provided, That none of such provisions shall be in conflict with the laws of the State in which the leased property is situated."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EMERSON:

Page 24, line 11, after the word "Interior," insert the words "but no such assignment shall be made unless to citizens of the United States or associations of such citizens."

Page 25, line 8, after the word "situated," add "except as to the provisions as to citizens referred to in this section."

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, these two amendments go together. They either fall or stand together.

Section 1 of this bill provides, among other things, in line 7—

Shall be subject to disposition in the form and manner provided by this act to citizens of the United States.

Then comes section 26, new section 25, that no lease issued under the authority of this act shall be assigned or sublet except with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior.

I presume my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] will say that this is entirely up to the Secretary of the Interior to determine to whom these assignments shall be made, and it is, under this bill; but I am rather inclined to agree with my friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that perhaps we might have some Secretary of the Interior whom we would not desire to have pass upon these matters. Besides, the object and purpose of the bill is to limit it to citizens of the United States. Now, he might say that the Secretary of the Interior would not permit others than citizens of the United States to receive such assignments, but it is absolutely within the province of the Secretary of the Interior to determine to whom these assignments shall be made. And if we are to carry out that particular section, limiting the use of these lands to citizens of the United States, this section should be so amended that it shall be limited to citizens of the United States or associations of citizens of the United States. I think that protection should be thrown around this section. At least it can do no harm, and it may do some good.

After I sat here yesterday and listened to the gentleman from the Philippines [Mr. QUEZON] assert on the floor of this House that he had used force and arms against the authority of the United States, and was applauded as he was applauded yesterday, I came to the conclusion that it is time for somebody to stand up in defense of the citizens of this country. My first act when I arose this morning was to look out of my window and see whether the Capitol was still here. If proceedings such as happened yesterday continue we may expect before Congress adjourns to hear the national hymns of other countries sung on the floor of this House.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to close debate on this section in four minutes, three minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section close in four minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, this amendment appeals to a man from California, where we have been pioneers in the attempt to save our part of the country from oriental invasion. It was a matter of deep regret that the alien-land act passed by my State did not exclude all aliens from land ownership and all corporations having alien stockholders. Now, it seems to me that the time has come to put a crimp in this sort of legislation and provide that these acts that grant privileges shall be granted solely to the people of our own country, to those who are responsible for the management of our institutions and for responsibly operating a democracy. I thoroughly agree with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to differ with my friend from California, and also with my friend from Ohio. This is what we do. We first provide that only citizens of the United States can lease these lands at all, and we then say that the lessee can not sell them unless the Secretary of the Interior gives him permission to do it. We ought not to go any further, it seems to me. It is not a matter that I am concerned deeply about. But we can not settle the Japanese question and the immigration question in this bill.

Mr. EMERSON. Would the gentleman object to the amendment going in?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; I do not think it is necessary. I doubt, also, the wisdom of it. We can not cure all the ills in this one bill. This is a public-land bill. Let us not load it up so much.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Mexico asks unanimous consent to address the committee for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands to a very important point in this bill. My State is very much interested in this bill and I am in favor of it. I notice all through the bill it empowers the Secretary of the Interior to do certain things. My understanding is that a great part of this bill refers to land within the national forest reserves which are under the Department of Agriculture, administered by the Bureau of Forestry. Now, we all understand that, as far as the minerals are concerned, they are under the authority of the Department of the Interior and under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and its various bureaus. But what about the surface?

Mr. FERRIS. We do not meddle with the surface of it. Not only that, but the bill provides that the land can only be leased for minerals when it is determined that it will not be harmful for the purposes for which it is set aside.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. It does not affect the surface of the land?

Mr. FERRIS. No; they could not proceed until there is a finding by the Secretary of Agriculture that this proceeding would not interfere with operations on the surface for which the land was withdrawn.

Mr. LENROOT. Is the gentleman correct, that that provision is in this bill?

Mr. FERRIS. I think so. I think the provision is in both bills.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to address the committee for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to voice the thought conveyed by my colleague from California [Mr. KENT] on the question of alien ownership of this mineral contained in the land, particularly as to the leasing. I took it up with the Department of the Interior and the Bureau of Mines when we inserted the provision in section 1, lines 10 and 11, which read as follows:

Shall be subject to disposition in the form and manner provided by this act to citizens of the United States, or to any association of such persons, or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof.

That ought to have been and should have contained the proviso that these corporations should be composed of citizens of the United States, or that the stock should not be owned by aliens over and above a certain number or percentage. Otherwise, under the provisions of this bill, while we are trying to legislate in behalf of the citizens, native and naturalized, of this country, nevertheless the corporation might be organized by two-thirds of the aliens, or the stock may be transferred to aliens. In practically all of the provisions contained in the bill they could be held by aliens in this country—Japanese, Chinese, and others—without any restriction. As a matter of fact, the matter was discussed in committee, and it was the idea to make effective the provision that was left out in the California Legislature, that the ownership of land should be prohibited to corporations as well as to aliens if those corporations were composed of aliens who were not citizens of the country. We are trying, under the general mining laws, to make them applicable to citizens alone. So far as this applies to corporations, the corporation may, of course, be controlled by the directorate, who are citizens, but so far as the holding of stock is concerned, 95 per cent of it may be held by those who are neither citizens of the United States or who have not declared their intention to become so. In other words, there may be aliens to the extent of 90 per cent, if not all, of the stock.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. We have already closed debate on this section three times.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure that I sympathize with the efforts of gentlemen to see to it that all of the developments in this country shall be made through the aid of home capital. If it had not been for capital from abroad there would have been no such development in the country as has taken place. We possibly and probably have reached a state now where we are not so much in need of foreign capital, but at the same time we have reached the point where we are now seeking investment of our capital in foreign countries, and we ought to be using a large share of our resources in the development of Central and South America. We ought to own a great many of their enterprises. We ought to put our money into the development of the great natural resources which they have. I question very much whether it will aid us any when we go down there with our capital and seek a chance to develop, to be told "You will not let anybody in your country do this, and now since you are a little richer, why do you come here?" It is bad policy, and we ought not to do it.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. KENT. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he would like to repeal the clause in the homestead laws that calls for citizenship?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; because in the very nature of things it is different. A man who goes on a homestead is supposed to be a permanent resident of the United States. I prefer to make him a citizen of the United States, although some of our laws which the gentleman is seeking to change permit a woman, if she is married to a foreigner, to lose her citizenship.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. KENT. I would like to ask the gentleman whether there is so much difference between homestead tenure and a 99-year lease tenure?

Mr. MANN. I should say there was a great deal of difference between a homesteader cultivating the soil on a small piece of ground and a man borrowing money to put millions of dollars into a great hydroelectric plant or something of that kind or to develop a railroad. Our railroads never would been built across the continent if it had not been for the aid of foreign capital. If it had not been for foreign capital, California would not be on the map to-day.

Mr. KENT. It would be yellow, if the gentleman's ideas were carried out.

Mr. MANN. The greatest benefit we have ever had from California was because she had so much that was yellow in her.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The question is on the adoption of the amendments offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken.

Mr. EMERSON. I demand a division.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments may be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the amendments may be again reported. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendments.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 12, noes 25.

So the amendments were rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 27. That any lease issued under the provisions of this act may be forfeited and canceled by an appropriate proceeding in a court of competent jurisdiction whenever the lessee fails to comply with any of the provisions of this act, of the lease, or of the general regulations promulgated under this act and in force at the date of the lease; and the lease may provide for resort to appropriate methods for the settlement of disputes or for remedies for breach of specified conditions thereof.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Page 25, line 9, strike out "27" and insert "26."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I want to move an amendment to the following amendment. All through the bill we have been amending it by adding, after the word "States," the word "district," and I move, on page 25, line 12, after the word "States," to insert the word "district" to make it conform.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 12, page 25, by inserting after the word "States" the word "district."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, line 11, strike out the words "a court of competent jurisdiction" and insert "the United States district court of the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of section 26 the following:

"The court in adjudging a forfeiture may, as compensation to the lessee or others interested, decree a lien upon any land permanently improved by the lessee in a sum not exceeding the value added to the land by such improvement, such lien to be paid when the land is again sold or leased under the provisions of this act: Provided, That if when the land is again sold or leased such improvement shall have depreciated in value since such forfeiture, the lien may on application to such court be reduced accordingly: Provided further, That the court may deny compensation in whole or in part to anyone guilty of bad faith in securing the lease or in carrying out its provisions or the provisions of this act."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, without any desire to cut the gentleman off, I move that the committee do now rise, and we will leave the matter standing and the gentleman can debate it to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to,

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CULLOP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 406, and had directed him to report they had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The Speaker laid before the House a message from the President of the United States (H. Doc. No. 576), which was read, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State in relation to claims presented by the Governments of Austria-Hungary, Greece, and Turkey on account of injuries inflicted on their nationals during riots which occurred in South Omaha, Nebr., on February 21, 1909, and I recommend that, as an act of grace and without reference to the question of the liability of the United States, an appropriation be made to effect a settlement of these claims in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of State.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 14, 1916.

The SPEAKER. The message is referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed, together with the accompanying documents.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] is detained in a hearing over in his committee room, and he requested me to make this request: I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], on next Monday morning, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the business from the Speaker's table is disposed of, be permitted to address the House for 40 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, have not we already made a date for somebody on Monday?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] has already been granted an hour.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt the gentleman from Florida would be perfectly agreeable to a transfer. I do not think I would ask for it to-night under the circumstances. Nobody over here will object to Mr. KITCHIN coming in Monday.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, the request was slightly different in the case of Mr. KITCHIN. The consent granted to Mr. CLARK was after the ordinary business of the day had been disposed of, whereas the request of Mr. KITCHIN was immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. MANN. Well, if they do not conflict, I have no objection. I think the gentleman from North Carolina is entitled to it, and I hope that courtesy will be extended to me if I ever ask for it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 320. An act to authorize the county of Bonner, Idaho, to construct a bridge across Pend Oreille River; and

H. R. 775. An act granting the consent of Congress to J. P. Jones and others to construct one or more bridges across the Chattahoochee River between the counties of Coweta and Carroll, in the State of Georgia.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by inserting a speech delivered by Hon. JAMES A. REED, United States Senator from Missouri, at Milwaukee recently upon the subject of "Violations of international law and American neutrality by the belligerent nations."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech made by Senator JAMES A. REED, of Missouri, at Milwaukee recently upon the subject of "Violations of international law by the present belligerents in Europe, Asia, and Africa." Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Saturday, January 15, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication of the Secretary of War submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917 (H. Doc. No. 571); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication of the Secretary of Agriculture submitting an estimate of an appropriation for inclusion in the urgent deficiency bill to meet the emergency caused by the infectious nature and spread of the citrus canker (H. Doc. No. 574); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting a further estimate of the deficiency in the appropriation for printing and binding for the Patent Office for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916 (H. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 15, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, infinite and eternal Spirit, that though we forget Thee and wander far from the paths of rectitude and duty Thou dost not forget us, but are ever constant in Thy ministrations to our needs. Forgive our forgetfulness and our sins, quicken our conscience, and make us profoundly sensible of the sinfulness of sin, that the trend of our lives may be Godward through the sublime example and eternal precepts of the Master. Amen.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point there is no quorum here this morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota makes the point there is no quorum present, and evidently there is not.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move the call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ashbrook	Eagle	Holland	Padgett
Bacharach	Edmonds	Howell	Paige, Mass.
Barchfeld	Estopinal	Hughes	Patten
Beales	Fairchild	Hulbert	Peters

The SPEAKER. On this call 314 Members, a quorum, have answered to their names.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

APPROVAL OF JOURNAL.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. PLATT and Mr. FERRIS rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] rise?

Mr. PLATT. To request leave of absence indefinitely for my colleague, Mr. ROWE, who is ill and in bed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks leave of absence for his colleague [Mr. ROWE] indefinitely. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COAL AND OIL LEASES.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 406.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 406) to authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium, with Mr. CULLOP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 406, and the Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 406) to authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending, offered last evening by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD]. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment to the section reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of section 26 the following:

"The court in adjudging a forfeiture may, as compensation to the lessee or others interested, decree a lien upon any land permanently improved by the lessee in a sum not exceeding the value added to the land by such improvement, such lien to be paid when the land is again sold or leased under the provisions of this act: Provided, That if when the land is again sold or leased such improvement shall have depreciated in value since such forfeiture, the lien may on application to such court be reduced accordingly: Provided further, That the court may deny compensation in whole or in part to anyone guilty of bad faith in securing the lease or in carrying out its provisions or the provisions of this act."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, this bill contains a good many provisions designed to protect the Government and the consumers of the various mineral products that may be mined under its provisions; but it has occurred to me that it is very doubtful whether any operation is likely to occur under the leases which it provides for, except perhaps by men who are rich and can afford to take chances, knowing that they have the means to carry out the provisions of a lease.

It seems to me clear that this bill provides for an ordinary lease that would be subject to the laws applicable to leases generally. If anybody should fail to carry out the provisions of such a lease, or of this act, the lessee would lose whatever he had put into the land as a permanent improvement of it.

I had some experience in trying to frame lease laws of this kind while a member of the Committee on the Public Lands. In the hearings we had we were told that in many instances it cost hundreds and thousands of dollars before a mine can be developed so as to secure any proceeds from the operation. Take the case of the person who attempts in good faith to open up a mine and fails. Has he no equity that is entitled to protection?

It is true that a court would go as far as it could in protecting him; but this bill in effect directs, that the court shall declare a forfeiture. When that forfeiture is declared the ordinary common-law rule would apply; not only would he lose the lease but it would carry with it all that he had invested, except a few things that might be removed.

Now, there are a great many things that he could not remove, and it is doubtful whether he would have a right to remove much of anything, as nearly all fixtures would be of a permanent character, placed there to stay, under a lease the term of which is indefinite. Take, for instance, a tunnel. That could not be removed. A shaft could not be removed.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. In providing for allowing the court to decree a lien on the premises, in whose favor do you ask that the decree be made?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. As compensation to the lessee and others interested. That is the provision of the amendment.

Mr. RAKER. In other words, your intention is that the man who violates his lease shall have a lien decreed upon the public domain that is leased, to remain there, and that the subsequent lessee shall pay for this lien for the benefit of the man who has violated the law? Is that the purpose?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. My idea is that if a man adds anything of permanent value to Government land he should not forfeit it, except as a punishment for bad faith. The amendment provides that the court may punish bad faith by refusing compensation.

Mr. RAKER. If a man has violated the rules and violated the regulations imposed——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. He may be compelled by reason of circumstances to violate the conditions of a lease. Let me call attention to another aspect of this matter. The lessee is not the only one to be considered. There is the party who invests his money and takes a mortgage upon the land; without him there will be but little development. That party has no power to protect himself if the lease is forfeited. It seems to me the court should be given the power to protect the mortgagee—the man who has put the money into the transaction.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman again yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield again to the gentleman from California?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do.

Mr. RAKER. Does not the mortgagee, who has foreclosed his mortgage under the bill, stand in the bill in the position of the original lessee?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. When he has foreclosed his mortgage he may, but until then he only has a lien that would be lost when the lease is forfeited.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to cut the gentleman off, but I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of 10 minutes, 5 minutes of which shall be controlled by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] and 5 minutes by the committee, all debate on this paragraph and amendment thereto be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that at the expiration of 10 minutes, 5 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Minnesota and 5 by the chairman of the committee, all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object, Mr. Chairman. This is a most important amendment, prepared by a gentleman who was formerly a member of the Committee on the Public Lands. I do not think it is right to abridge this discussion, with only 10 minutes allowed for debate on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] objects. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I called attention a moment ago to the fact that a great many improvements that are made under a lease of this kind could not be removed. In case of the forfeiture of a lease, not only would the shafts and tunnels but other fixtures necessarily placed upon the land be forfeited.

It is a rule of the common law that where a lease is forfeited and there are trade fixtures upon the land when the forfeiture takes place, they go to the landlord. The lessee can not remove them if he has suffered a forfeiture during his term. Take the roads that have been built, the houses that have been erected, the timber supporting the roof of the mine, and the protection in tunnels and shafts, all will be subject to forfeiture. I am sure the lease will require that all those things must remain upon the land, to be lost in case the lease is forfeited. I have put at the end of this amendment a provision giving power to the courts to punish in case there is a lack of good faith in the lessee. It seems to me with that provision the court can amply punish the one whom my friend from California [Mr. RAKER] is so anxious to rob. Barring those who act in bad faith, it seems to me we ought to be willing to give to the people who honestly invest their money in these leases full protection for whatever they do to add value to Government lands; I do not understand why this bill should be considered so sacred that we can not dot an "i" or cross a "t." That seems to be the attitude of the committee. In the public interest they ought to be willing to concede anything and everything that is fair.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TOWNER. Is it not also true that as a mere matter of policy, if these gentlemen desire investments in these interests that they have out there, if it shall be known to the investor that perhaps an unintentional violation of the law will work a forfeiture of all of the property that he has, no ordinarily careful and prudent man would invest a dollar in these enterprises?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Why, certainly; and besides that, remember this, that the lessee has the power to ruin absolutely the man who puts money into the enterprise in the shape of a mortgage. He may conspire with his competitors to do so. It may even pay him to do so if the lessee is a corporation. Under this bill, if it becomes a law, the mortgagee has no way to protect himself. There is nothing here that gives the court the power to protect him. It seems to me you ought not to say to the man who is going to put in his money, "You have got to put it in on the credit and the honesty of the lessee. You can not put it on the strength of the security at all." That is the way you leave it, and it is not fair. You will never get any development under such circumstances. This provision can not do any harm. It only asks compensation for permanent improvements, and only to the extent that such improvements increase the value of the land. Why should not the Government be willing to be honest? Why should it not be willing to pay for what its citizens may add in value to its property? I think the Government ought to be as honest as any citizen. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the amendment may be reported again. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, is there any arrangement for time?

Mr. FERRIS. No; but I hope there may be one. Can we not find out how much time is desired, and give gentlemen the time they desire, and then close the debate on the paragraph?

Mr. STAFFORD. Let it run a little while.

Mr. FERRIS. I am afraid it will go too far.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no; it will not.

Mr. FERRIS. I withdraw the request.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, when this provision was under consideration in the other bill, I called the attention of those who had charge of the bill to this provision, which, in my judgment, was both unwise as a question of justice and certainly unwise as a question of policy from the standpoint of the proponents of this bill. However, they did not seem to take that view of the case. I am entirely in accord with the idea suggested in this amendment and shall support it. In my judgment it is a very important amendment and ought to be adopted by the committee.

Mr. Chairman, the provision in the bill is that a proceeding may be commenced in a court of the United States for the cancellation of these leases whenever—and this is the exact language of the section—

> Whenever the lessee fails to comply with any of the provisions of this act, of the lease, or of the general regulations promulgated under this act and in force at the date of the lease.

It will be observed by gentlemen of the committee that this places every lessee under this act subject to three conditions: First, the provisions of this act. Granted that they may be complied with, perhaps without difficulty. Second, the provisions of the lease. Mr. Chairman, it is not only possible but probable that no lessee will ever enter upon one of these leases who will not at some time, for some reason, under some circumstances, be unable to comply with the terms of the lease. Under these circumstances this provision allows a proceeding to be begun against him for the forfeiture of his lease. Now, grant that the proceeding may be tried in a court of equity. Grant that the court may consider that an unintentional violation is not sufficient to work a forfeiture of the lease——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TOWNER. In a moment. Still, Mr. Chairman, there is no provision in the section that would not compel the court under its terms to declare a forfeiture if there had been even a small violation of the lease inconsequential in character. Now, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Is it not true that for a forfeiture of a lease an action may be brought in ejectment as well as in equity, and that it depends entirely upon the local statutes of the State in which the land may be situated?

Mr. TOWNER. I think the gentleman is correct. I am not absolutely certain with regard to that. Usually, of course, when a forfeiture is to be declared in a court of justice, it is an appeal to the equity jurisdiction of the court. I am not at all sure, however, but that the gentleman may be correct in his suggestion, and if that is the case, it certainly makes it more necessary that we should be careful.

But granting all those things, granting that the court will do everything it can to protect the interests of the lessees, still there is absolutely no provision in this section, or in this bill, which provides for a disposition of the property that may be placed upon the land under this lease, in case a forfeiture is declared. I suggest to gentlemen that there is no State in the Union that does not provide, in case of occupancy of land upon which improvements may be made, for an equitable disposition of those improvements at the expiration or upon the cancellation of the lease. Yet there is not in this bill which we are here considering any suggestion of that kind. Mr. Chairman, will not this say to an intending investor, who may desire to invest his money in such an enterprise to the advantage of all who desire the passage of this act and the improvement of this property, "You can not afford to invest $10,000 or $100,000 or $1,000,000 in property where there is absolutely no protection against the danger of such forfeiture?"

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, as I say, will it not have that effect when there is absolutely no provision in the law that will compensate him for his property or by which any arrangement can be made for its disposition in case he shall be put off the property. I suggest that the adoption of such a provision will result in no improvements being made on these properties. It will defeat the very object and purpose of the act. For, above everything else, I judge it is a bill that will result in its operation for the benefit of the West rather than a restriction on the development of their resources.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that the provision in the bill providing that "the lease may provide for resort to appropriate methods for the settlement of disputes or for remedies for breach of specified conditions" would cover the case?

Mr. TOWNER. I hardly think so, for the reason that here is a specific section of the bill devoted to the consideration of questions of violation of the terms of the lease, and providing a method by which, and only by which, they can be terminated.

Mr. MANN. But it is not a forfeiture in itself; it requires a court proceedings to make a forfeiture that is based on the lease. It may contain remedies for breach of any specified condition or provision for settlement of any dispute between the Government and the lessee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Iowa be extended three minutes. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. So, apparently, the lessee has the right when he makes the lease to insist upon conditions which I had supposed would permit him to make provision for the settlement of any dispute between him and the Government and would be a better protection to him than it would to have us insert a specific provision applicable to all cases which would be binding on the courts.

Mr. TOWNER. I am not at all sure but that the gentleman from Illinois is entirely right. It may be that the other provisions of the bill are entirely adequate for the settlement of disputes during the continuance of the lease. I am only calling attention to the danger of this section that may follow its expiration by a declared forfeiture.

Mr. MANN. The provision I refer to is in this section.

Mr. TOWNER. If the gentleman is correct about it, it would appear antagonistic to other sections.

Mr. MANN. I do not think so. Here is a provision of the lease that it may be forfeited for violation of a condition, the violation of a statute or regulation, but the same section contains a provision authorizing the Government and the lessee to make a special agreement on this subject as to what shall happen if a forfeiture takes place. I do not say that that covers the case, but I had supposed that it would.

Mr. TOWNER. Let me suggest to the gentleman. This clause reads:

And the lease may provide for resort to appropriate methods for the settlement of disputes or for remedies for breach of specified conditions thereof.

I think, perhaps, that if the lease contained a provision for the settlement of specific instances then it would be adequate, but unless it did contain a provision for every particular requirement it would not. That, in any event, would not meet the case that might result in forfeiture without the fault of the lessee and with no intent on his part to violate the terms of the lease. A lessee might, because of unfair competition, be unable to pay his rent and the court be required to declare a forfeiture. In such a case it would be manifestly unfair to confiscate his improvements, made in good faith, by declaring a forfeiture, without any provision for the disposition of his property.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of 20 minutes all debate on this section and amendments thereto be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and amendments thereto be closed in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I want to urge, in perfect good humor, that the House proceed a little more rapidly with this bill. The bill passed the last House practically by unanimous consent, after the most extended consideration of every paragraph, and it seems to me that we have spent more time than we ought to on a bill that we had previously passed with such full and complete consideration.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] offers an amendment which is more far-reaching than any provision that I have yet heard of. But, to debate his amendment, I want to state what section 26 does. The section is more liberal to the lessee as it stands than the leasing laws of any foreign countries that have Federal leasing laws, for they usually provide for involuntary forfeiture. This section provides that when conditions are broken, when the lessee fails to keep faith with the Government, when he fails to keep the lease contract, when he fails and refuses to do the things he agrees to do, then he may go into court and have a trial on every one of the issues to determine whether or not he has broken them at all. But the section does more than that; the last part of the section provides for arbitration, an amicable settlement between the lessee and the Government, and what language more beneficial than that could be inserted for the lessee?

Now, I have a profound respect for the opinion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] and also for the gentleman from Iowa, Judge TOWNER, and I am sure that the reading of this section in conjunction with section 30, which gives the Secretary every power to work out rules and regulations to make this effective, is liberal enough for the lessee.

My own notion is, we need not be so solicitous about these big coal and oil companies. They usually have high-priced attorneys to look after their interests, both at the start and at the close.

But let me call attention to the Government side of it. If you adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], in my opinion you will make it so favorable to the lessee that you never can get rid of the lessee or even be able to regulate him or force him to comply with the lease. And in the event he breaks his conditions under the amendment offered the only thing you can do is to call a halt and pay him for everything he has done. If he wanted to obviate his lease, if he wanted to get rid of it, if he wanted to fail to comply with it, all he would have to do would be to lean on the gentleman's amendment and say, "I demand a lien, and that the court decree a lien on not only property put there but also on the Federal Government as well." Whoever heard of the law giving a tenant of the Government the right to decree a lien against the Government land? That is what the amendment does. Let me read the gentleman's amendment:

The court in adjudging a forfeiture may, as compensation to the lessee or others interested, decree a lien upon any land permanently improved by the lessee in a sum not exceeding the value added to the land by such improvement, such lien to be paid when the land is again sold or leased under the provisions of this act: Provided, That if when the land is again sold or leased such improvement shall have depreciated in value since such forfeiture, the lien may on application to such court be reduced accordingly: Provided further, That the court may deny compensation in whole or in part to anyone guilty of bad faith in securing the lease or in carrying out its provisions or the provisions of this act.

But I want to get back to the first of it. I again read:

The court in adjudging a forfeiture may, as compensation to the lessee—

Compensation for what? Because he broke the conditions that he himself made—or others interested, decree a lien upon any land permanently improved by the lessee in a sum not exceeding the value added to the land by such improvement—

And so forth.

Now, along comes the first lessee. He breaks his condition; but if he goes into court he has the right to demand that the court give him a lien on the Government land, the thing that we lease, the property that belongs to the Government, in order that the lessee may be justified, almost, in breaking those conditions. It ties the hands of the court, while the lessee may break the lease with impunity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I hope no such amendment as this will be agreed to. I do not believe that the gentleman, after thinking about it and reading section 30, will want it agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, my attention has been called to the last part of this original section. It is thought by some that that provides sufficient protection to the lessee. I do not believe it does. I do not believe that that is intended to accomplish the purpose of my amendment at all, but only to adjust disputes while the lease is in force and only for the purpose of continuing the lease in force. It reads:

And the lease may provide for resort to appropriate methods for the settlement of disputes or for remedies for breach of specified conditions thereof.

It seems clear to me that that was intended to give power to adjust differences while the lease remains in force.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the lease is not in force until forfeited by a court of competent jurisdiction?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is an interesting question. Ordinarily the lease can not be in force when an action is brought. The court should find the fact that a forfeiture has taken place and declare such forfeiture; the forfeiture takes the title, not the decree. Your right must be ripe at the time you bring suit. Under the language of this bill, however, there may be some doubt when the forfeiture actually takes place. But let that be as it may, it does not cut any figure in this matter, as I look at it. Could the Secretary of the Interior make a provision such as I suggest? Could he, after forfeiture, give to the lessee any compensation? From where would the money come? I am clearly of the opinion that he would have no such power and that this language was not intended to give him any such power.

The gentleman from Oklahoma just asked why these men should have protection. He asks if it is because they have violated the lease. No; it is because they have added permanent value to the property by parting with their money in good faith for that purpose. That is what the amendment provides. We ask simply that he be given a lien for the purpose of protecting his interest in that permanent improvement.

Mr. FERRIS. Should a lessee profit by his own wrong?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. He may not have done any wrong. He may have failed because he could not help himself. His competitor may have practically driven him out of the field, and he may not be to blame at all.

Mr. FERRIS. There are provisions covering that.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The mortgagee has no power under a lease or under any provision of the bill to protect himself. I ask that the man who puts the money into the property shall be protected. I do not ask that the dishonest man should get anything. I have carefully guarded that in the last provision of the amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. Let me inquire, Does the gentleman think that that arbitration provision means nothing? Can the gentleman conceive of the Department of Justice or anyone else who would institute proceedings against an honest man who in good faith has failed? On the contrary, it is almost impossible to get them to bring suits at all.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The gentleman is begging the question. This is a provision that only applies when confiscation does take place. It is only in that case that I make provision for the decree. It is where forfeiture is declared. There ought to be some power under the law whereby the interests of innocent parties may be protected. In many instances the forfeiture of leases causes great hardship. Every lawyer knows of cases of leases and of contracts for the purchase of land that have been forfeited where great injustice has been done. The men who are asked to put millions of money into these lands should not be placed in such a position. The public will eventually pay these losses. This bill will only give an opportunity for the rich man to develop. I insist the law should be such that not only will it apply to the rich, but also to the poor. Any man who wants to go to the assistance of his friend and put money into his enterprise should be permitted to do it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa and Mr. RAKER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. How was this time to be divided?

Mr. FERRIS. Nothing was said.

Mr. LENROOT. I desire to ask the Chairman how much time has been consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. Ten minutes; five minutes by the chairman and five minutes by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

Mr. STAFFORD. It was understood that 15 minutes was to be used by gentlemen on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. STAFFORD. And I so assured the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], that he and the gentleman from Wisconsin were to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, my friend, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], misconstrues, I think, not only the section itself but the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD]. The provisions of the section, had it been intended, as the gentleman from Oklahoma seems to think, ought to read quite differently from the text as it now stands. Instead of saying that a forfeiture may be declared by the court, it ought to have read to express the intention of the gentleman from Oklahoma, as I understand it, that proceedings to obtain a forfeiture might be instituted in a Federal court. Instead of so saying, we expressly authorize the court to declare a forfeiture. It does not, it is true, require the court should in all instances——

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will pardon me, the gentleman can not assume that the court is going to decree a forfeiture unless suit is brought for the purpose, can he?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman will pardon me if I say that he has entirely misunderstood what I stated. There is a vast difference between giving a court power and jurisdiction over an action and expressly giving it power to adjudicate a certain kind of judgment. The gentleman does not seem to apprehend my point.

Mr. FERRIS. I will hear the gentleman and see how well he understands it. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Now, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota does not provide that the lessee shall receive the expenses that he has incurred, but simply the value which he has added to the property, and even in the event he has added to the value of the property, the court is not required to award him this additional value, but may only do so in case of good faith, and also, we assume, in case that unavoidable casualty or misfortune which has caused him to make some breach of the lease. The remedy provided in the last part of the section is a remedy afforded the lessee and not the lessor. It is for a breach of the provisions or the settlement of some dispute. It affords the lessee no chance of recoupment in this direction.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. What would become of the land upon which the court gave a lien after a lien has been decreed?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What would become of it?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; how would you satisfy the lien?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The lessor would proceed, if necessary, in the same way we now proceed to satisfy a lien.

Mr. RAKER. Tell us how. How would the lien be satisfied?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. He would enforce the lien through proper proceedings in court, if necessary, if the amount of the lien was not paid.

Mr. RAKER. What would be the ultimate result—to sell the land?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Ordinarily, however, a subsequent purchaser would take it subject to the lien.

Mr. MANN. The amendment provides for that.

Mr. RAKER. Let us see whether it does or not. That is the reason why I asked the gentleman the question——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will ask the gentleman to state that in his own time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa declines to yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, in my judgment, fully provides for these matters.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am very sorry, but I can not yield further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. RAKER. Thank you.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The amendment is simply in accordance——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Very well.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Something has been said here about a possible forfeiture for a breach caused by unavoidable casualty. Could not the Government and the lessee make the lease cover a breach caused by unavoidable casualty or by the act of a public enemy or by act of nature, like an earthquake or tornado? Why could not all of these possibilities of which gentlemen speak be provided for by the terms of the lease itself? The language of the bill is that the lease may provide remedies for breach of specified conditions thereof.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will ask the gentleman not to make an argument instead of putting a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I am afraid the gentlemen who are advocating this amendment have lost sight of the purpose of this bill of authorizing a court to declare a forfeiture. It is for the purpose, and sole purpose, of securing the performance of the contract that the lessee has entered into with the Government, holding before him the possible penalty, to be declared by a court, of a forfeiture of his rights.

Now, with the amendment that is proposed, that is now pending before the committee, in a great many cases forfeiture might be no penalty at all if he is going to be made good for all that he has put into the property, and the purpose in authorizing a forfeiture entirely disappears. Now, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], when the water-power bill was up, discussed this with me to some extent, and at that time was of the opinion that a court in a proceeding brought to declare a forfeiture would have no discretion if there was any breach of conditions, but would be compelled to declare a forfeiture. In other words, that if the breach was found to exist a forfeiture must be declared. Of course, if that was the state of the law, it ought not to obtain in this kind of a case, because there ought to be a discretion and a power in the court when a proceeding is brought in equity, and it must be in equity to do equity between the parties. I have examined the question somewhat since that time and I am satisfied now, as I was then, that the purpose of this penalty being to secure the performance of this contract in any proceedings brought in court for a forfeiture the court of equity will take that case, and if there is any way by which equity can be done between the lessee and lessor—in other words, if the lessee can cure his default by any act—the court will not declare a forfeiture. The rule is very well settled by the courts.

I read just a paragraph from Story on Equity Jurisprudence. After stating the general principle of law, he said:

> In every such case the true test generally, if not universally, by which to ascertain whether relief can or can not be had in equity is to consider whether compensation can be made or not. If it can not be made, then courts of equity will not interfere—

In other words, will declare the forfeiture—

> If it can be made, then, if the penalty is to secure the mere payment of money, courts of equity will relieve the party upon paying the principal and interest. If it is to secure the performance of some collateral act or undertaking—

And that is this case—

> then courts of equity will retain the bill and will direct an issue of quantum damnificatus; and when the amount of damages is ascertained by a jury, upon the trial of such an issue, they will grant relief upon the payment of such damages.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if a proceeding is brought under this act to declare a forfeiture, the court will not declare the forfeiture unless the lessee refuses to do that which the court says ought to be equitably done, and if the lessee refuses to comply with what the court says ought to be done in equity, then he ought to suffer the penalty of the forfeiture of his lease.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Does the gentleman claim that that rule, which he has read from Story, has any application to the forfeiture of lease?

Mr. LENROOT. I do in this case; yes, sir.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Is it not a familiar doctrine that those leases are always canceled for failure to perform? The condition in the contract is that it shall be forfeited.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes, exactly; but it is not true always. In the payment of rent, even though there is a condition that it shall be forfeited in case of nonpayment, it has been held that a court of equity will relieve in that particular case; but generally in leases where the court will declare a forfeiture, or, in other words, not relieve against it, the parties themselves have declared there shall be a forfeiture. But in this case we do not declare a forfeiture; we simply declare the court may have the right to declare the forfeiture, and if the lessee refuses to do that which the court says in equity ought to be done he ought not to be indemnified for the money that he put into the property.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 55.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. VOLSTEAD and Mr. FERRIS took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 60.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 28. That all statements, representations, or reports required by the Secretary of the Interior under this act shall be upon oath, unless otherwise specified, and in such form and upon such blanks as the Secretary of the Interior may require.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 25, line 20, strike out the figures "28" and insert "27."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 29. That the provisions of this act shall apply to all lands of the United States which may have been or may be disposed of under laws reserving to the United States the coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium, with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same, subject to such conditions as to the use and occupancy of the surface as are or may hereafter be provided by law.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 26, line 1, strike out "29" and insert "28."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 26, line 1, after the word "shall," insert the word "also."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 26, line 2, after the word "all," insert the words "deposits of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium in the."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Page 26, line 5, after the word "States," strike out the words "the coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium" and insert "such deposits."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Page 26, line 7, after the word "conditions," strike out the words "as to the use and occupancy of the surface."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 30. That all moneys received from royalties and rentals under the provisions of this act, excepting those from Alaska, shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, but after use thereof in the construction of reclamation works and upon return to the reclamation fund of any such moneys in the manner provided by the reclamation act and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, 50 per cent of the amounts derived from such royalties and rentals so utilized in and returned to the reclamation fund shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury after the expiration of each fiscal year to the State within the boundaries of which the leased lands or deposits are or were located, said moneys to be used by such State for the support of public schools or other educational institutions, as the legislature of the State may direct: Provided, That any moneys which may accrue to the United States under the provisions of this act from lands within the naval petroleum reserves shall be deposited in the Treasury as "Miscellaneous receipts."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 26, line 10, strike out the figures "30" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "29."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 26, line 25, after the word "State," insert the words "or subdivisions thereof for the construction and maintenance of public roads or."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to that amendment. I would like to inquire whether this is in the happiest phraseology as to "subdivisions thereof." I assume that the purpose is that the moneys may be used by these subdivisions. In reading the bill I thought perhaps the language was used rather awkwardly, "to be used by such State or subdivisions thereof."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I will say in reply to the gentleman that some of the States have cooperative roads, operating between the counties and the States, where the legislature treats the county as an entity, and in such cases the legislature might want to appropriate part of the funds to the county as a county. If the gentleman has any suggestion about the language, we shall be glad to hear it, but I think this will cover it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, that is well enough.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, line 2, after the word "other," insert the word "public."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] offered an amendment. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MCLAUGHLIN:

"Page 26, line 11, after the word 'act,' strike out all the remainder of the section and insert the following language: 'shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.'"

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment with the idea of having legislation enacted in the proper way and a proper disposition made of public receipts and the revenues of public property.

It may be remembered that a few days ago, when we were considering the bill to provide for the development of water power on the public lands, I offered an amendment which, if adopted, would have provided for the depositing in the Treasury of the United States of money received as charges or rentals for use of land within the national forests, to be used as are other receipts of the national forests. That amendment was not agreed to. It may be, as some gentleman here has suggested, that this bill is air-tight, and that no amendments can be made except such as are presented by the committee itself. But I offer this amendment with the idea that the plan proposed by the bill is not proper. Money received from public property, all public receipts, ought to be turned into the Public Treasury, so that Congress may know the amount of them and the source of them, and that it may always be within the power of Congress to make appropriations of money, to know what use is to be made of it, how much of it is to be used for each and every particular purpose.

I venture to say there is not a gentleman on this floor who knows what the receipts available for the Reclamation Service have been up to this time, nor is there one who knows the amount of money already expended on reclamation projects.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, right there, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. Nor how much money will be needed, according to the estimates of any official, to complete what is known as the reclamation projects. Now I yield.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is correct in his last statement, but in the others he is entirely in error. His last statement as to how much is to be expended is true, but as to the proposition that no one knows how much has been expended he is in error. I have the figures right here.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Well, it is possible the gentleman from Oklahoma, the chairman of this committee, has those figures, but I doubt whether other gentlemen on the floor have any idea of how much money has been used on the projects, how much money is available, or how much money will be necessary to complete the projects.

When I presented my amendment a few days ago my colleague from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] made a statement as to the amount that had been used in reclamation projects and gave something of the history of those projects; and it appeared that the projects were started with the idea that they were to cost a comparatively small amount of money. We had the estimates of distinguished engineers. The money devoted to the purpose was all expended, and it was found that the projects had just been begun, and that immense sums of money running up, as I remember, to $75,000,000, in addition to all that had up to that time been appropriated or expended, would be or might be necessary to complete the projects. I think those figures came as a surprise to the membership of this House. The Members had no idea of such expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, is any more time desired on that side of the question?

Mr. MONDELL. How much time is the gentleman going to reserve?

Mr. FERRIS. I thought of reserving five minutes for the members of the committee.

Mr. MONDELL. I suggest that the gentleman reserve 10 minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the debate be allowed to run on for a little time. This is an important matter, the subject of receipts.

Mr. FERRIS. I did not intend to close debate on the section, but on the amendment. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that at the expiration of 15 minutes, debate on the amendment be closed.

Mr. MONDELL. I may want two or three minutes.

Mr. LEVER. And I would like to have a little time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the debate on this amendment be closed in 15 minutes, 5 minutes to be used by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN], who now has the floor, 5 minutes to be used by the committee, and 5 minutes by some one else who desires to speak in favor of the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. No, Mr. Chairman; the remaining five minutes is to be divided between the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the remaining five minutes to be divided between the gentleman from Wyoming and the gentleman from South Carolina. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, ought not the committee to have some time, too?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; I think the committee ought to have a few minutes. Say 10 minutes to be divided between the gentleman from Wyoming and the gentleman from South Carolina and myself. Is that satisfactory?

The CHAIRMAN. And 10 minutes to be divided between the gentleman from Wyoming, the gentleman from South Carolina, and the chairman of the committee. Is that it?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know the purpose of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] in presenting the figures and making the statement he did. Possibly it was because of a feeling of opposition to the reclamation projects; but I am not speaking with any feeling of opposition to those projects, or to the use of reasonable amounts of money to carry them out. I am simply insisting that the proper way to carry on legislative business is to have the money turned into the Treasury of the United States, and that Congress shall appropriate money for each and every several project, so that Congress may at all times know just what it is doing.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I am afraid I shall not have time, Mr. Chairman, I prefer to go on now and yield later if I have time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The plan proposed by the bill is a vicious and altogether improper way of carrying on public business. When I spoke the other day, I spoke partly on behalf of the Forest Service, because land within the national forests is to be used for the erection of dams, or dams are to be erected upon forest land, and are to be used in developing hydroelectric power. And my idea was that the rents and charges collected by the Government for the use of lands within the national forests ought to go into the Treasury of the United States, just as other receipts of the national forests go into the Treasury, to be used just as other receipts of the forests are used. That appears to me proper and just.

I know and appreciate the strenuous opposition on the part of some Members of the House to the entire national-forest policy. They oppose the policy, and fight almost every proposition relating to national forests incorporated in measures that come before the House. They would, if they could, wipe out all law for protecting our forest reserves. They wish to have all those forest lands, in fact, all of the public lands in the western part of the country, turned over to the States, to be used just as they please, that the Government shall part with its title and give up the idea of controlling its lands in any manner or respect whatever.

We know what has been the result of the Government being without laws, or of ineffective laws, for the protection or disposition of its property. The result has been that private interests have acquired the resources of this country; and I venture to say that if the public lands of the United States, including the forest lands, were turned over to the States, or if the laws relating to the forest reserves were repealed, within 48 hours the entire body of these lands would be in private ownership, monopolized as almost every acre of land available for purchase has been monopolized in the past.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I am afraid I have not the time. I will if I have further time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Now, I have no feeling whatever of opposition to the Reclamation Service; but we started out to use about $48,000,000, and without authority of Congress the officials in charge of the work spent, or obligated the Government to spend, about $73,000,000, if I remember the amounts correctly; and after these immense sums had been used, or obligations incurred, these same officials, supported by their very "efficient" engineers, called on Congress for money to complete the projects, telling us that a still further sum of $75,000,000 would be necessary. Now, that may have been a good use of money. The work may have been done properly. It may be a proper policy to continue; but the money to be realized under the law we are now making, the amount of which no human being can tell, ought to be first paid into the Treasury of the United States and appropriated from time to time, as Congress shall determine, so that Congress can keep track of the work and keep track of public money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope there is no gentleman, at least on this side, who has the views of certain things which have been expressed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN]. He is evidently agonizing because the farmers of Illinois own all of what was formerly the property of the Government in that State. He is sorrowful because the farmers of Michigan own all its broad and beautiful acres, which were once the property of the Government. He is thoroughly discouraged because the farmers of Iowa and Missouri have made those great Commonwealths by being able to secure title to what was once Government property.

Of course, the proposition offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] will not be adopted. It should not have a single vote, not even that of the gentleman from Michigan. I am of the opinion it would not, if he would stop to think about it. I am sure the gentleman from Michigan would not want to have all of the resources of Michigan laid under a 10, 15, or 20 per cent annual tax on the production and have the money go into the Treasury of the United States. We think that at least 50 per cent of this money should be paid to the States and the communities to compensate them for the taxes they will lose under this system; but the committee have proposed that it shall go into the reclamation fund, a perfectly proper, legitimate public service; and in this connection I want to say to my good friend from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN], as I said to my other good friend from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] the other day when he discussed the Reclamation Service, that I hope before he again discusses what has been done under the reclamation law he will better inform himself on the subject. [Applause.]

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] desire to be heard?

Mr. LEVER. No; I thank the gentleman; I do not.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] does not care to use his time, and I should like to be recognized for seven minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] is recognized for seven minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] comes in, and in a wholesale way proposes to take every cent of these royalties and put them into the Treasury of the United States. That is his side of it. A certain group of gentlemen here believe in doing that very thing. In a few moments the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], or probably some other gentleman who lives in the far West, will come in with an amendment proposing to deliver it all eo instanti direct to the States. Now, what have the committee done? The committee have done the thing that is reasonable, the thing that ought to be done, and have put the proceeds into the Reclamation Service. Let us then see if we are justified in doing that.

In 1902 Congress said, in the enactment of the Reclamation Service law, that every penny of the proceeds of the sale of the public lands should go into the Reclamation Service. What for? To build up and create a great service in the West, converting the bald, naked prairie into habitable homes. Since that time the department have been going along with irrigation as best they could. The receipts from this source have dwindled down from $9,000,000 in 1908 to $3,000,000 in 1915. Now, if it was right in 1902 to put the proceeds of the sale of the public lands into the Reclamation Service, the fee passing into the States for taxing purposes, surely it is right to put the proceeds of these royalties into the Reclamation Service, and keep the Reclamation Service going.

I can speak without any selfish interest on this proposition, because while my State is one of the semiarid States and while we have put into the fund six and a half million dollars we have never had a single acre irrigated. So my defense of the irrigation fund is without any selfish motive. But looking further than the individual rights of my State, I am not one that wants to strike down that great service in this country. In 1892 it was thought wise to begin this service, and every year it has been thought wise to maintain it, and only two or three years ago Congress was called upon and responded with an appropriation of $20,000,000 to keep the service going. Under the leases we do not provide that the lands shall be patented, so they will yield taxes, and so we ought to at least give them royalties, so that the irrigation fund may be kept going and so that it will not wither and die.

Let me call attention to the fact that about $85,000,000 has been expended for irrigation. A part of it was a $20,000,000 loan and the rest are the proceeds of the public lands. Some of it has been wasted, I have no doubt, not intentionally, but in experiments as to what they could do with water on worthless land. But for the $85,000,000 expended we have a lien or mortgage on the land irrigated, and that money is to be paid back.

Let us see what we are doing for rivers and harbors. The Federal Government has at one time and another expended over $800,000,000 for river and harbor improvements. This is not to be returned or even promised to be returned.

Now, I am not against river and harbor improvement. I have voted for it every year because I believe that it is a great national development and that it ought to be done. Perhaps mistakes are made there. The $850,000,000 is not to be paid back to the Government at all; while, on the other hand, these expenditures are to be paid back—the homesteaders who are trying to settle up the arid States in the West promise to pay back—whether they do it or not, they promise to pay it back.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. As a matter of fact, they are paying it back; why does the gentleman emphasize "promise"?

Mr. FERRIS. I think that is true—they are paying it back.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. How much money is to be realized under the leases you are providing for in this bill?

Mr. FERRIS. No one knows. You can judge something from the speeches that have been made here. The gentleman from Oregon said that it would take $20,000,000 out of the West, and a gentleman later on said that no lease would ever be executed under it, and therefore there would be no royalty.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Did not he say that it would take $20,000,000 out of one State?

Mr. FERRIS. No; not if I understood the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The statement was that if the water possibilities could be realized to the full capacity, it would take $20,000,000 out of one State.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Can the gentleman from Oklahoma give us any estimate as to the amount that would be realized under this bill?

Mr. FERRIS. No; no one knows.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Does that not support what I said—that we are providing for turning possibly untold millions of dollars into this fund?

Mr. FERRIS. I hope that is true. I hope that thing will happen, for if it does the House will place the stamp of approval on the work that the Public Lands Committee has been doing, and the fact that it has brought a razor in here that will shave. The standing indictment against this bill has been that it would not do anything—that no one would ever work under it.

Now, I am only giving you my own opinion, but I think that from oil and water power we shall get some pretty good returns. I doubt if we ever get much from coal for a long time. The fact is we have 450,000,000,000 tons of coal, roughly estimated, belonging to the Government, and there are 150,000,000,000 tons in private ownership. My opinion is that the Government coal is so far from the railroad, so far from the central market, that it will be a long time before anything is realized under it from coal. But as to the oil and water power, my opinion is that receipts will enrich the irrigation fund. You will get a good return, and it will build up the irrigation fund in the West; it will make States that have only 100,000 population now have double that amount. I believe it will develop things in the West generally. I think the bills we are passing will accomplish what is claimed for them. They have had careful consideration here on the floor, extended and patriotic consideration by the Committee on the Public Lands. The Secretary of the Interior has personally given unstinted and patriotic work on them. All of the departments have. I am personally proud of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired, and all time has expired, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the section and insert the following:

"That one-half of the royalties and rentals received under the provisions of this act shall be paid to the State within which the leased lands or deposits are located, to be used by such State or the subdivisions thereof for the construction and maintenance of roads and for the support of schools, as the legislature of the State shall direct, and one-half shall be paid into the reclamation fund.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take up the time of the committee for any considerable period, even if opportunity is given me in the discussion of this amendment, for I discussed it at some length in general debate, and I discussed a similar provision in the water-power bill when that bill was under consideration.

The section as it stands provides that the royalty and rentals shall flow into the irrigation fund. My amendment provides for a division, one half going to the State and one half to the reclamation fund. It will be remembered that this is a radical departure from past legislation. Heretofore we have disposed of the public lands and in due course of time they have passed into private ownership and become taxable, with all their values. We are now proposing to retain permanently from private ownership and taxation this valuable property of land and minerals.

It is our opinion that one-half of the receipts from royalties and rentals will not more than recompense us for the actual loss in revenues through our inability to tax values retained in the hands of the Federal Government. If it were a matter of selling lands at a nominal price and then turning the money into the Federal Treasury, that would be one thing, because the land sold would become taxable and we would have an opportunity to support the institutions of government by taxing the lands. When, however, we retain the lands permanently in the hands of the Federal landlord and exact a heavy rental, to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior, surely there can be no one who has considered the matter carefully, not even my friend from Michigan, who believes that under such conditions these great rentals and royalties, running on forever, covering a large portion of the lands and resources of a State or of a community, should all be taken out of the community, out of the State, even for so splendid a purpose as the reclamation of arid lands.

It is perhaps proper that half the funds should go into the reclamation fund; but surely these communities are entitled to compensation for the loss that they must sustain to their revenues under this system; and, more than that, if there be any real, sound argument for the establishment for a public leasing system, its strongest pillar and support is the claim, the hope, the expectation that through such a system, with all of its annoyances, with all of its liability to check development, the community may secure larger benefits as time passes than would be secured under a system of private ownership. That is one of the strongest arguments in favor of a public leasing system. That argument goes for naught if the revenues thus received from the depletion of the resources of a State are taken beyond its borders and its people receive no benefit. The cost of the maintenance of government goes on. Roads must be built, schools must be maintained, while the revenues flowing from these enormous resources are going out of the community beyond the borders of the States, to be used for other purposes, the people left without funds or opportunity to develop their country. It seems to me this is a very fair provision. As a matter of fact, these States and communities should have all of these moneys. No other theory is consistent with our idea of government, and it is only because the reclamation fund is one contributing to the upbuilding of this same western country that we approve or agree to the proposition of half of it going into the reclamation fund.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. It is true there is a provision in this section under which, after the money has been paid into the reclamation fund and then paid back, half of it shall go to the State for the purposes contemplated by my amendment. The difficulty with that is that it will be 20 or 25 or 30 years before these moneys are returned. It will be impossible to identify them, in any event, when they are returned; and if anyone objects, no dollar could ever come back to the States under that provision. Worse than that, these communities for 20 years, longer than the life of an ordinary oil field, as long as the life of an ordinary coal mine, must be deprived of this source of income, must build their roads, must educate their children, and the only satisfaction they would have is a hope deferred that at some time in the distant future some other generation may perhaps get some benefit.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I voted for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan because I have always been of the belief that all moneys received by the Government ought to be paid into the Treasury, to be at the disposition of Congress in its wisdom. Its wisdom may not always be as great as the wisdom of a former Congress, and yet during my experience here I have not seen that the Congress of 20 years ago was any wiser than the Congress now, or that the Congress before my friend from Washington [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] came into it knew any more than it has since he came. I am inclined to think that the wisdom increases gradually rather than retrogrades.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. For a question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Does the gentleman understand by this provision that this money would not go into the General Treasury?

Mr. MANN. No; but it goes into the General Treasury as a pledged fund. It is kept apart on the books of the Treasury. The gentleman knew, and I knew, perfectly well about that. I would be almost inclined, however, to vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] were it not for one thing, because I can not conceive of any reason why we should pay half of this money to the States eventually and not pay it to them from the start. If the States are entitled to half of the money, then those who live at the time the money is contributed are better entitled to it than are their descendants. But the reason I shall not vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming is very briefly stated. I do not think these reclamation projects ever intend to pay back the money to the Government. In the last Congress we put off the time for any payments for five years, gave them the money without interest.

Mr. MONDELL. Not on all of them.

Mr. MANN. On all of them except the preliminary payments, even those in the past as well as those in the future, and we extended the time of payment for the balance—the annual payments—for 20 years. But if we provide that half of the money when it is repaid shall go into the State treasuries, then we are sure to get the money back.

The gentleman from Wyoming says there is no way of distinguishing where this money goes to. I think he is incorrect. The books of the Treasury will show these funds kept separately, and they will show what projects received money out of this fund, and the Treasury Department and the Reclamation Service will at all times know just to a dollar, to a cent, how much of this money is in any particular reclamation project, and when the money is to be paid back the balance of the State which has received half the money that comes in will insist that the money be paid back so that the whole State may have the benefit of it, in spite of a few gentlemen who have gone into some place and reaped the special benefit of a special reclamation project. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to insert in the RECORD right here a table contained in the Fourteenth Annual Report of the Reclamation Service, 1914–15, which would answer all of the questions propounded by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN]. Secondly, on page 470 a table marked "14," in order to answer the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], which shows that there have been $15,359,956.59 already paid by these reclamation projects, and that we hope and expect and believe, and no western man ever had an idea different or contrary to that fact, that the Government would be repaid for every dollar expended on reclamation projects.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield.

Mr. MANN. I have not yet examined that table, but I do not believe upon examination it will show any $15,000,000 has been paid back on reclamation projects.

Mr. RAKER. I did not say that.

Mr. MANN. That is what the gentleman tried to lead us to believe.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman did not do anything of the kind.

Mr. MANN. I understood——

Mr. RAKER. What the gentleman understood and what the gentleman from California stated are entirely different things.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Not for the moment. I made a statement direct and positive to the fact, and irrespective of what the gentleman from Illinois might think or might believe and the unkind statements that he made are entirely two different things.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. No; I do not yield for the moment. A man gets up here and reads a record, and the gentleman makes an unkind comment here, just as he did last night. I realize the fact, and I realize the gentleman's astuteness, and I realize that he has a great body of men on the other side behind him and can always demand anything he wants; but, notwithstanding, such a statement of a gentleman of his ability becomes improper at this time, when one reads the record before the House to the end that information may be had.

I read exactly what is here. I gave the page showing the kind and character of receipts that have been collected from the reclamation fund, not only from rentals but temporary water rentals, transportation refunds, forfeitures by bidders and contractors, power and light, water-right construction charges, water-right operation and maintenance charges, overdisbursements, and miscellaneous, as well as the miscellaneous service, coming to the full amount, and showing that these people in the West have already paid into the reclamation fund this amount of money; and the persistent statement before the House that these people are trying to avoid their contracts by trying to get out of payment, or trying to defeat this Government in carrying out these most beneficial projects, is clearly uncalled for and ought not to be made, because no one has ever attempted to defeat the Government. The idea is these projects may be completed, and that as soon as they are completed and other projects—land lying in the same condition as these present projects before being started—might be used in making fertile, valuable, and useful the desert lands of the West.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from California will accord me another virtue—that of patience. It is one of the peculiarities of politics that when the Democrats are short of other things, they abuse the Republican leader. That is always safe. It never takes either acumen, intelligence, or any other attribute which naturally belongs to a Member of Congress, or properly. [Laughter on the Republican side.] The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] a moment ago stated that there had been paid back to the reclamation fund $15,000,000, and he had the record before him. There the gentleman stopped. Now, I have examined the reclamation-fund reports every year. I have not yet seen them this year, but I knew that statement was not correct; and out of kindliness of heart, because I wished to excuse the many inaccuracies the gentleman from California unintentionally perpetrates upon the House, I challenged the statement so that he might correct it. Thereupon he says there has been paid into the reclamation fund from a great many different sources a large amount of money—not paid back to the reclamation fund. Now, the gentleman will not state how much has been paid back to the reclamation fund.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will not the gentleman from Illinois state how much has been paid from the settlers last year?

Mr. MANN. I do not know. I just stated I have not seen that.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It is shown by the last report of the Reclamation Service, page 31, that during the last fiscal year there was paid back $644,544.54 from water-right charges.

Mr. MANN. That is, in the last year. The gentleman from California told the House that in the few years that it has been running there have been $15,000,000 paid back, and last year should have been by long odds the largest amount that was paid in.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly. I am willing to receive information.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH], wanting to be exceedingly fair, only referred to water-right repayment—that is, repayment of the building charge. There was another item of $1,764,962.48 in the last year, a very large proportion of which is water rental.

Mr. MANN. That is for the operation.

Mr. MONDELL. That is for operation and rental.

Mr. MANN. That is not paid back into the reclamation fund, and the gentleman from Wyoming, with all his acumen, ought not to attempt to mislead me on the subject.

Mr. MONDELL. I am not attempting to mislead the gentleman. I could not if I would, and I would not if I could. The money, in the first instance, is paid out for a certain purpose and paid back with a profit. In other words, they paid back the cost of maintenance and some more, and nearly three-quarters of a million on the building charges.

Mr. MANN. Why, Mr. Chairman, we have reached that point where our friends from the West in their zeal compliment themselves that they even pay the operating expenses of these water-power and reclamation projects. I have no doubt that they will continue to do that during this generation, or, it may be, if my friend from Wyoming remains in the House long enough he will want the General Government to pay the operating expenses as well as the original cost.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to make this suggestion. I have made it to him before, but I hope this time he will remember it. The only difficulty we have had in the West with regard to repayments; that is, the only arguments that have been made by the farmers at any time against repayments have been by quoting Members on the floor of the House, among others my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN], to the effect that they did not expect the money would ever be paid back. And every time a statement of that kind is made it goes out into our country. And, of course, there are some people everywhere who would like to escape their debts, which makes it more difficult to make these collections. I hope we will not hear any more of it.

Mr. MANN. If I make it more difficult to make collections the gentleman ought to get busy, then.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment, and to discuss for a few moments the difficulties which result where the income from resources on Federal domain in the far Western States is taken into the United States Treasury, there to be held for a time and then a portion of it to be returned to some other Federal activity.

In the amendment now under consideration it is proposed to place in the Federal Treasury all of the moneys received from long-term leases of mining land. Do this, and how may the Western States hope for any return from resources within their own boundaries? True, these resources belong to the Federal Government, and we so acknowledged in accepting our enabling acts, but we have felt that the United States Government meant "to have and to hold" them only until we became of age, and that ultimately we might come into our own. But under a 50-year renewable leasing system we never shall. And now the amendment just offered proposes to take all of the proceeds from the leases away from the States. Could anything be more unfair?

These debates as to where the lease money for water-power sites on the nonnavigable streams, and for coal lands, and for mining generally, will be read with much interest by the people of the State that I have the honor in part to represent. We have had some experience with the pay-back-the-money scheme. We receive 25 per cent of the sales of timber in the Federal forest reserves. That per cent comes back to the particular counties which have area in the particular forest reserve from which the timber has been sold.

That seems simple; but, so far as I can learn, there has always been a misunderstanding among the people of Washington about it. Many think that all of the 25 per cent from all the reserves in the State of Washington is divided among all the counties which have territory in the reserves. But this is not the case. A sale of timber in Jefferson County in no way benefits Okanogan County. No part of the return from that sale goes to any county except the three other counties which, along with Jefferson, have area in the great Olympic Forest Reserve, which itself comprises 1,652,000 acres. The 25 per cent of that Jefferson County sale goes to Clallam, Jefferson, Mason, and Grays Harbor Counties, in proportion to their area in that reserve, which is as follows:

County.	Acres.	Per cent of area.
Jefferson	709,575	48.75
Clallam	442,410	30.40
Mason	172,497	10.53
Grays Harbor	172,454	10.32

Mr. Chairman, in the State of Washington there are 11 forest reserves. One runs over into Idaho and one runs into Oregon. According to the statement I hold in my hand there has been returned to the forest reserve counties of the State of Washington for eight years ending June 30, 1915, the sum of $215,744.12. This is an average of $26,968 per year. There are 25 forest reserve counties in the State of Washington. If that $26,968 had been divided equally among them, each forest reserve county would have received $1,000 a year. But the fund is not divided that way. Olympic National Forest sales provide a 25 per cent return to Olympic National Forest counties. For instance, Mason County in 1913 received as its share of the 25 per cent the great sum of $24.65. Think of it, $24.65—for what? To quote the words of the act of Congress, February 1, 1905, "for benefit of the public schools and public roads." The total sum returned to the State that year as 25 per cent was $33,109.69.

Mr. Chairman, I have stated as clearly as I could the distribution of the 25 per cent fund. For lack of time I have not discussed the additional 10 per cent which the Forest Service receives for a road and trail fund, to use as it pleases in any forest reserve in the State. For the present, let me say that to date none of that 10 per cent has been used in the Olympic reserve. Now, let me state the distribution in other words by reading the exact language of this paper, signed by C. B. Kegley, master of the Washington State Grange, and by F. W. Lewis, secretary. The introduction says:

STATEMENT OF FOREST RESERVE FUNDS.

An act of Congress, approved February 1, 1905, reads as follows: "That hereafter 25 per cent of all money received from each forest reserve during any fiscal year, including the year ending June 30, 1908, shall be paid at the end thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State or Territory in which said reserve is situated, to be expended for the benefit of the public schools and public roads of the county or counties in which the forest reserve is situated."

As a result of this act there has been paid to the State of Washington 25 per cent of receipts from national forest reserve, as follows:

Fiscal year:
1908	$13,855.31
1909	16,017.56
1910	23,671.89
1911	24,111.36
1912	31,895.21
1913	33,109.69
1914	35,637.54
Total for 8 years	215,744.12

The Agricultural appropriation act for 1913 authorized the setting aside of the road and trail fund, 10 per cent of receipts, for the fiscal year 1912:

"That an additional 10 per cent of all moneys received from the national forests during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, shall be available at the end thereof, to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture for the construction and maintenance of roads and trails within the national forests in the States from which such proceeds are derived; but the Secretary of Agriculture may, whenever practicable, in the construction and maintenance of such roads, secure the cooperation or aid of the proper State or Territorial authorities in the furtherance of any system of highways of which such roads may become a part."

The appropriation act for 1914 contained a similar provision and continued it to subsequent years.

The road and trail fund, 10 per cent, for Washington is as follows:

Fiscal year:
1912	$12,759.08
1914	14,255.02
1915	14,978.23
Total	55,236.21

The fund derived under this provision of law is not distributed among the forests according to collection, but is regarded as a State fund, to be expended on the forests where it appears it will be of most advantage to the State in general.

Then follows a long dash, and the following:

Congressman ALBERT JOHNSON proposes in a bill recently introduced to build a part of the Olympic highway along the western side of the Olympic Peninsula by a loan to the State of Washington from the National Government, the total sum to be repaid through a reduction of the school and road moneys paid the State by the Forest Service.

The forest reserves in Washington are located in 25 counties, each receiving its share of the 25 per cent forest reserve fund for public schools and public roads. The counties reached by this proposed highway would be three—Clallam, Jefferson, and Grays Harbor (formerly Chehalis). Twenty-two counties are to be asked to yield their share of school and road funds in order that three may have this highway.

Note again carefully the provisions for use of road and trail fund, which does not revert to counties but may be used where it appears it will be of most advantage to the State in general.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, just four counties would be called on to pay back—Clallam, Jefferson, Grays Harbor, and Mason—after five years, at a rate of 15 per cent of the 25 per cent they received from forest-reserve sales. The statement of the grange continues as follows:

Why should Okanogan County, receiving in 1915 $12,121.90 for schools and roads, be asked to build a highway on the Olympic Peninsula? Why should Ferry, Chelan, Stevens, and Pend Oreille yield their school and road funds for an Olympic Highway?

And, indeed, why should they? It is not proposed that they should. If the forest-reserve counties of the State received as 25 per cent in 1915 the sum of $37,445.56 and Okanogan County received $12,121.90, it is very plain that the Okanogan reserve had large sales, while the 10 other reserves had small sales. In fact, the four counties in the Olympic reserve received in 1915 a total of only $4,494.75. They got nothing from the Okanogan sales, and if there shall be big sales in 1916 Okanogan will receive no part of their 25 per cent.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, we come to the resolutions, of which what I have read seem to be a sort of argument and introduction. I quote:

Whereas Congress has appropriated 25 per cent of receipts from national forest resources to the counties of our State in which forest reserves are located, to be used for public schools and public roads within said counties; and

Whereas these counties, 25 in all, need every dollar they can get for the development of schools and roads within their borders; and

Whereas Congressman JOHNSON proposes by a bill introduced in Congress to secure a loan from the National Government to construct a section of Olympic Highway through Clallam, Jefferson, and Grays Harbor Counties, the same to be repaid by deductions from the 25 per cent forest reserve fund appropriated for use of schools and roads in each county; and

Whereas this would deprive the people of 22 counties not benefited by said highway of their just share of funds for schools and roads for a number of years; and

Whereas Congress has further provided that 10 per cent of forest resources be used for roads and trails, to be expended on the forests where it will be of most advantage to the State in general, thus providing a fund for such highway, if it is deemed advisable: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we are opposed to diverting any moneys from the schools and roads of the respective counties for a highway fund such as proposed in Congressman JOHNSON'S bill.

Adopted by the Washington State Grange executive committee, in session this 6th day of January, 1916.

C. B. KIGLEY, Master.
F. W. LEWIS, Secretary.

Now, you see, Mr. Chairman and Members, the State grange, an important organization in my State, has the impression that the funds returned to the Olympic Forest Reserve counties are scattered among 25 forest reserve counties, where, as a matter of fact, all except four of the counties participate in other forest reserve funds. That is what we get into when we take money away from a State and attempt to parcel it back in dabs and driblets.

I am glad the grange has called attention to the bill for building roads in and adjacent to the forest reserves. It will result in good discussion and better understanding.

How are we going to get roads into, around, or through these great areas?

The States should not be asked to build them.

The 25 per cent return is not enough to build them.

The additional 10 per cent is handled by the Forest Service in its own way.

The United States Treasury gets and keeps 65 per cent of our forest sales. We want to borrow it without interest, the counties benefited to pay it back by letting the Government withhold 10 per cent of the 25 per cent after five years. We propose to use the first available $100,000 for the Olympic National Forest, the next $100,000 for the Columbia National Forest, the third $100,000 for Rainier or some other of the 11 great reserves in our State—any one—I do not care which, if we can get started. Then the grange and other organizations will be among the first to indorse this rational plan for Government aid for roads into or adjacent to Government property.

No; I am not afraid that these western organizations will continue to oppose this measure, but I am afraid that eastern Congressmen, who do not understand the difficulties of long-range Federal control—3,200 miles in this case—will oppose, and will go on passing bills to hang us up, blight our prospects, and take away the income from the resources within our boundaries.

It will not be very many years before just such problems as now confront the Forest Service will confront the department handling this leasing scheme. The Forest Service says that it must have money to build some trunk-line roads through forest reserves, and the only way they can see that they can get it is from the money which comes in through the sales of forest-reserve timber.

Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks by inserting a copy of House bill 6867.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the bill referred to by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The bill referred to is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6867) to advance to the State of Washington the sum of $100,000 for the construction of a road within and adjacent to the Olympic National Forest.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized to expend from moneys received during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, from the national forests in the State of Washington, exclusive of the 25 per cent of receipts now paid to the State for the benefit of public schools and public roads under the act of May 23, 1908 (34 Stat., p. 251), and the 10 per cent of receipts expended under the act of May 10, 1912 (37 Stats., p. 269), in the construction of roads and trails, not exceeding $100,000 for the construction of a road approximately 60 miles in length between Quinianlt, Grays Harbor County, and Forks, Clallam County, within and adjacent to the Olympic National Forest, in the State of Washington, said road to be a continuation of the State road known as the Olympic Highway.

SEC. 2. That, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, in lieu of the 25 per cent to be granted the State of Washington under the act of May 23, 1908, out of receipts from the Olympic National Forest, there shall be granted the State of Washington 10 per cent of the gross receipts until such time as is provided for in section 3 of this act for the benefit of the public schools and public roads in the counties in which the aforesaid national forest is situated.

SEC. 3. That when the Secretary of Agriculture shall notify the Secretary of the Treasury that the 15 per cent of the gross receipts from the Olympic National Forest which is withheld under section 2 of this act amounts to $100,000 the reduction hereby made in the percentage to be paid to the State of Washington under the act of May 23, 1908, shall no longer apply.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairmain, I am not sure whether or not I got consent to insert them, or whether it was in my statement that the tables referred to by me under this report, Document No. 58, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, would be inserted in the RECORD. I made a statement based upon them, and I ask unanimous consent that the tables be inserted in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to insert certain tables in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following are the tables referred to:

COLLECTIONS.

The two tables below give information as to collections that have been made under the reclamation operations. Table 14 gives an analysis of the sources of all cash collections to June 30, 1915, while Table 15 gives, by projects, the amount collected for water-right charges.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, if the chairman of the committee will permit me, I wish to say that in discussing the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD]——

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that at the expiration of six minutes, five minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] and one minute by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE], the debate close on this section and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, in reply to a question asked me by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], through inadvertently leaving out several words my remarks were susceptible to a construction that I did not at all intend, and doubtless they seemed quite discourteous to the gentleman from Oklahoma. If the gentleman from Oklahoma failed to apprehend the point I was endeavoring to make, it was undoubtedly entirely my fault and not his.

I wish to say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that nothing was further from my intention than to reflect in the least upon his ability or upon his fitness to manage the bill which is now before the House.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. I can assure the gentleman that I took no offense at what he said. I knew the gentleman was trying to accomplish something that he believed was meritorious, and I had no feeling about it. In fact I had forgotten what the gentleman said.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am very glad to hear it. Mr. Chairman, and the statement I make is not necessary in behalf of the gentleman from Oklahoma, whose ability is well known by the Members of this House and whose courtesy is always uniform toward all Members. But I thought it was due to this House and to myself also to make this statement.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in the amendment that was offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], but I do not desire at this time further to enter into a discussion of the merits of that amendment.

I want to enter my protest against the general provisions of this bill, which are felt so keenly by my State, and I desire at this time to join the ranks of such Members of this House as have from time to time quoted Scripture in justification or explanation of their position. I refer you to the fourth Psalm and second verse, where you will find this language:

> O ye sons of men, how long will ye turn my glory into shame?
> How long will ye love vanity and seek after leasing? Selah.

[Laughter.]

Now, gentlemen, the proponents of this measure may find their faith shaken in their present course in the fifth Psalm and sixth verse:

> Thou shalt utterly destroy them that speak leasing.

[Laughter.]

Gentlemen, I have warned you. Take due notice and govern yourselves accordingly. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 31. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to prescribe necessary and proper rules and regulations and to do any and all things necessary to carry out and accomplish the purposes of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, line 8, strike out the figures "31" and insert the figures "30."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, line 11, add a proviso, as follows:
"Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed or held to confer or limit the rights of the States or other local authority from exercising any rights which they may have to levy and collect taxes upon improvements, output of mines, or other rights, property, or assets of any lessee."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the language here is that "nothing in this act shall be construed or held to confer or limit," and so forth. If it neither confers nor limits, what does it do? What is the use of putting a thing in that shows on its face it neither goes forward nor backward?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, may I reply to the gentleman just a word?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. My notion is very much like the gentleman's as to this language. A letter came from the Acting Director of the Reclamation Service which purported to hold and to say that the improvements on reclamation projects could not be taxed, and——

Mr. MANN. I understand the point of that. If the language of the bill should be that "nothing should be construed or held to limit the rights of a State," that would be intelligible; but if you say "shall not confer"——

Mr. FERRIS. I do not believe in conferring any additional rights on the State to tax Government property. Of course, I am not in favor of taking any rights away.

Mr. MANN. This is not a right to tax Government property. It seems to me the use of the language in the bill may be inimical to the purposes for which it is used. The purpose, as I understand, of this provision is not to interfere by any action with the rights of the States to levy taxes against this property.

Mr. FERRIS. We wanted to completely hurdle that question.

Mr. MANN. But when you say nothing in the act shall confer a right, you may thereby be denying the right of the States.

Mr. FERRIS. We did not intend to do that. Personally, I may say, I would like to see the language go out, but there are some members of the committee who feel keenly about it and desire to have it retained. However, in my opinion, it does not amount to anything. There is a wide difference of opinion about the queston of taxation, not only in the committee but in the department. I personally think we ought not to confer any more rights than the States have, or take any away. This is primarily a leasing bill, and we did not want to legislate on the subject at all. We can not cure all the ills in this bill and we wanted to leave it absolutely alone.

Mr. MANN. I suppose we are all agreed that if the lessee puts up a plant under the terms of this act, his plant is subject to State taxation?

Mr. FERRIS. I think there is no doubt about that, and I have brief here to show it.

Mr. MANN. I suppose we all agree about that, and it was not the design at all to prevent the State from taxing the improvements on the plant of the lessee. While it could not tax the land to the extent that it could sell the land for taxes and take away the Government title, it could tax it as to anything else.

Mr. FERRIS. And that ought to be so.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will say that I am probably responsible for having this language inserted here. I did not like the word "confer" in there, but the committee insisted upon that. As stated by the chairman of the committee, there was a decision issued and published in the regular December number of the Reclamation Record, by the chief counsel of the Reclamation Service (Mr. King), holding that the States or counties had no authority to tax improvements upon any of the homesteads under reclamation projects until final proof, and he said he believed not until patent issued.

Mr. MANN. I understand. I was not objecting to that part of the language.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Just a moment. My thought about the matter was that that to a certain extent unsettled the subject out there, and we did not want Congress to be legislating in any way that might be construed as an acquiescence in that construction.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] makes a suggestion which may be proper, to strike out the language "confer or limit" and insert the word "affect," so that it would read:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed or held to affect the rights of the States—

And so forth.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I think that would be a very proper amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. I think the suggestion is good, and we would be glad to adopt the gentleman's language. I would be glad if the gentleman would offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois offer an amendment?

Mr. MANN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out, in line 12, the words "confer or limit" and inserting the word "affect."

Mr. FERRIS. That is undoubtedly better.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. You will have to follow that by striking out the words "from exercising" and inserting the words "to exercise."

Mr. MANN. That will come in as a separate amendment later.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment on page 27, line 12, by striking out the words "confer or limit" and inserting the word "affect."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Wisconsin has an amendment.

Mr. MANN. It is to strike out the words "from exercising," in line 13, and inserting the words "to exercise."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, line 13, strike out the words "from exercising" and insert the words "to exercise."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the record should stand quite as it would stand with the statement of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] as to the opinion that he refers to. I understood him to say that it was a decision of the department with reference to this question of the right of taxation. The fact is that it was a voluntary letter written by a lawyer in the Reclamation Service. It is not an official decision of the department, and I think I am safe in saying that the department has not in any way ratified that opinion.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin that that is correct. I wrote to the Secretary of the Interior and asked whether or not the Interior Department approved of that decision by Mr. King, and I have just to-day received a letter, signed by Secretary Lane, in which he says that the Interior Department does not approve of it, and he inclosed me a copy of a lengthy brief on the subject. But, nevertheless, that has gone out as an official opinion, and has had a tendency to disturb things throughout the reclamation projects. Secretary Lane's letter to me is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 12, 1916.

HON. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. TAYLOR: I am in receipt of your letter of December 30, 1915, calling attention to a letter addressed by the chief counsel of the Reclamation Service to Mr. Samuel L. McGee, of Pomona, Cal., copy of which letter is printed in the Reclamation Record for the month of December, 1915. The letter expressed the opinion that certain improvements upon lands within reclamation projects, the title to which remains in the United States, are not taxable by the States.

As I understand it, this letter simply represents the individual opinion of the writer, and is not a decision of this department, nor does it involve a matter in which it has jurisdiction. As you will perceive, it can be nothing but an opinion, because ultimately the question of whether the improvements upon homesteads, mining, or other claims, the legal title to which still remains in the United States, may be taxed must be determined by the courts, should the parties interested resist payment of the taxes. A memorandum prepared for me by one of the attorneys in this department, copy attached, appears to support the right of the State to tax improvements, citing numerous decisions of the Federal and State courts in support of this view.

It is a fact that for many years various Western States have recognized the right of taxation over improvements upon public lands included in pending claims, the legal title to which has not passed from the United States, and authorities, including those cited in the attached memorandum, indicate that this right has been sustained by the State and Federal courts in numerous instances.

Cordially, yours, FRANKLIN K. LANE.

Mr. FERRIS. I have the letter and a copy of the brief referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], and think it would be well to let them go into the RECORD. Unless there be objection, I will insert them in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that certain documents referred to by him may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The documents referred to are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 6, 1916.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FERRIS: My attention has been recently called to a letter addressed by the chief counsel of the Reclamation Service to Mr. Samuel L. McGee, of Pomona, Cal., a copy of which is printed in the Reclamation Record for the month of December, 1915, the letter expressing the opinion that improvements upon lands within reclamation projects, the title to which remains in the United States, are not taxable by the State in which situate.

As I understand it, this letter simply represents the individual opinion of the writer, and is not a decision of this department in the broad sense, nor does it involve a matter over which this department has jurisdiction. As you will readily perceive, it can be nothing but an opinion, because ultimately the question of whether improvements upon homesteads, mining, or other claims, the legal title to which still remains in the United States, may be taxed must be determined by the courts, should persons taxed resist payment thereof. I have had the general subject investigated, however, by one of the attorneys in this department, and attach a memorandum citing various authorities, which would seem to support the right of the States to tax such improvements, among the cases cited being that of Forbes v. Gracey (94 U. S., 762), which held that not only the mineral output but the value of the possessory right might be made the subject of taxation. See also case of Elder v. Wood (208 U. S., 226) and other cases cited in the memorandum.

The fact is that for many years the various Western States have exercised the right of taxation over improvements upon public lands included in claims, the legal title to which has not passed from the United States, and the authorities, including those cited in the attached memorandum, indicate that this right has been sustained by both State and Federal courts in numerous instances.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE.

MEMORANDUM.

The water-power bill, considered by Congress at the last session and proposed to be reintroduced at the coming session of Congress, contemplates the granting of the right to use public lands for the generation, development, and transmission of hydroelectric power for periods of 50 years, the right to be at the expiration of the period named, and at the option of the United States, renewed to the original permittee or lessee, or taken over by the United States upon payment to the original permittee of the fair value of all property other than public lands or rights, or the granting of a similar permit to a third party, on condition that he pay for the properties. The bill also provides for the payment of a charge or rental for the lands permitted to be used, which may be measured by the power developed and sold. The so-called general leasing bill contemplates the leasing of the fuel and fertilizer minerals, coal, gas, oil, phosphate, and nitrates upon a royalty basis, the proceeds to be divided between the States and the reclamation fund. In connection with these measures some question has arisen as to whether the exaction of a Government rental or charge will prevent the States wherein the lands are situate from taxing the improvements, rights, and interests or products of the permittees or lessees.

TAXING POWER OF STATES.

The taxing power of a State is one of its attributes of sovereignty. And where there has been no compact with the Federal Government or cession of jurisdiction for the purposes specified in the Constitution, this power reaches all the property and business within the State which are not properly denominated the means of the General Government, and as laid down by this court it may be exercised at the discretion of the State. (Nathan v. Louisiana, 8 How., 73; 17 U. S., 505.)

It being the policy of the law to tax all property not expressly exempted, it is incumbent on one claiming an exemption to find and point out an express constitutional or statutory exemption. (State v. Holcomb, Cudahy Packing Co., intervenor, 106 Pac., 1030; Kans.)

PUBLIC LANDS AND FEDERAL AGENCIES NOT TAXABLE.

Lands belonging to the United States can not be taxed by a State (United States v. Southern Oregon Co., 196 Fed., 423); and lands allotted to Indians, but held in trust by the United States, as well as personal property purchased for and furnished to the Indians with money of the Government are not taxable (United States v. Rickert, 188 U. S., 432); nor can a Federal instrumentality acting under congressional authority be subjected to an occupation or privilege tax by a State (Choctaw, Oklahoma & Gulf R. R. Co. v. Harrison, 235 U. S., 292).

The franchise of a corporation of the United States is not subject to taxation by a State. (Central Pacific Railroad Co. v. California, 162 U. S., 91.)

PROPERTY AND POSSESSORY RIGHTS TAXABLE.

But the property of agencies of the United States, of companies holding franchises from the United States, and rights and interests in or to public lands, superable and assessable separate and apart from such lands, are subject to taxation. (Id.)

Possessory rights in public lands are a kind of property recognized as such since the earliest days of this Government. (Lamb v. Davenport, 18 Wall., 307.)

In the case of Forbes v. Gracey (94 U. S., 762), involving the taxation not only of the mineral output, but of the value of the possessory right of the Consolidated Virginia Mining Co. in the Comstock lode, the Supreme Court of the United States said:

"As we construe the statutes of the United States and the recognized rule of the Government on this subject, the moment this ore becomes detached from the soil in which it is embedded it becomes personal property, the ownership of which is in the man whose labor, capital, and skill has discovered and developed the mine and extracted the ore or other mineral product. It is then free from any lien, claim, or title of the United States and is rightfully subject to taxation by the State as any other personal property is."

In the same case, speaking of possessory rights in and to mining claims, the court said:

"Those claims are the subject of bargain and sale and constitute very largely the wealth of the Pacific Coast States. They are property in the fullest sense of the word. * * * Why may it not also be made subject to a lien for taxes, and the claim, such as it is, recognized by statute, be sold to enforce the lien? We see nothing in principle or in any interest which the United States has in the land to prevent it."

In the case of Elder v. Wood (208 U. S., 226), involving an interest in a mining claim in Nevada which had been sold for taxes, the Supreme Court of the United States, speaking of the opinion of the State court, said:

"That court held what was assessed was not the land on which the mining claim was located, but the claim itself; that is to say, the right of possession of the land for mining purposes. It is agreed that the Comstock lode was a 'valid subsisting mining location,' and at the time of the assessment of the tax Wilhelmina Gude was the owner of the undivided interest in it which is in controversy here. Such an interest from early times has been held to be property distinct from the land itself, vendible, inheritable, and taxable. (Forbes v. Gracey, 94 U. S., 762; Bell v. Meagher, 104 U. S., 279, 283; Manuel v. Wulff, 152 U. S., 505, 510; St. Louis Mining Co. v. Montana Mining Co., 171 U. S., 650, 655; 1 Lindley on Mines, secs. 535–542, inclusive.) The State therefore had the power to tax this interest in the mining claim and enforce the collection of the tax by sale. The tax deed conveyed merely the right of possession and affected no interest of the United States."

See also Goldfield Consolidated Co. v. State of Nevada (127 Pac., 77); Nephi P. & M. Co. v. Juab County (93 Pac., 53, Utah).

TAXATION OF IMPROVEMENTS ON SURFACE OF UNPATENTED MINING CLAIMS.

In the case of Cobban v. Meagher (113 Pac., 290) the Supreme Court of Montana held:

"We can distinguish no difference between the use of the surface ground of a patented claim for other than mining purposes and that of an unpatented claim, and we therefore hold that the surface ground of an unpatented mining claim when used for other than mining purposes is subject to taxation in this State when it has a separate and independent value for such other purposes."

WATER RIGHTS TAXABLE.

Water rights held separate and apart from land are treated as separate property and taxable by the States. (Wyoming Central Irrigation Co. v. Farlow, 114 Pac., 635, Wyoming; Murray v. Montrose County, 65 Pac., 26, Colorado; Helena Water Works v. Settles, 95 Pac., 838, Montana; California Water Co. v. Los Angeles County, 101 Pac., 547.)

FRANCHISES GIVEN BY UNITED STATES NOT TAXABLE, BUT PROPERTY OF CORPORATION HOLDING FRANCHISE IS TAXABLE.

In the case of Central Pacific Railroad Co. v. California (162 U. S., 125), the Supreme Court said, referring to the previous decision of the court, reported in One hundred and twenty-seventh United States, pages 1, 38, 40:

"Thus it was reaffirmed that the property of a corporation of the United States might be taxed, though its franchises, as, for instance, its corporate capacity, and its power to transact its appropriate business and charge therefor, could not be. It may be regarded as firmly settled that although corporations may be agents of the United States, their property is not the property of the United States, but the property of the agents, and that a State may tax the property of the agents, subject to the limitations pointed out in Railroad against Peniston."

In the latter case (18 Wall., 5) the Supreme Court said, in substance, that the exemption of agencies of the United States Government from taxation by the State is dependent upon the question of whether or not the tax would deprive them of the power to serve the Government, and that a tax upon their property, having no such effect, and leaving them free to discharge the duties they have undertaken to perform, may be rightfully laid by the States.

PROPERTY NOT EXEMPT FROM TAXATION BECAUSE ON LANDS OF THE UNITED STATES.

The fact that under the right or permission accorded by the Revised Statutes of the United States a telegraph company occupies with its line post roads of the United States does not operate to exempt its property from taxation by a State, the Supreme Court holding in the case of Western Telegraph Co. v. Massachusetts (125 U. S., 530):

"The tax in the present case, though nominally upon the shares of the capital stock of the company is in effect a tax upon that organization on account of the property owned and used by it in the State of Massachusetts, and the proportion of the length of its lines in that State to their entire length throughout the whole country is made the basis for ascertaining the value of the property. We do not think that such a tax is forbidden by the acceptance, on the part of the telegraph company, of the rights conferred by No. 5263 of the Revised Statutes nor by the commerce clause of the Constitution."

Personal property upon Indian reservations is subject to taxation, the Supreme Court holding, in substance, that an act of the Legislature of Oklahoma Territory making cattle grazing on Indian reservations subject to taxation was legal and constitutional (Thomas v. Gay, 169 U. S., 264); and in the case of Maricopa & Phoenix Railroad v. Arizona (156 U. S., 347), holding that the property of a railroad company within an Indian reservation was subject to taxation by the Territorial government of Arizona:

"It is wholly immaterial whether the rights vested in the corporation by the act of Congress were rights of ownership or merely those which result from the granting of the easement. Whatever they were, they were taken out of the reservation by virtue of the grant and came, to the extent of their withdrawal, under the jurisdiction of the Territorial authority. The fact that Congress reserved the power to alter, amend, or repeal the statute in no way affected the authority of the Territory over the rights granted, although the duration of that authority may depend on the exercise by Congress of the rights reserved. The method of assessing railroads provided for in the statute was to treat each road as a unit embracing the sum of its franchises, property, and rights. The division of the total amount of the one assessment of the property of the road into certain sums per mile was a mere method of stating the assessment and did not change the real unit forming the basis of taxation, the railroad in its entirety comprising every element entering therein which could be made assessable. This being the case, it was clearly lawful for the taxing authorities of the Territory to consider the rights granted by the act of Congress and enjoyed by the railroad in making up the sum of the assessment upon its total property."

See also Utah & Northern v. Fisher (116 U. S., 28); also Rice v. Hammonds (91 Pac., 698), holding personal property on a military reservation subject to taxation.

CONSTRUCTION OF IMPROVEMENTS UNDER DIRECTION AND AUTHORITY OF CONGRESS DOES NOT IN ITSELF EXEMPT THEM FROM TAXATION.

In the case of Thomson v. Pacific Railroad (9 Wall., 579) it was contended that the railroad having been constructed under the direction and authority of Congress for uses and purposes of the United States, and being a part of a system of roads so constructed, was exempt from taxation under State authority. The Supreme Court, in overruling this contention, held:

"No one questions that the power to tax all property, business, and persons within their respective limits is original in the States and has never been surrendered. It can not be so used, indeed, as to defeat or hinder the operations of the National Government, but it will be safe to conclude in general, with reference to persons and State corporations employed in Government service, that when Congress has not interposed to protect their property from State taxation such taxation is not obnoxious to that objection."

See also Lane County v. Oregon (7 Wall., 77); National Bank v. Commonwealth (9 Wall., 353).

INTANGIBLE PROPERTY IS SUBJECT TO TAXATION.

In the case of Adams Express Co. v. Ohio (166 U. S., 185), the Supreme Court held, according to the syllabus of the case:

In the complex civilization of to-day a large portion of the wealth of a community consists of intangible property, and there is nothing in the nature of things or in the limitations of the Federal Constitution which restrains a State from taxing such intangible property at its real value. Whenever separate articles of intangible property are joined together, not simply by a community of ownership but in a community of use, there is not infrequently developed a property, intangible though it may be, which in value exceeds the aggregate of the value of the separate pieces of tangible property. Whatever property is worth for the purpose of income and sale it is worth for the purposes of taxation, and if the State comprehends all property in its scheme of taxation, then the good will of an organized and established industry must be recognized as a thing of value and taxable.

"COAL AND OTHER MINERALS ARE SUBJECT TO TAXATION BY THE STATES WHEN SEVERED FROM THE SOIL, WHETHER THEY BE ON PATENTED LAND, PUBLIC LANDS, OR LEASED LANDS.

"But it is insisted that the statute, rightly understood, prescribes only an ad valorem imposition on the personal property owned by appellant—the coal at the pit's mouth—which is permissible according to many opinions of this court." (Choctaw & Gulf Railroad Co. v. Harrison, 235 U. S., 298; Kansas Natural Gas Co. v. Commissioners, 89 Pac., 750; Kansas; Forbes v. Gracey, supra.)

LEASEHOLDS TAXABLE.

In the case of Trimble v. Seattle (231 U. S., 683), involving property leased by the State, the Supreme Court said:

"If these leaseholds are not taxable, they are a favored class of property, for ordinary leaseholds are taxed, even if they are lumped and included in the value of the fee. When an interest in land, whether freehold or for years, is severed from the public domain and put into private hands the natural implication is that it goes there with the ordinary incidents of private property and therefore is subject to being taxed. See New York ex rel. Metropolitan Street Railway Co. v. New York State Board of Tax Commissioners (199 U. S., 1, 38.)"

FACT THAT TITLE IS REVERTIBLE DOES NOT EXEMPT FROM TAXATION.

In the case of Baltimore Shipbuilding Co. v. Baltimore (195 U. S., 375), there was a State tax levied upon a dry dock which was subject to certain duties to the United States. The title of the land on which the dry dock was built was a defeasible one, to revert to the United States on breach of the condition subsequent if the owner failed to discharge duties to the United States for a specified period. As this was an incomplete title, subject to reversion in case of default, the dry-dock company claimed it was exempt from State taxes. Speaking of the State's power of taxation, the court held:

"It may tax a life estate to one and a remainder to another and sell only the interest of the party making default. With regard to what the State of Maryland has done and what are the purport and attempted effect of the tax in this case we follow the court of appeals. That court treated the tax and the lien as going only to the dock company's interest in the land, although probably by an oversight it neglected to modify the judgment according to its own suggestion so as to show the fact. That only the company's interest was taxed is shown by the reduction of the assessment on account of the condition. * * *

"In the next place, as to the interest of the United States in the land. This is a mere condition subsequent. There is no easement or present right in rem. The obligation to keep up the dock and to allow the United States to use it carries active duties and is purely personal. The property is subject to forfeiture, it is true, if the obligation is not fulfilled. But it is only by forfeiture that the rights of the United States can be enforced against the res. It would be a very harsh doctrine that would deny the right of the States to tax lands because of a mere possibility that they might lapse to the United States. The contrary is the law. The condition can not be extinguished by the State, but the fee is in the dock company, and that can be taxed and, if necessary, sold, subject to the condition. See Northern Pacific Railway v. Myers (172 U. S., 589, 598); Maish v. Arizona (104 U. S., 589, 607–609); Central Pacific Railroad v. Nevada (182 U. S., 512, 525). The title of the dock company was not alienable, as that of the railroad was held to be in Northern Pacific Railway v. Townsend (190 U. S., 267).

HARMONIOUS EXERCISE OF RESPECTIVE RIGHTS OF THE STATES AND OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT.

In the State of Kentucky a tax was levied on the product of a distiller, whose produce lay in a bonded warehouse awaiting payment of the revenue tax to the United States. The State law made the warehouseman liable for the State tax whenever the spirits were removed from bond and the United States tax paid. The State tax was resisted by the warehouseman after he had permitted the spirits to be withdrawn on the ground that the taxing power of the Federal Government, being paramount, was exclusive. The court refused to recognize this contention and held (Thompson v. Kentucky, 209 U. S., 340):

"There is no conflict between the State and Federal purpose. There is no question of the supremacy of the latter and its complete fulfillment. 'The State does not propose,' the court of appeals said, 'to collect the taxes so long as the spirits are in the custody or under the lien of the Federal Government.' There is actual accommodation, therefore, of the power of the State to the rights of the Federal Government, and a harmonious exercise of the respective sovereignties of each, preserving to each necessary power. * * *"

RIGHT OF TAXATION AS ESTABLISHED BY DECISIONS.

The foregoing decisions of the courts and others which might be cited seem clearly to establish the right of the several States to tax whatever may be held and regarded as rights or property, and this without respect to whether or not the right, easement, personal property, or other form of holding is or is not upon unpatented public lands of the United States or reservations.

APPLICATION OF THE PRINCIPLES LAID DOWN TO THE WATER-POWER AND GENERAL LEASING BILLS.

The water-power bill, as previously stated, contemplates the grant of the right to use public lands. The water right is to be obtained from the State. The dams, canals, pipe lines, and other conduits, power houses, the machinery therein, transmission lines, transformers, and other parts, and appurtenances of a complete power plant must be provided by the permittee and will be his property, so recognized in the proposed law, which stipulates that in the event of the taking over he must be compensated therefor. The output of energy or the profits and proceeds therefrom also constitutes another form of property, which, under the decisions, is clearly taxable. The general leasing bill provides for the leasing of the deposits hereinbefore enumerated on a royalty basis, and it is clear, under the foregoing decisions, that the buildings, machinery, railroads, tramways, pipe lines, and other parts of a complete mining plant are property which may be taxed by the States; also that the mineral, when severed, is, without question, subject to taxation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 32. That the deposits of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, and sodium, herein referred to, shall be subject to disposition only in the form and manner provided in this act, and all laws or portions of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed, except as to valid claims existent at date of the passage of this act and thereafter maintained in compliance with the laws under which initiated.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, in line 17, page 27, I ask unanimous consent to change the section number from 32 to 31.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment to the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 27, in line 18, by inserting after the word "to" the words "in lands valuable for such minerals."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

In line 20, after the word "act," strike out the words "and all laws or portions of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, is the chairman of the committee sure that this is a perfectly safe saving clause as amended? As it stood without the amendment, it seems to me, it might have been a safe saving clause, though not without question, but I am not so sure about it, as it will stand with the amendment, the language being—

That the deposits of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, and sodium, herein referred to, in lands valuable for such minerals shall be subject to disposition only in the form and manner provided in this act, except as to valid claims existent at date of the passage of this act and thereafter maintained in compliance with the laws under which initiated.

Now, the intent is that valid claims may be perfected under present laws, but that is so only as a sort of an inference, leaving a question as to what is to happen to valid claims now existent. It seems to me we must add something like this at the end of the paragraph:

Which claims may be perfected in accordance with the laws under which they were initiated—

If you are to strike out the words contained in the committee amendment, which I assume you have stricken out for some other reason than as affecting the saving clause. And at the end add:

May be perfected under such laws.

Referring back to the laws under which they were initiated, then you would have a perfectly good saving clause. Otherwise you are leaving it as a matter of inference how these claims may be perfected.

Mr. LENROOT. May I suggest to the gentleman that, with the expressly repealing language stricken out, there is an implied repeal of all laws that are inconsistent with the terms of this act.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, any existing valid claims are not counted within the terms of the act, and there is no repeal of those existing laws so far as such claims are concerned.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; but there is no statement of that fact. It is all left to inference. It seems to me there ought to be a definite statement in the saving clause.

Mr. MANN. Here is the meaning of it plainly: They first had in a repealing provision that would repeal laws under which these existing claims have now been made.

Mr. MONDELL. Except as to these certain claims.

Mr. MANN. No; it would repeal all laws, because they are in conflict with this law. Now they leave that out and say that this law shall apply to the disposition of deposits, except where claims are now made. The old laws still stand as to those claims which have now been made, because they are specifically repealed and because they do not conflict with this act, which does not apply to these claims at all.

Mr. MONDELL. I think that is a fair interpretation, but so much is left to inference.

Mr. MANN. But if the original provision about repeal had been in effect, then there would be nothing for these claimants to go on at all, because these laws would be repealed.

Mr. MONDELL. I think, as the section stood, the repeal would not have affected these claims at all, because they are excepted.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman makes the exception apply to the repeal, but I think it applies to the deposits.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the exception applies to the repeal.

Mr. MANN. I do not think that was the construction.

Mr. LENROOT. If the language remained in, the criticism might be that the section applied to the repeal, and that we had taken from the operation of the law the very deposit as to which there were valid existing claims.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin or the gentleman from Oklahoma a question about the amendment in line 18—the language "in lands valuable for such mineral."

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment has been adopted.

Mr. FERRIS. The committee inserted the language referred to for the reason that we did not want to require in the future everyone who took title to agricultural land to take out a limited patent. We took it up with the department, and they thought that it might have that effect, and so when lands only known to have some valuable mineral deposit are taken up will they have to have a limited patent.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But suppose land contains a deposit of oil, gas, potassium, or sodium, or coal, and a man wishing to patent it should go to the Secretary and say, "This contains little deposits, but not large enough to be 'valuable.'" The Secretary could give him a patent under the general law.

Mr. FERRIS. They do that now.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does not that open up an opportunity for fraud?

Mr. FERRIS. No; I do not think so. The surveyor goes on the land and declares it to be or not to be mineral land. The applicant later on has to prove whether it is valuable for mineral or not.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It does seem to me that this is not apt language to put into a law of this kind.

Mr. RAKER. There are many laws of that kind containing that language.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I care not how many laws there may be on the subject containing the same language. There are some laws that have permitted gross frauds on the Government. The question here now may be whether we should continue that sort of manipulation.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, no.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Here is land, for instance, that is known to have a deposit of one of these minerals. A man goes to the office of the Secretary of the Interior and says, "This land contains deposits of such a mineral, but I do not think they are valuable." He might get a patent under the general land law. It seems to me that it opens up an opportunity for gross fraud.

Mr. FERRIS. Still, if you adopt the gentleman's view of it, it would carry it too far. You would make every patent in the future a limited patent. In other words, no one could get a complete title to his land. I have no doubt what the gentleman says is true in a measure, that some lands may have oil or coal on them, although I think the Geological Survey knows where those deposits lie pretty accurately.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is not the point. There can be a deposit on the land which the Geological Survey has pointed out, but the executive officer in the department might say, although there is a deposit there, it is not valuable, and give an applicant a patent under the old land laws. It is a question of whether you wish to run the risk of having patents issued under the general land laws on any land in which there is known to be valuable deposits of oil, potassium, sodium, gas, and so forth.

Mr. FERRIS. I answer frankly that I do not; but still, if there was a little deposit of asphalt or a little lignite, I would not want to prevent a man's getting a patent and make him take out a limited patent.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the question raised by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] is a fair and interesting one. Unless I am mistaken it is practically taken care of in the bill. My understanding is that the term "land valuable for certain minerals" is a term in use in the department, and has a well-defined meaning, and also in the statutes in relation to reservations. I understand that, without this language in the bill, if some one takes a homestead and eventually should find there a large or small amount of these deposits after obtaining a patent on it, he would not hold the title to it. Nobody could go on the land, because that would be a case where the Government had passed title to the surface. I do not know who would own the deposits. But the language "land valuable for such deposits" has a well-defined meaning, although otherwise it might be considered as loosely used.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is entirely correct. The Land Department, instead of referring to a certain tract as being coal or oil land, has for a great many years used the term "valuable for coal" and "valuable for oil."

Mr. MANN. And we have used it in the statute.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, many times.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the period at the end of line 24, page 27, and insert:
"Which claims may be perfected under such law."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, we will accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CULLOP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 406) to authorize the exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium, and had instructed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? [After a pause.] There being none, the question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STOCK-RAISING HOMESTEADS.

Mr. FERRIS rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Oklahoma rise?

Mr. FERRIS. I rise to call up a privileged bill, H. R. 407, to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes, and I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire whether this bill was presented through the basket or as a privileged bill from the floor. I take it, if it was not presented as a privileged bill, it can not be considered as a privileged bill; that is, if it were presented through the basket. Of course I have no objection to the consideration of the bill, but I do not believe it has a privileged status if the bill was not presented as a privileged bill in the House. I believe there are precedents to sustain that position.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not inform the gentleman. What does the gentleman from Oklahoma say?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I did not report it. I am informed that it went through the basket.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the point.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, it has been held several times that it is not necessary to report a bill from the floor in order to preserve its privilege.

The SPEAKER. There being no point of order made, the Chair is not going to rule upon it or listen to anyone talk about it. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 407.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 407, with Mr. Cox in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be read for amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. One moment. I ask for recognition, if no member of the committee wishes to take the floor, to discuss the bill in a general way.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin whether he wants to have general debate before we commence the reading of the bill for amendment?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not know whether any time is desired on this side. My colleague informs me that no time is desired, but I think there should be some general debate in explanation of the bill, rather than rushing pell-mell into the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Colorado reported the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, by authority of the Public Lands Committee I have reported to the House this stock-raising 640-acre homestead bill. My printed report, containing some 18 pages, gives, I think, a very complete statement of the contents as well as the objects and purposes of the bill.

This bill has been before Congress for two years. This is almost an exact copy of the bill on this subject which passed this House a year ago next Tuesday, January 18, 1915. There has been a growing demand for this kind of a law for several years, and some of us have been diligently working upon and advocating this measure for two or three years. In fact, I introduced this bill in the Sixty-third Congress and the present bill, H. R. 407, is the same as my H. R. 15, introduced the first day of this session. So that the question of the advisability of providing for stock-raising homesteads is not a new subject before Congress. As stated by the First Assistant Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Jones, this measure has been in practical operation in the western third of Nebraska for nearly 12 years, and has been wonderfully successful and beneficial in the settlement and development of that former barren and sand-hill country.

The 320-acre enlarged-homestead act of February 19, 1909, has also been in practical operation for about seven years, and has brought about the settlement of hundreds of thousands of acres of land and made homes for tens of thousands of people and built up many hundreds of rich and prosperous communities through the dry farming of the land, which would be utterly barren to-day if it were not for the enactment of that law. So that for the past several years there has been a growing sentiment throughout the country and a very firm conviction in the public-land States of the West that the only possible way to bring about the settlement of a very large per cent of the remaining public domain is to provide a law whereby a settler can obtain a sufficient quantity of that character of land upon which to make a living for himself and family.

The 275,000,000 acres of public land unreserved and still open to settlement is fully 90 per cent arid and incapable of irrigation, and is, moreover, broken and very rough in character, and after an exhaustive investigation by agents of the Interior Department and thorough consideration of the subject by the people of the West it has became practically a unanimous sentiment that if certain portions of that land can be opened to entry under a 640-acre stock-raising homestead law containing reasonable provisions, with which an entryman can comply, that a very large per cent of that remaining public domain can and will ultimately be settled in that manner and furnish homes thereon to many thousands of deserving people.

This matter was taken up and exhaustively considered by the Public Lands Committee of the House in the Sixty-third Congress. Hearings extending over several weeks and covering several hundred printed pages were held, and a large number of people made statements before the committee and introduced a large amount of documentary evidence. The bill is the result of the joint efforts of the committee and the Interior Department. Several of the western members of the committee have for two or three years been especially active in support of this measure. Congressman Fergusson, of New Mexico (since deceased), was at that time the author of the bill that was considered by the committee. He devoted an immense amount of time, energy, and painstaking service to the hearings and preparation of the data in support of this bill. His whole heart was in the measure, and when this bill is enacted into law the entire West will owe a debt of gratitude to Harvey B. Fergusson. He reported the bill out for the committee May 6, 1914, his report thereon being No. 626 of the Sixty-third Congress, second session. That report contains the reports of the Secretary of the Interior and other valuable data upon this subject. That bill was considered by the House and passed unanimously January 18, 1915. As stated by the commissioner, it was favorably reported by the Senate Public Lands Committee, but owing to the long debate upon the shipping bill, and there being a large number of other important measures upon the Senate Calendar ahead of it, the bill failed of passage.

The present bill as introduced is an identical copy of the bill as it passed the House during the last Congress. Copies of this same bill have also been introduced in this Congress by several other Members, and one or two Members also had the same or similar bills in the Sixty-third Congress. This bill is necessarily a compromise measure, as all important legislative matters of this kind must be. And while it may not be entirely satisfactory to the extreme eastern or western sentiment, it is a splendid, practicable, and workable measure.

This bill represents a natural evolution or adaptation of the homestead laws to conditions existing in the public-land States. It seems to be thoroughly well settled that there are many million acres of the public domain to which none of the existing public-land laws are adapted, and that the time has come when a new form of homestead law should be enacted to make the settlement of those vast areas possible.

This bill will apply to large portions of arid mesas and mountain sides, as well as gulches and rough broken land where, by the modern dry-farming methods, and by the use of crops that are suitable to the arid regions, a settler can by acquiring a few head of stock maintain a home and support himself and family.

There have been some objections to the measure before the committee by some representatives of large cattle and sheep growers, upon the ground that the bill may interfere with their use of the open public range. On the other hand, a few people have also objected to the measure upon the ground that they fear the land, after being entered by homesteaders, may be acquired by the large stockmen.

In answer to the first objection, your committee is of the opinion that the general welfare of the country demands that every acre of agricultural land be utilized, and that no better use can be made of the public lands than for the maintenance of homes for the people, and that wherever lands in quantities of 640 acres or less will provide a home for a family that the law should expressly allow nothing to interfere with the entry and use of that land for that purpose. What the West needs is more people, more homes, and more property on the tax rolls. Moreover, it is conclusively demonstrated that the settlement of the former large cattle ranges throughout every State in the Union has not only afforded homes and made the land at least a hundred times more valuable than it was in its former native state, and populated regions with prosperous people and built large cities upon tracts that were formerly cattle ranges, but that the settlement of the country has actually increased the number of cattle, and that the cattle are of a better grade than under the old public large range system. Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and all of the other former large cattle-range States prove this result beyond any question. So that purely from the standpoint of increasing the number of cattle in the country and enhancing the supply of beef for the consumers of this country this measure will prove wonderfully beneficial.

In answer to the second objection, the investigations of the committee and all the experiences and tendencies of the country thoroughly and conclusively demonstrate that homesteads are nowhere being purchased and being put into cattle ranges. There is not the slightest danger or possibility of any appreciable number of homesteaders, after complying with all the requirements of the homestead law and regulations as now administered regarding residence and improvements, will ever sell their lands at any figure that would permit large cattlemen to buy them for stock-range purposes. Instead of the present tendency being toward selling private improved lands for cattle or sheep ranges, the tendency is all in the opposite direction. The large holdings, generally speaking, everywhere are being subdivided and sold in small tracts. In fact, the large farms all over the country are with few exceptions being subdivided and sold into smaller tracts. The tendency is toward the small farm and individual stock raising and the improvement of the breeds and the better care of stock.

In the Assistant Secretary's report, herein quoted, this situation is shown, and the judgment of the West, generally speaking, is unquestionably in accordance with that report. This bill is directly carrying out the time-honored policy of this Government to use the public domain as far as possible to furnish homes for the citizens of our country. As was stated in the report of this committee on this bill in the Sixty-third Congress:

> It takes homes to insure permanent taxpayers; it takes homes to bring schools and churches; it takes homes to build cities and towns that attract and support labor and mechanics; population invites railroads, which in turn bring more immigration and capital to develop the barely touched resources of this great semiarid West.

Lands all over the West that were looked upon as utterly worthless 10, and even only 5, years ago are to-day good homes. Former Secretary of Agriculture Wilson once stated in a public address that every acre of land or rock in the West would be put to some practical use some time. No one now has the knowledge or foresight to classify that land. The time may some time come when homesteading will practically cease, and there will undoubtedly ultimately be some large bodies of land that can not be used for homes. But that time has not yet come. In fact, it is a long way off.

This law will mean the settlement of at least one-fourth of all the remaining public domain outside of the forest reserves, and will add thousands of homes to each of the Western States and put several million acres of land that now appear almost worthless into a productive condition and onto the tax rolls of each of those States.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I do.

Mr. BORLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman [Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado] in charge of the bill whether there is any of this land that could be taken up under the 640-acre homestead except such as has access to some watercourse?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, yes.

Mr. BORLAND. What would be the supply of water; how would the homesteader get his supply of water?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. By digging a well.

Mr. BORLAND. Unless he had access to a watercourse——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, yes; settlers can either dig a well or make a reservoir. They do that now. They also use windmills and cisterns, and sometimes they open up a little spring.

Mr. BORLAND. Is it not possible that if a 640-acre homestead be located along a watercourse it will destroy the entire value of the land lying back of it either to the Government or anybody else?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If the gentleman will read section 11 he will find that that matter is specifically and very carefully covered; that water holes are reserved from entry.

Mr. BORLAND. That has been inserted as a committee amendment?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes, sir; and they can not take them up at all if they control the only available water supply for a large region.

Mr. Chairman, I do not desire at this time to take up any more of the time of the committee, but I would be glad to answer any questions anyone may desire to ask about any feature of the bill. The bill is really self-explanatory. The report of the Interior Department, by Assistant Secretary Jones, is very full and complete. I think it is one of the best reports we have ever had on any bill since I have been in Congress during the last seven years. The Interior Department during the past year has made special investigation upon this measure, and they give in this report the result of such investigation, and the department is enthusiastically and earnestly in favor of the expeditions passage of this bill.

I will now reserve the balance of my time and yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC]

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the first words I can utter on the floor of this great body shall be in behalf of the man without a home.

Hanging in my office is a picture of a ranch scene in Texas which was taken on the last day that I worked on that ranch. Underneath this photograph, lying on my desk, there is another picture of the same land, only it is in a different form, it being a map furnished by the United States Geological Survey showing that section, which was at one time the Mecca of the cattleman, has been cut up into small farms and later developed by the oil and gas men into one of the largest fields in that State.

In western Oklahoma, where I live, I can remember 14 years ago when there were those who said that this country should not be taken away from the cattleman; that there would not be sufficient rainfall to make this country suitable for agricultural purposes; that it would only be a few years before those who had come there to have the benefit of their homestead rights would be forced to abandon the same and give up in despair.

Let us see how true their predictions were. One county in that section in 1914 produced some 40,000 bales of cotton. Land in another county is now selling as high as $100 per acre. Thousands of carloads of wheat and other small grain have been marketed in practically every county in that section this year, and I dare say there is not another congressional district in the United States that produces as many tons of broom corn as the one that I have the honor to represent. Not only this, but the settling up of this country by the homesteaders in the early days has resulted in bringing to that part of the State many new industries, and to-day gypsum and cement mills, granite works, flour mills, cheese factories, and many other enterprises are keeping pace in the development of that section of my State.

Statistics show that more than 50 per cent of the farmers living in my State do not own their homes, and I venture the assertion that this same condition exists in many States of the Nation. I know there are thousands who are eagerly waiting and watching for an opportunity to better the conditions of themselves and families, and if there is any class that our Government should help it is those who have not been fortunate enough to provide for themselves a little domicile which they could call "home."

The 640-acre homestead bill holds out to this class a helping hand, and when enacted into law will mean the development of thousands of acres that have been lying idle for years and retarding the progress of many States. The existing homestead laws will only permit a man to file on 160 acres of agricultural land or 320 acres of nonmineral and nonirrigable land. This is sufficient in sections of the country that are developed for agricultural purposes, but in the West, where the big cattleman has had control over the Government domain, it has been impossible for the little fellow to take up 160 acres and to make a successful start in the stock-raising business.

The records of our country are full of instances where those who have fenced off certain tracts of land on which to erect homes have been browbeaten and intimidated and have been forced to give up in despair. This is the same old story, the mighty will crush the weak, and because of this condition that has prevailed for years and years a large amount of our public domain has been undeveloped and has not been bringing in any revenue to the States within whose borders these lands are located, and has been rendering to our Nation very little good. The 640-acre homestead act will hold out a real hope to the modest man of but small means and who has little money with which to start in the stock-raising business. It will afford him an opportunity to be cooperating with many others who are eager and willing to have this chance. It will place thousands of acres of these lands on the tax rolls. It will cause the undeveloped natural resources to be thoroughly investigated, and I prophesy that in 14 years from now there will be many sections in the United States as productive as the seventh congressional district of Oklahoma, which was dominated by the cattle king before this section was opened for homestead entry.

Some years ago, in what was formerly called "No Man's Land," now in the western part of Oklahoma, it was my pleasure and privilege to make a homestead entry on 160 acres of Government land. I have seen herds of antelope on the prairies, and I saw the last band of wild horses as they were driven to captivity.

I know something of the hardships that are often undergone by the pioneers, and if there is any class of men that is entitled to praise it is those who blaze the way for civilization. At this time the entire country was under the control of the cattlemen, who had by manipulation secured rights to certain property, thereby enabling them to keep thousands of head of cattle on this range, with resultant big profits, and at the same time retarding the progress and development of that section. Visit those counties to-day and see what has happened since that country has been opened up for homestead entry. One would think in making a comparison that a miracle had been brought about. Growing towns, State educational institutions, and splendid agricultural farms are now located on lands which a few years ago were wholly under the domination of the cattle kings.

If this Congress will pass the 640-acre homestead bill, it will be only a few years until many sections of our Western States will be turned from a barren desert into happy homes and thriving, prosperous communities. It will be made to support thousands of sturdy, energetic, patriotic, and loyal citizens, who will give their time and energy in advancing the interests of such sections, so that they will produce revenue and compare favorably with every other country that has undergone similar changes.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the Members of this body will realize the importance of this measure, and that they will unanimously give this bill their hearty support, so that the homeless men of our Nation may have the opportunity to secure homes and at the same time have a chance more easily to provide a livelihood for themselves and families.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. HERNANDEZ].

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have introduced in the House a bill similar to the one now under consideration. It is a measure that has been presented to the Congress of the United States for several years. My predecessor in office had a measure similar to this, and I venture to say that there is not a State in the Union that has as much interest in this measure as the State of New Mexico or that has as much land of the character described in this bill as it has. Therefore if we follow the injunction and the quotations that some gentlemen have made of the Holy Book here, this will come to the rescue of the humble and the lowly in a more effective manner than by legislating against the trusts or octopuses or anything of that sort.

We have a lot of land in New Mexico that is not suitable for any other purpose than for stock-raising homesteads. This bill is intended to promote colonization of those States in the West where dry-farming processes are being experimented with. In a few minutes I will have some data here that will show the amount of land in New Mexico that would be available under this act. Still, statistics are rather a dry subject anyway, and I will make only a few remarks now and ask permission to have the statistics go in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

This legislation will induce a good many people to go and settle these lands. Four counties in the eastern part of my State bordering on the western part of Texas and Oklahoma are partly settled now by good and thrifty farmers. They find themselves, however, in the position that part of the people of New Mexico find themselves in the older settled regions, where they have seen the grazing lands taken away from them through one process or another; that is, by grants made to the States and by private land grants.

New Mexico is one of the two babies that came into the Union in 1910. We are going through the process, Mr. Chairman, that all States go through when they are first admitted into the Union. We imagined that we were rich and that we could legislate so as to create a large number of offices and incur a good deal of expense. We find ourselves now meeting and footing the bills. We discover that we have obligations to meet which we were not looking for. In order to meet these expenses we have to invite people down to our States so that they can help us develop the resources and get these lands in shape so that they will become taxable.

In a good many communities in the northern part of the State where I live the poorer people, for whom I now speak—the native element—that live on what was supposed to be land grants owned by them, because that was the intention of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, should have the large tract for their own benefit, but when you read the history of the land grants, when you go back to the facts, you find that these lands have gone out of their hands and possession and have been in a good many instances gobbled up by some land shark or landowner, and they have been left in their little communities with their little strips of land along the streams as the only thing they have now on which to subsist. They are trying to get out into the public domain, and are doing so in a great many instances. This measure will help them in that way.

But they have to take some stock. Now, 640 acres may look very large to a man that is not acquainted with conditions in New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado, or Oklahoma, but when you come to consider that, according to the best estimates that have been made, such lands as this bill provides for can only keep one cow to every 10 acres, you will know that there is short picking there.

New Mexico ranges fourth in size in the United States, with an area of 122,580 square miles, or approximately 78,500,000 acres. She is practically the center of the arid section of the United States. We have some very excellent land. As I say, these newcomers—for instance, take the County of Roosevelt, in the extreme eastern part of my State, which takes in practically all of what used to be called the Staked Plains—follow this dry-farming process. Fifty of our energetic population in that county went down to our State fair, held last October in the city of Albuquerque, and took, in the general exhibits, the first prize in that fair. [Applause.] And we want to invite more of that class of people. We want people that will have the courage and the energy to make out of the Staked Plains a garden spot, such as Roosevelt County is now; and we have the counties of Curry, Quay, and Union, all of the same character.

The element of water in our State is a very precious one. There is not a department of the Government that is doing more to develop the West and that will do more than the Reclamation Service; and it pained me to hear one gentleman here suggest that they take away from us the royalties provided by the bill that we just passed—away from this community, away from the Reclamation Service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. I wish about five minutes more.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five minutes further time.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. I will not take up the time of this committee with any more of my remarks. Only I want to introduce certain data that I have prepared and I want to be put on record as saying that notwithstanding this is not my bill it practically is the same thing. I am heartily in favor of it. There have been some amendments made by the committee and there will probably be some amendments offered; but in general, Mr. Chairman, the people of my State are in favor of just such a measure.

There is very little land remaining in my State that would be valuable if taken up under any other act than this one. The stock-raising homestead would be just such ranges, or farms as you may call them, as they have in the State of Texas, where a man may accumulate, say, 1,200 acres or more, and he could keep a bunch of, say, 50 or 60 cows, or something like that, or where he could keep 400 or 500 head of sheep.

In one word, this is a measure that would invite emigration down to those States, and we need it. It would also put all these lands on our assessment rolls as taxable property.

I have some figures here that are interesting. For instance, we have in my State as forest reservations 9,881,660 acres. When we went what we call in the West "conservation mad" there was a large area segregated in the public domain into what is now known as forest, which in time I know will be, and I hope to see, taken up under stock-raising homesteads.

Some will ask, perhaps, how we are going to do that. We are going to do it because I know that a good deal of this area now included in national forests will come under the head of arid land, as it is nothing else. The State has now also 9,760,000 acres of State lands. Indian reservations in my State take in 4,080,800 acres. That leaves only of unappropriated lands 30,344,843 acres out of the 78,485,760 acres.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the privilege of having inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the following. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. HERNANDEZ] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. The following are the statistics to which I have referred:

New Mexico ranges fourth in size in the United States, being as large as the New England States, excepting Maine. It has an area of 122,580 square miles, or approximately 78,500,000 acres.

Of course on account of New Mexico being practically in the center of the arid section of the United States a very small portion of these lands can be utilized for agricultural purposes. Only that part which can be irrigated, or that part in the extreme east, and portions between the mountains where a fairly large amount of rainfall is had can be brought into any kind of cultivation, and then only with a great deal of care and the harboring of the waters.

Out of this large acreage only about 3,500,000 acres are susceptible to irrigation, and I believe about 10,000,000 acres are claimed to be adaptable as dry farming crops.

At the present time about 800,000 acres are cultivated under irrigation and about 300,000 under dry farming methods, and there are remaining about 13,500,000 acres which could possibly be brought under cultivation.

We can only expect, with a certain degree of safety, to utilize for horticultural purposes something like the number of acres mentioned above—about 3,500,000 acres—as it is not safe to expect continuous satisfactory results from horticultural crops except from land which can be irrigated.

The Indian reservations and Pueblo Indian land grants in New Mexico absorb 4,518,758 acres of our best lands within nine different counties, the largest of these being within the counties of McKinley and San Juan, from which over 2,500,000 acres have been taken.

Private-land grants absorb 9,152,312 acres of agricultural, grazing, and forest lands.

There are 200,000 acres of mining lands—sold, unsold, leased, and open to lease.

There are 30,104,843 acres of unappropriated lands in New Mexico, mostly grazing and mountainous, with very little agricultural lands among them.

There are 58,088,412 acres of nontaxable lands consisting of—

Forest reservations	9,881,660
Lands belonging to State	9,760,000
Indian reservations	4,080,800
National monuments	21,109
Pueblos, military reservations	4,000,000
Unappropriated lands	30,344,843
Total United States, State, and nontaxable lands within the State	58,088,412

There are taxable lands to the number of 20,397,348 acres. This includes lots in cities and villages, rights of way, church and school property, and property escaping taxation.

Recapitulation of the above lands are as follows:

Nontaxable lands in New Mexico	58,088,412
Taxable lands	20,397,348
Total	78,485,760

Of all lands in the State there were approximately 21,561,265 acres of land unsurveyed on June 30, 1915, and 56,840,655 acres of surveyed lands, which includes 14,397 acres of resurveyed lands during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

In conclusion I desire to say that the granting of the 640 acres to the farmer and the stockman, instead of 160 acres, will be the greatest boon to all who live in the arid West.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] intend to yield any more time on his side?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON].

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, the people of my district and of my State are altogether very much in favor of legislation of this character. At the outset I wish to compliment the members of the Committee on the Public Lands for bringing out this bill for consideration so early in the session, and also for the splendid work they have already done in bringing before the House the bills providing for the leasing of coal and oil lands and water-power sites.

There are some provisions of this bill that I desire to see changed, and which I shall call to the attention of the committee. The bill provides in the beginning that any qualified homestead entryman may make entry on 640 acres of land designated by the Secretary of the Interior as stock-grazing lands; that proof may be made on this land by the entryman residing on it for three years, and, in lieu of the cultivation required now under the homestead laws, the entryman must make improvements on the land which will increase the value of the land for stock-raising purposes at least $1.25 an acre.

Those who are allowed to make an entry of this kind are citizens over the age of 21 years, or heads of families, who have never used their homestead rights, and those who have made entry on public lands under the homestead laws and have not perfected their entries, or who have perfected their homestead entries and still own and occupy the land.

Those who have never exhausted any of their homestead rights may make entry under the provisions of this bill as it now stands for 640 acres of grazing land, all of the land to be in compact form. In other cases entry may be made for lands contiguous to the original homestead entry of the entryman. The additional entry may be for such land as will not with the land embraced in the original homestead entry exceed 640 acres.

Now, there does not seem to me to be any good reason why a man should not be included in the privileges afforded by this law who has gone out in the West during the last two or three decades and made entry and proof upon public lands under the homestead laws, and has, through the misfortune of poor crops and climatic conditions out there, lost the ownership and title to his land. I believe that this bill should provide that any man, whether he has made entry heretofore under the homestead laws or not, who has perfected his entry, should have the right to make entry for one of these grazing homesteads.

In my State there is to-day nearly 500,000 acres of unappropriated public lands. This bill, if enacted into law, will result in the settling up of practically all of that land.

Now as to the character of settler that is desired out there or the character of settler that is desired in any of the public-land States: We want on these lands men who will make their homes there, men who will live with us and actually engage in farming and in stock raising. From my own observation and experience I know this to be the fact, that among the most desirable class of men to have go upon these lands are to be found those who some years ago made settlements and homestead entries upon public lands and lost their land through mortgage-foreclosure proceedings or some other misfortune. These men, many of them who are now tenants or day laborers, will desire to make entries under a law of this kind. These men should have the right to make entry for these grazing homesteads, and I trust that when this bill is considered section by section in the committee amendments will be agreed to which will give them such right.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly; I shall be pleased to.

Mr. RAKER. I catch the gentleman's idea, I think, that anyone who has exercised his right to homestead entry and received patent and who has disposed of the land and is out in that country now pioneering and working and wants to take up one of these 640-acre tracts shall be given that opportunity.

Mr. NORTON. Yes; I think so. I do not see any good reason why that opportunity or privilege should not be given. We have many such men in my State and in adjoining States. To-day some of our very best citizens, who have in the past exhausted their homestead rights, are working as tenants. Numbers of them will be desirous of securing a grazing homestead. If this bill is enacted into law as now drawn, they would not have a right to make entry for one of these grazing homesteads.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly.

Mr. BOOHER. Would you give a man of the character you describe the entire 640 acres, or would you take from him the land he has entered and proved up on and gotten patent to and lost?

Mr. NORTON. Well, if it were left to me, I would give him the right to take the entire tract of 640 acres. I will say this, that in giving him that right I would have the fullest confidence that these men would improve this land and hold fast to it as their permanent homes. They would prize these homesteads more and improve them far better than any other class of men you could find in the country.

Mr. BOOHER. Just another question.

Mr. NORTON. Certainly.

Mr. BOOHER. Why would you give a man who has proved up and lost his claim any more than the man who had not quite proved up, but would let him go ahead and take out just enough to make 640 acres? Why not let the second man take up more of this land?

Mr. NORTON. The man who has not proved up now?

Mr. BOOHER. And lost his land.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question right there?

Mr. NORTON. I will say in reply to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER] this: I would allow the man who has lost his land in the past, recognizing conditions that are well known to everyone who has lived in the public-land States, to make entry for the full 640 acres. I would do this, recognizing the fact that in making his original entry and final proof he had sacrificed a great deal of time, a great deal of effort, and a great deal of money, and has contributed a great deal to the upbuilding and improvement of the particular section of the State where he first made settlement.

Mr. BOOHER. No more of that than the man who has not yet proven up. Would it not be fairer to all classes to give the man who has lost his land sufficient to make his 640 acres, the same as the other man?

Mr. NORTON. There is some reason, of course, in the argument to give the man who now has an unperfected homestead entry the same rights as the man who has lost ownership to his first homestead entry.

Mr. BOOHER. I just wanted to get the gentleman's idea of the cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Colorado use some time?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. CHURCH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. CHURCH] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides for a stock-raising homestead of 640 acres, and if passed will be of untold benefit to the West.

I am in favor of any bill that takes people away from the cities into the great outdoors to build for themselves homes. In the country home nearer than in any other place we find content. Our cities are filled with perplexities and unrest; the grind of the machinery, the noise of the factory, and the shriek of the locomotive keeps the nerves of the city man strung to the key of G. His life passes like a tale that is told. Regardless of the amount he earns, his bank account is generally depicted on the first of every month. A toll master stands at every city gate. Paying house rent, the water bill, the gas account, for electric lights, the morning paper, the evening news, the grocery and department store, for vegetables, milk, bread, butter, wood, and meat, a little here and a little there, a dime or two for church and Sunday school; "Bill, loan me $5, I am a little short;" "No, I haven't it to spare," are the monthly woes of the average city man.

This bill is calculated to take people out into the foothills where can be produced almost all that is consumed; out where a person can sleep at night, where children are happy and on horseback ride to school, where father works the farm and mother trades the eggs for groceries at the store, where brother learns to hunt, fish, and swim, and sister sews and sings and entertains her beau, and where taxes are paid once a year.

Mr. Chairman, I look back to-day to the green hills of California, to the homestead of my father, the old Circle Spring Ranch, as the dearest spot on earth; away from the strife and din of the city, where the flowers nodded and the meadow lark sang, where the quail whistled, the ground squirrel scolded, and the sad dove moaned; to the landscape and to the trees that were all numbered and named.

My life has been crowded with blessings too numerous even for me to recall—health, friendships, bodily strength, and an optimistic mind—but my chief benefactor has always been that old country farm. There I received my first impression of music from the night winds and the waterfalls; my first knowledge that life was a struggle from 4 miles of trail through brush and rocks to school; my first idea of purity from the soft sweet water of the mountain spring; my first impression of the sublime from the great heights that rose abruptly just outside the door; and I received there, from the great mountain, moon, and stars, my first impression of God.

At first this country gave to the home seekers 160-acre farms, and under this law the best of all the land was taken. That law transformed the face of this country from a wild, prairie and woodland, undergrown by brush and bramble, into a land the most rich and beautiful of all the world. That law caused our valleys to teem with industry and our cheerless mountains to glow with the friendly fires of home. It made wild places, where before no sound was heard save the great owl's hoot at night and the coyote's cry, resound with children's voices and the sacred sounds of contentment. It has transformed the South into cotton and tobacco fields, the North into cereal farms, and the West into orchards and vineyards, the fruits from which astonish the world.

That 160-acre homestead law has changed the San Joaquin Valley in California, that I represent, from a desert, bleak and bare, into one of the garden spots of the West. Last year in this valley, where sagebrush once grew and where owls and snakes and horned toads once lived in solitude, we produced 120,000 tons of raisins, valued at $9,000,000; 5,000 tons of prunes, valued at $400,000; 1,500,000 boxes of oranges, valued at $3,200,000; 1,000,000 pounds of nuts, valued at $125,000; 6,000,000 pounds of apples, 4,000 tons of dried apricots, 8,000 tons of figs, 75,000 boxes of lemons, 1,200 tons of olives, 28 tons of dried peaches, 5,000 tons of table peaches, 50,000 tons of table grapes, 3,000,000 gallons of wine, 2,000,000 gallons of brandy, 2,000,000 boxes of berries, 7,000,000 centals of wheat, oats, and barley, 600,000 centals of corn, 500,000 pounds of beans, and twelve hundred thousand tons of hay. During this same year, in this valley and on its adjacent hills, grazed fifteen hundred and eighty thousand head of cattle, sheep, hogs, horses, and mules.

I may properly say right here that nearly half of the land claimed under the 160-acre homestead law in this valley is not yet under cultivation on account of the great expense of getting water onto the plains; but we are looking forward to Government aid, and now especially have we reasons to hope, owing to the fact that the reclamation fund is soon to be materially replenished by the royalties received from the Government for leasing power sites in our nearby mountains, as well as from the royalties received by the leasing of oil lands located on the border of the plains. I expect to file a bill in the near future asking assistance from the Federal Government, to the end that the waste water of our mountains may be brought in touch with the waste lands of the plains; and when this assistance comes and this 640-acre homestead bill becomes a law my country in California will come into its own. Then all the unreserved public land of the mountains will be taken, and the dry, uncultivated land of the plains will yield an annual bounty, and this western valley will become the pride of the Nation.

I have mentioned the marvelous development of the San Joaquin Valley under the 160-acre homestead law as a fitting illustration of what has been done, in a greater or less degree, in all parts of this country; but already we have passed beyond the usefulness of the 160-acre homestead law as an agency for the finder of homes, and on the 19th day of February, 1909, Congress passed what is known as the enlarged-homestead law, which provides that 320 acres of land could be embraced in a single entry or enough added to the original entry to make, in all, 320 acres. Under this law hundreds of thousands of acres of the western land has been claimed by settlers, and through this law many homes established, but we have now outgrown the 320-acre law, most of the land suitable for a home of this size having been taken, so we have reached the time when the acreage again should be increased, thus giving people who are tired of living in cities and working for others another chance to go out and gather the fragments of the Government domain.

Mr. Chairman, I predict much for this bill when it becomes a law. It will place thousands of acres of land upon the tax rolls of our counties and States. It will provide homes for many homeless people in the West. It will kindle fires on many hearthstones now unknown. It will bring happiness to many downcast heads and saddened hearts. It will create memories for the future of the dearest place on earth—home, sweet home. It will cause hundreds who now feel they have made a failure in life to leave the cities and go out into the everlasting hills and start life anew. It will bring color to faded cheeks, merriment to many a cheerless tenement child, and place a new star in the dark life of many hopeless men.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I yield five minutes to my colleague from Colorado [Mr. KEATING].

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the passage of this bill. I believe it will be of very great benefit to the people of the public-land States, and I am confident its provisions have been so carefully safeguarded that the public interests are not endangered.

In my congressional district—the third district of Colorado—we have witnessed a tremendous settlement within the last year or two under the provisions of the 320-acre homestead law. It may be of interest to the Members of this House to know that out there in southeastern Colorado, where it has been the general impression that all of the land has been taken up, we have within the last year had more homestead filings than ever before in the same district in the history of the public-land laws of this country.

Six or eight thousand settlers have come into my congressional district alone and have filed upon homesteads, so that at present practically all of the land which is of a character to enable a family to live on 320 acres has been taken up, and there remains a very considerable area where more than 320 acres are required. I would hesitate to advocate the granting of 640 acres of land to an individual if the grant were not necessary to enable a man to earn a living for his family and so circumscribed as to safeguard the public interests. But under this bill and under the present administration of the General Land Office, I believe it is well-nigh impossible to perpetrate extensive frauds. We are, therefore, assured that if the bill is enacted the benefits will accrue to men who are seeking to make homes on the public domain and not to land-grabbing corporations.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to make some reference to the treatment accorded settlers under the present administration as compared with former administrations. When Woodrow Wilson entered the White House on the 4th of March, 1913, the man who sought to make his home on the public domain was regarded as a criminal who was seeking to get something away from the National Government, and the people of the West, without regard to party and without regard to locality, felt a just indignation against the manner in which the public-land laws were being administered. But under the administration of the present Secretary of the Interior, Franklin K. Lane, and his Commissioner of the General Land Office, Clay Tallman, the man who in good faith has sought to make his home on the public domain has been given every possible encouragement. One of the direct results of that reversal of policy has been such a settlement of the West as has never been witnessed before in the history of that section of the country.

Mr. Chairman, I consider it a very great misfortune that Franklin K. Lane was born on the northern side of the boundary line between this country and Canada. If he had been born on the southern side I would here and now, on behalf of the grateful people of the West, launch a presidential boom for him for 1920. [Applause.] So far as 1916 is concerned, of course no Democrat thinks of any other standard bearer than Wilson. There is no man in the recent history of the United States who has contributed in greater measure to the development of the West than has Franklin K. Lane. As an administrator he is without a peer in public life and his ability is made manifest in every branch of the great department of which he is the head.

This measure which we have before us to-day is recommended to the consideration of Congress by Secretary Lane. He assures us that the public interests are protected in it and that the interests of the settlers will be advanced by it, and he stands so well with men of all parties in this House that I take it his recommendation will be accepted. [Applause.]

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman use some of his time?

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any further speeches on his side?

Mr. FERRIS. I think not. I think we will reserve them for the reading of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have had an understanding with the gentleman from Oklahoma, the chairman of the committee [Mr. FERRIS], that we would not take up the bill under the five-minute rule to-night, but would conclude the general debate. I do not care to project myself into the debate at this late hour. I had intended speaking for 15 minutes on the bill, but I shall defer that out of consideration for Members and will withhold my remarks until the five-minute rule.

Mr. MANN. Let the Clerk read the first section of the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; let the Clerk read the first section of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act it shall be lawful for any person qualified to make entry under the homestead laws of the United States to make a stock-raising homestead entry for not exceeding 640 acres of unappropriated unreserved public land in reasonably compact form: Provided, however, That the land so entered shall theretofore have been designated by the Secretary of the Interior as "stock-raising lands."

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Cox, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 407) to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after this bill has been disposed of H. R. 7617, the road bill, be taken up for consideration.

Mr. MANN. I take it that what the gentleman wants is to make it in order to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the road bill, subject to the Unanimous Consent Calendar, special orders which have already been made about speeches, appropriation bills, and Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It is not to interfere with this bill.

Mr. MANN. The request is for the bill to be made privileged after this bill is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. What is the number of the bill?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. H. R. 7617.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that after the pending bill is disposed of the bill H. R. 7617, the good-roads bill, shall be given a privileged status, not to interfere with appropriation bills, Calendar Wednesday, the Unanimous Consent Calendar, or any of the special orders heretofore made. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 7611. An act authorizing the Seaboard Air Line Railway Co., a corporation, to construct and operate a bridge, and approaches thereto, across what is known as "Back River," a part of the Savannah River, at a point between Jasper County, S. C., and Chatham County, Ga.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until Monday, January 17, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting draft of legislation to increase the cost of a central heating, lighting, and power plant to serve buildings owned or occupied by the United States Government (H. Doc. No. 577); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on reexamination of Elizabeth River, N. J. (H. Doc. No. 578); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting draft of proposed legislation for the relief of certain officers and enlisted men who lost personal property in the hurricane at Galveston and Texas City, Tex., in August, 1915 (H. Doc. No. 582); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

7. A letter from the Secretary of Labor, submitting an amendment to urgent estimates of deficiencies in appropriations for the Department of Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, changing the item of $33,000 for public printing and binding to $30,000 for public printing and binding and $3,000 miscellaneous expenses, Bureau of Labor Statistics (H. Doc. No. 583); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

8. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting draft of a bill authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to collect and publish statistics of leaf tobacco (H. Doc. No. 584); to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed.

9. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of expenditures on account of appropriation for contingent expenses of the War Department, 1915 (H. Doc. No. 585); to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department and ordered to be printed.

10. A letter from the president of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., transmitting a report of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. for the year 1916 (S. Doc. No. 244); to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. HOUSTON, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill (H. SENATE.

MONDAY, January 17, 1916.

Rev. Lauritz Larsen, pastor of the Zion Norwegian Lutheran Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray. Eternal and Almighty God, Thou Author and Giver of all good things, we thank Thee for Thy manifold blessings to us. We pray Thee that Thou wilt be our guide, and that through the example of Thy divine Son, our Master, we may be guided in all things; that we may be given wisdom in all the matters that Thou hast given us to attend to; that we may be true to Him who hath given us the Divine Word of service, saying, "Whosoever would be great among you let him be your servant." Help us, bless us, and guide us, we ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 406. An act to authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium; and

H. R. 8493. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 320. An act to authorize the county of Bonner, Idaho, to construct a bridge across Pend Oreille River;

H. R. 775. An act granting the consent of Congress to J. P. Jones and others to construct one or more bridges across the Chattahoochee River between the counties of Coweta and Carroll, in the State of Georgia; and

H. R. 7611. An act authorizing the Seaboard Air Line Railway Co., a corporation, to construct and operate a bridge, and approaches thereto, across what is known as "Back River," a part of the Savannah River, at a point between Jasper County, S. C., and Chatham County, Ga.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PHELAN. I present a telegram from the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, in opposition to a suggested invasion of Mexico and in favor of an enlarged Army and Navy, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LOS ANGELES, CAL., January 15, 1916.

Hon. JAMES D. PHELAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Suggested invasion of Mexico by American troops most objectionable to our people. We advise enlarged Army and Navy to protect our border, our coast, and harbors. Hope you will use every influence to this end, for Pacific coast interests demand protection rather than invasion.

LOS ANGELES CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,

PROTECTION OF GAME IN YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 3205) to amend "An act to protect the birds and animals in Yellowstone National Park, and to punish crimes in said park, and for other purposes," approved May 7, 1894, reported it without amendment.

FEDERAL JUDGES.

Mr. CUMMINS. From the Committee on the Judiciary I present a favorable unanimous report on Senate resolution 66 directing the Judiciary Committee of the Senate to make inquiry and report the number of Federal judges now holding office who are unable to discharge substantially the duties of a judge, and so forth, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 66, submitted by Mr. CUMMINS on the 11th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee of the Senate be directed to make inquiry and report: First, as to the number of Federal judges now holding office who are unable to discharge substantially the duties of a judge; second, whether, under the Constitution, such judges, if any, can be removed from office; third, if they can be so removed, what is the proper procedure?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, we have a bill pending here which has been reported and takes precedence of the resolution. I think the resolution should go to the calendar ordinarily.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go to the calendar.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT (S. DOC. NO. 246).

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I ask that the report of the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, Sixty-second Congress, second session, submitted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] on the power of the Government over the development and use of water power within the respective States, be printed as a Senate document. It is a very short report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SHIELDS. I also ask that the views presented by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], members of the Committee on the Judiciary, be printed to accompany the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

Mr. GORE. I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 79) authorizing and directing the President to enter into an agreement with the recognized head of the Mexican Government, under which order shall be restored and life rendered secure in that portion of Mexico adjacent to the United States, was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President is hereby authorized, and, in case the prevailing disorder in Mexico is not brought under control by the de facto government thereof before the approval of this act, the President is directed to enter into negotiations with the recognized head of said government with a view to the establishment of a neutral zone along the northern border of Mexico to be jointly policed by the Governments of Mexico and the United States until such time as order may be restored and the lives and property of American citizens rendered secure under the law, at which time the forces of the United States shall be withdrawn from Mexican territory.

2. That in order to carry into effect the terms of any agreement entered into in pursuance of this resolution the President is empowered to employ such part of the naval and military forces of the United States as may be necessary to that end.

3. That this act shall take effect from and after its approval.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. SMOOT submitted an amendment providing for an appropriation from the several appropriations for protection, improvement, and management, etc., of the various national parks, including the Hot Springs Reservation, as well as from the revenues from privileges, etc., in the national parks and the Hot Springs Reservation, such sum or sums as the Secretary of the Interior, in his judgment may deem necessary, to be expended in employment of competent persons in the District of Columbia and in the field, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHIELDS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3331) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3393) amending an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes," which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and ordered to be printed.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. ASHURST submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 69), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be, and the same is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer to report such hearings as may be had on the pending Senate concurrent resolution No. 4, such stenographer to be paid at a rate not exceeding $1 per printed page, and that the expense thereof be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 70), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and it hereby is, authorized, during the Sixty-fourth Congress, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to employ a stenographer at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee at any time, and to have such hearings printed for the use of the committee; that the expenses of such hearings be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee or the chairman of a subcommittee; and that the said committee and all subcommittees thereof may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

SAN FRANCISCO WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, an editorial appeared in the New York Times entitled "The Hetch Hetchy fraud," and I made a reply thereto respecting legislation on the subject of the Hetch Hetchy grant passed by Congress. For the information of the Senate I think the matter should be printed.

Furthermore, as an addition to the argument, I desire to state that in pursuance of the requirements of the grant the city of San Francisco last week let a contract for $1,500,000 for the construction of a railway to carry the material into the Hetch Hetchy Valley for the construction of dams. This shows further the good faith of the city, which has been disputed by the New York Times.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Editorial from New York Times, Jan. 9, 1916.]

THE HETCH HETCHY FRAUD.

The Hetch Hetchy Valley, as beautiful as the Yosemite, 30 miles away, was given over to use as a reservoir; a great national wonder place that was a priceless, and should have been a precious, possession of the American people forever, was ruined so that San Francisco might have a water supply. Save us or we perish of thirst, cried the clever tongues that robbed the United States of that paradise. Vainly the friends of park preservation proved that San Francisco had other and adequate sources of water supply. Vain was the campaign against the spoliation. Congress passed, President Wilson signed, the bill.

The Times and many public-spirited associations of men and women were not listened to. The lie about San Francisco's necessity was believed. It is now impudently admitted. Speaking of certain plans of the mayor of San Francisco, the Chronicle, of that city, says:

"It is not proposed to bring the Hetch Hetchy waters to the city at all. Some 'future generation' may do so, but those now alive have no means of knowing what future generations may do. At any rate the Hetch Hetchy as a source of water supply is to be dismissed from consideration."

In short, the mayor proposes to build a power plant in the Sierras for a municipal railway with $15,000,000 of Hetch Hetchy bonds voted and issued to provide for perishing San Francisco's water supply.

Thus in its nakedness is the fraud upon the United States exposed to every eye. It is no consolation to those of us who tried to save the Hetch Hetchy Valley that our predictions come true.

[From the New York Times, Jan. 13, 1916.]

SENATOR PHELAN ON THE HETCH HETCHY PLANS—SAN FRANCISCO'S INTENTION TO DEVELOP THE GREAT FEDERAL GRANT FOR BOTH WATER AND POWER—THE LOCAL ISSUES INVOLVED.

(By JAMES D. PHELAN, United States Senator from California.)

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, January 11, 1916.

To the EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

I read in your edition of January 9 an editorial entitled "The Hetch Hetchy Fraud," in which you stated on the authority of the San Francisco Chronicle that "it is not proposed to bring the Hetch Hetchy waters to the City (San Francisco) at all—some future generation may do so," etc.

Of course, if this were true you would have some justification for your caption and comment, but it is not true. The San Francisco Chronicle is engaged in a local political controversy with the mayor. The facts are as follows:

San Francisco, some time since, voted $46,000,000 to bring in water from Hetch Hetchy Valley, and the work is being diligently prosecuted. I personally visited the valley last summer and know of my own knowledge that a broad wagon road has been constructed to the heretofore inaccessible Hetch Hetchy, and that hundreds of men are employed building a diverting tunnel, about completed, to carry the Tuolumne River water by the dam site, while the work of the construction of the dam is under way, a necessary preliminary. Therefore it is the present policy of San Francisco to construct a dam for the impounding of water, and, unless it does so with diligence, under section 5 of the law passed by Congress (H. R. 7207), the Secretary of the Interior may declare forfeited all the rights of the grantee.

The mayor of San Francisco desired to purchase the existing water plant of the Spring Valley Water Co., operating it as a municipal utility, which would be more than self-supporting, and to use its distributing system so acquired for the Hetch Hetchy water when it was brought down to the city's gate. He held that as a distributing system had to be acquired, either by purchase, condemnation, or new construction, and that reservoir sites were necessary, it was not antagonistic to the Hetch Hetchy project to acquire the existing company's properties. As the Hetch Hetchy water could not be brought in for seven years and as there was a most pressing and absolute need for more water, caused by the rapidly growing population and the extension of the suburbs, he proposed to develop certain near-by sources as a temporary expedient. He submitted the proposition to the people, and the San Francisco Chronicle took the ground that such action, if taken, would defeat the completion of the Hetch Hetchy.

The people were so impressed with the idea that the makeshift would delay the completion of the Hetch Hetchy as a permanent and ample source that they voted down the mayor's proposal, which had in it many elements of practical business advantage to the municipality. It was intended to free the city from the hampering policies of the private water company and immediately secure an increased supply for the city; and it was calculated that the profits of the business would meet the cost of the new construction. But, as I stated, the people were suspicious of it, and in their zeal to bring in the Hetch Hetchy they voted it down. This certainly is evidence of good faith, and yet if the mayor's proposal prevailed it would simply have emphasized the desire of the people to get water quickly from any near-by source, although inadequate and exposed.

The city has spent $1,500,000 already upon the Hetch Hetchy project. There is an intimation that the real purpose of the city was not to secure more water, but to acquire a hydroelectric power plant. I am again personally familiar with this phase of the subject, and desire to inform you that no thought of power development was entertained until in January, 1912. At the hearing in Washington before Hon. Walter Fischer, then Secretary of the Interior, Mayor Rolph was asked, in my presence, if the city intended to develop power. He told the Secretary, in answer to his question, that no consideration had been given to the subject, whereupon the Secretary told him that he had better consider it at once, because if the city had no intention of developing hydroelectric energy, the Department of the Interior would not permit it to lie fallow, but that the power grant would be given to some one else. The mayor asked for 24 hours to consider it, and at a conference held that night by the California delegation it was determined to assure the Secretary that with the development of water the city of San Francisco would also undertake the development of electricity for the supply of the city and the irrigation districts, which was finally included in the bill. The bill makes it incumbent upon the city to develop such power within a limited period of time, and if the city does not comply with this condition "the Secretary of the Interior may take possession of and lease to such person or persons as he may designate such portion" of the property "acquired or constructed by the grantee hereunder as may be necessary for the development, transmission, use, and sale of such power."

This seems to be a complete refutation of any hidden or sinister purpose on the part of the city of San Francisco, and shows that the congressional act makes it incumbent for the city to develop both water and power within a limited period of time. The rents which the act requires the city to pay run from $15,000 to $30,000 a year and begin five years after the passage of the act.

I may state that the criticism of the act at home is that it has imposed too many onerous conditions upon the city. As to the wisdom of the passage of the act, permit me to recall an interesting episode. The press of the East was united in its opposition on the ground that it disfigured the face of nature, and in answer to that the testimony San Francisco offered was that the conversion of a meadow into a lake was not a disfigurement; that the dam site is so narrow that it will never be observed, and that the reservoir will give it the appearance of a mountain lake. There was a well-grounded suspicion that much of the opposition, however, came from the hydroelectric power trust.

The President signed the bill—Congress had passed it by large majorities—in face of this opposition. Dr. George Harvey, editor of the North American Review, and no friendly critic of the President, in an editorial, February, 1913, stated that never had a measure received such universal condemnation from the eastern press, and on that account he examined it as an original proposition, studying the testimony, and he came to the conclusion that the President could have done nothing else than to sign the bill, and he commended the President for what he considered an act of the highest courage.

I regret to see a recrudescence of this opposition, even though it now be vain, and I beg to assure the Times that the conduct of the people of San Francisco and their representatives in this matter has always been dictated by no other consideration than the public weal. There shall be no disfigurement of nature, and beauty places of the Sierra will by this act be made more accessible; and the great populations which shall grow upon the Bay of San Francisco, when served with cheap water and cheap power, shall bless the President and Congress for having, in the face of opposition, wisely provided a necessity of life without in any measure impairing the enjoyment of the aesthetic.

JAMES D. PHELAN.

SEIZURES OF COTTON AND FOODSTUFFS BY GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that following the routine morning business on Thursday, January 20, I shall address the Senate upon the illegality of the order of Great Britain making cotton contraband, and illegal seizures by Great Britain of foodstuffs and cotton belonging to neutrals.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his clerks, announced that the President had, on the 17th instant, approved and signed the following act:

S. 2409. An act to authorize the Ohio-West Virginia Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Ohio River at the city of Steubenville, Jefferson County, Ohio.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 406. An act to authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

H. R. 8493. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

INCREASE OF WAGES IN WOOLEN MILLS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I have a matter which I desire to present to the Senate before taking up the calendar, and if not out of place, and with the consent of the Senate, I should like to present it at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is a question for the Senate to decide. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Jersey? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, as I have said, I have a matter to present which I feel is of infinite importance to the Senate of the United States, and is particularly of importance to the Senators from Rhode Island. It is also a matter which vitally affects the interests of our whole country, and it seems to me it is but fitting and proper that the public should know the situation to which I refer.

I hold in my hand a copy of the New York Herald, which has an article headed "Six woolen mills raise wages," which reads as follows:

WOONSOCKET, R. I., Monday.

Six mills in this city, engaged in woolen and worsted weaving and employing 2,000 operatives, to-day announced a 5 per cent increase in wages, effective January 3.

I am happy to say, and the Senator from Rhode Island should be flattered to learn, that these are the Lippitt mill, the Montrose woolen, the Dunn, the Perseverance mill, and some others. This splendid intelligence conveyed from that portion of New England is most delightful to the average American to hear; but let not you Democrats on this side of the Chamber smile and "lay the flattering unction to your souls" that you are the authors of this condition through your legislation, for you are not. We have been told that we are the wreckers of mills, the cause of the bankruptcy of institutions, and the general bedevilment of the country. You are not the authors of this prosperity. Well, Mr. President, who is or who are the authors of this prosperity? Let me read from their own statement. They say that this increase of wages is not because of prosperity. No; God forbid! Prosperity did not prompt them to make this increase, but that which occasioned it——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator from New Jersey object to the creation of a neutral zone about the center aisle of the Senate Chamber? [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I hope I am not dealing death and vengeance to Senators on the other side of the Chamber. I know that which I am to say is not exceedingly pleasant—and I say it regretfully—to the Senators from Massachusetts or to the Senator from Rhode Island.

The mill owners would have it distinctly understood, according to this article, that they did not raise wages because of Democratic prosperity or because of Democratic legislation; that was not at all the cause, they say, but it was due to the fact that they could not find labor. Great God, what has become of the idle men who were walking the streets, of whom the Senator told us? What has become of the idle men in Pennsylvania and the idle men in Rhode Island? They could not find labor.

I am reminded of a condition that prevailed in New Jersey during the time of the McKinley administration. We had a great many idle men in New Jersey during that administration. A meeting was held to decide just what was the cause of the idleness and just what could be done with the idle labor. Very many men were invited to come before the meeting to give their testimony and to express their judgment. Among those who came was a stalwart, broad, sturdy philosopher of an Irishman named Billy Mulligan. He was asked what he had to say, and Billy said, "I will tell you what I find, sirs. I have always found when there are two Pats hunting one job, then times is poor and wages is low, but when I find two jobs hunting one Pat, then wages is high and times are good." That seems to be the condition at Woodsocket, R. I.—two jobs hunting one Pat; hence times are good and wages are high.

Now, I appeal to Senators on the other side to be honest with themselves and to be honest with the country at large, to tell the world that times are good, that we have been blessed beyond parallel with wealth pouring into our coffers, and that in the goodness of your heart you have chosen to raise wages in Woonsocket, R. I.

Of course, the whole trouble about this condition, Mr. President, is that it happens at an unseemly time; it happens under a Democratic administration. If it had happened under a Republican administration the stentorian voice of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], as well as that of the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island, would ring the changes on the glorious prosperity which the beneficent legislation of the Republican Party had brought.

Now, I have here not only from Woonsocket, but from Massachusetts and the country over, notices of unparalleled prosperity. I have here a report from my little State, from one of the oldest banking institutions in New Jersey, the National Banking Co., of Newark, N. J. They are busy; and when I say "busy" some of these gentlemen say, "Oh, say it quietly, for it is only war busy." No; it is not war busy entirely, though some of that business also may come to us. Is a sewing machine an engine of war? No; but we are multiplying sewing machines and sending them abroad by the thousands and tens of thousands from New Jersey.

Then again, is jewelry an engine of war? We manufacture much jewelry in New Jersey, and particularly in Newark, N. J. That is literally and entirely an article of luxury. We are manufacturing jewelry by the millions of dollars worth, and we have had the same trouble that you have. We could not find men enough in the jewelry trade there, the manufacturers of jewelry could not find men enough to move the wheels and make things go.

Prosperity is the rule this land over; and I say it is unfair, it is ungenerous, and, unknowingly to you, I say it is untrue that conditions are stagnant and dull. The hives of industry this land over to-day are busy. The shafts and spindles and pulleys of the mills throughout our Commonwealth and yours are hissing and growing hot with the busy whir of industry; the anvils are ringing out in clarion note of industry this land over.

Let us be frank with the country. If this condition has come in the unfortunate time of a Democratic administration, nevertheless as American citizens you gentlemen must reap your rich share of recompense. Cease your grudge, admit the truth, deal fairly, deal liberally with the administration that is in power. All mankind will wear a happier and a broader face in consequence of general prosperity, and you, proclaiming justice and truth and not pressing the narrowness of simple selfishness, will live longer and, thank God, die happier.

Mr. LIPPITT and Mr. GALLINGER addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I am a little in doubt whether the distinguished Senator from New Jersey, in the remarks which he has made, is trying to pay me a compliment or to utter a political and partisan criticism.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Oh, no; far from it.

Mr. LIPPITT. As a matter of fact, the mills to which he refers in Woonsocket as bearing the name of the Lippitt Woolen Co., unfortunately I am not connected with, and, so far as I know, there is no person of the name of Lippitt who owns any stock or is interested in the management of the concern in any way. Nevertheless I am delighted to know that they are raising wages.

The Senator from New Jersey in his usual polite and emphatic manner has called upon his patron saint, "Good God," to justify the remarks which he has been making.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I suppose the Senator will appeal to the same benign influence, of course. I do not claim a monopoly on that. God knows I trust His blessings may spread over all. [Laughter.]

Mr. LIPPITT. Well, I thought the Senator from New Jersey was going to claim a monopoly upon that, because he seems to be claiming a monopoly on every other influence that causes good times and prosperity in this country.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Ah, far from it.

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator from New Jersey wants the Republicans to be generous with him and admit that the prosperity which is now prevalent in the country is due to some Democratic cause, and probably having in mind the fact that the Republicans were at one time accused of stating that good crops were the result of the protective tariff he is now apparently trying to assert that present industrial conditions instead of being the result of war are the result of the Democratic tariff policy. The Senator from New Jersey knows as well as I do, when he asks us to be generous, that the cause of the present prosperity in this country is due to the fact that there is the most absolute protective tariff in force that this country has ever seen. He knows that there is a protective tariff that is defending the industries of this country, and that it is so strong that it not only defends our markets but that it defends all the neutral markets of the world against the products of Germany and of Belgium and of France and of England, because they are not able on account of the lack of laborers to continue to so great an extent as formerly in the field of production or to export such articles as they are able to produce.

Now, I want to say to the Senator from New Jersey that up to the date of August 1, 1914, in the State of Rhode Island neither the Lippitt Woolen Co. nor any other manufactory of any kind was considering the question of raising wages. The fact is that those factories were running on half time; that there were two "Pats" seeking jobs all over the State of Rhode Island and in every part of New England. I will say, also, to the Senator from New Jersey that the result of Democratic tariff policies in the State of Rhode Island was that for the first six months of the year 1914 the laborers of Rhode Island were receiving at the rate of more than $2,000,000 less wages than they had been receiving under the Republican administration.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. And in the meantime——

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator now comes and asks us here to be generous to him. I ask the Senator to be generous and fair and admit the fact that until the European war intervened the effect of the policies of his party was to cause disaster all over the United States.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I ask no generosity toward myself; I only ask that you shall be generous and true to yourself.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not know the Senator from Rhode Island had concluded, and I wanted to interrupt him. I want to put in the RECORD for the information of my good friend from New Jersey a few figures. I have looked up the facts, and find that in the last year of peace we sold to Europe woolen goods to the value of $4,753,000, while in the first year of the war we sold to Europe woolen goods to the value of $32,057,000, a gain of 574 per cent. Now, Mr. President, I hope the Senator will take those figures home with him——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am not willing, nor will I——

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not yielded to the Senator. I say I hope the Senator will take these figures home with him and ask himself seriously the question whether the present prosperity in the woolen industry is not directly due to the war. The same thing exists in reference to the boot and shoe industry of New England.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. How is it with the jewelry industry?

Mr. GALLINGER. Of jewelry Germany is a great producer, and Germany can not send any kind of jewelry out into the markets of the world to-day, so that for the time being New Jersey is finding a market for jewelry, but it will not last.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. If there were no prosperity in this country, the people of this country would not be able to buy jewelry.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think they probably could afford to buy the kind of jewelry made in New Jersey under any circumstances. [Laughter on the floor and in the galleries.]

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. How is it with sewing machines?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment. The Chair, under a rule of the Senate, is compelled to admonish the galleries that they must not manifest their approval. The Chair does not object, but the Senate seems to object.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey is always entertaining; the Senator from New Jersey always takes us unawares——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well——

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, Mr. President, if the Senator will just restrain his impetuosity for a moment—the Senator gets hold of some Democratic newspaper——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Is the New York Herald Democratic?

Mr. GALLINGER. Such as the New York World or the New York Herald or some Democratic newspaper in New Jersey when we are unprepared for him, and bursts forth in a torrent of invective against the Republican Party and tries to make us believe——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have been flattering myself——

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, now, there—— [Laughter in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will be compelled to clear the galleries if order is not maintained.

Mr. GALLINGER. I had occasion to say, Mr. President, during the last session of Congress that the Senator from New Jersey approached me in a threatening attitude. [Laughter.] I do not want him to repeat that action to-day, and, if the Senator will just keep his seat and content himself for a moment, he will have an opportunity to show that the 574 per cent increase in woolen goods sent to Europe during the first year of the war, as compared with the last year of peace, had nothing to do with the prosperity of the woolen industry in this country. Of course it has had, and the same thing is true of the boot and shoe industry of New England.

The boot and shoe industry in my State—and it is a very large industry—was practically on the verge of collapse when the war commenced. The first order that was received by one New Hampshire concern was for 2,000,000 shoes from Russia, and other large orders are coming regularly from abroad. All the great shoe shops of New England are to-day prosperous, and they are prosperous because of the demand that has been made upon that industry and other industries because of this horrible war and not at all because of the Democratic tariff policy, which the Senator so vehemently defends on all occasions.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I know, Mr. President, and regretfully, too, that the portrayal of these facts is not comfortable, but, great heavens, I do not know how I am to help it; the facts are published in the daily newspapers of the country. It is unpleasant for our friends to hear that in Democratic times properous conditions exist.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. We have been hearing much about idle men stalking the streets; we have heard about soup houses. I think in stentorian tones the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], in a glorious burst of eloquence in the Senate, told us about the idle men the country over; and now, my heavens, instead of feeling bitter at me, Senators on the other side, as true patriotic Americans, should be proud of the fact that the newspapers of the country are heralding abroad the news that these men are busy to-day and are not stalking the streets in idleness.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, Mr. President, the Senator——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. One moment. As an evidence that your Republican legislation does not bring all that prosperity that you would have us believe, I cited the McKinley tariff. I remember full well the first bread line I ever saw in my life. I saw it standing at the corner of Tenth Street and Broadway, at Fleischmann's. Fleischmann was giving out bread under the Republican régime of a high protective tariff and under the McKinley administration. I never before knew what a bread line was nor a soup house. But they stood there, as I think I stated once before, on a cold, shivering night, with shrugged shoulders and chattering teeth, waiting for their bread at 1 or 2 o'clock in the morning, and the bells in Grace Church spire were ringing out the gleeful tale, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow."

This was under a Republican administration, and yet these poor devils were seeking bread. This came about under the guardian angel of the Republican protective policy, and you have not helped the conditions one whit. We had idle men under your so-called protective policy, and idle men will come again under your protective policy.

I am willing to admit that a portion of the present prosperity has been due to the war—this unfortunate, sad, hateful war. I hate the thought, and I hate to recur to it, but I say that it is not all due to the war. I say that the country is stepping on into a revival of prosperity.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I want to congratulate him upon his gradual progress in intellectual achievement. He is now gradually coming around to the point where he is admitting part of the Republican contention. If he will only listen to the debate long enough, I have no doubt that he will get so that he will agree to the whole of it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It will take a good long while.

Mr. LIPPITT. It is hard work to educate some people.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will say, Mr. President, after listening to the eloquent arguments presented by the Senator from Rhode Island, that it would take a good long while before I would be willing to admit——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. This is all very interesting, but I ask for the regular order of business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is the consideration of bills on the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I submit to that; but I will only say, digest the facts as published.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Philippine bill, Senate bill 381.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, pending that motion I desire to say that during the last year of peace we exported $9,000,000 worth of boots and shoes to foreign countries. During the first year of war we exported $22,000,000 worth of boots and shoes, or an increase of 254 per cent. And yet the Senator from New Jersey calls that Democratic prosperity. It has been well called in another place "Battle-field prosperity."

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska, and that must be disposed of.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, may I not say a word on that motion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is decided without debate, always—the question as to whether the Senate will or will not take up a bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the While, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I want to say that while under the rule I was not permitted to object to the motion I do not believe that course ought to be pursued. There are bills on the calendar here, and I think from the close of morning business until 2 o'clock we ought to devote the time of the Senate to the calendar, at least every other day. I think that when a bill is the unfinished business and it is debated from 2 o'clock to 5, that is plenty of time. Now, of course the motion has been carried; but I hope to-morrow, at least, we may be permitted to do something with the calendar.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, on February 5, 1908, I presented to the Senate a joint resolution, which I now send to the desk and ask the Secretary to read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 5, 1908, page 1575. Mr. STONE introduced a joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas by virtue of the treaty between the United States and Spain, December 10, 1898, the United States established its control over the Philippine Islands; and

Whereas as a step toward their ultimate independence there was first established by acts of the Philippine Commission in 1901 and thereafter a scheme of provincial and municipal governments, which governments in the hands of the Filipinos themselves under an elective system have achieved and maintained order and stability; and

Whereas as a further step in the same direction, and two years after a proclamation of the complete pacification of the islands, the United States provided for an election of a Philippine Assembly, which assembly, inaugurated last October, is now, as appears from the reports of the Secretary of War, in full and satisfactory operation; and

Whereas the steps heretofore successfully taken have demonstrated and are demonstrating the justice of the claim of the Filipinos for speedy independence and their capacity for self-government; and

Whereas it is frequently urged, as a reason for refusing independence to the Philippine Islands, that some other nation would seize the islands if the United States abandoned them; and

Whereas this danger can be removed by an agreement between the United States and the great nations of Europe and Asia whereby the independence of the Philippine Islands shall be assured, and they shall be regarded as neutral territory, not open to the occupation of any other nation, as the independence of Switzerland has long been secured in Europe; and

Whereas fidelity to the fundamental principles of the American Government requires that said Government should aim to secure and safeguard the independence of said islands: Therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the President is requested on the 10th day of December, 1913—that is to say, 15 years after the date of the Treaty of Paris—to deliver the control and possession of said islands to the authorities representing the people thereof, including also all government property therein pertaining to the administration of such government, and withdraw therefrom immediately thereafter the Army and Navy of the United States: Provided, however, That the United States shall retain on such date and thereafter such suitable coaling and naval stations as in the judgment of the President may seem necessary, and that the delivery of said islands to such native government shall in itself imply the assumption by it of the obligations then existing and incumbent upon the Government of the United States and consequent upon the granting of any franchise as well as the assumption of all outstanding obligations of the Government at that time existing in said islands; and be it further

Resolved, That the President is requested to open negotiations with other nations for the purpose of securing an agreement with them for the neutralization of the Philippine Islands and the recognition of their independence whenever the same shall be granted by the United States.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, on the policy outlined in that resolution I addressed the Senate at different times, pressing my views with such force as I could. While there was a strong sentiment in the Senate favorable to that policy, I was not able to secure action on the resolution, although it was kept before the Senate through two Congresses.

Since this pending bill has been before the Senate I have conferred with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], who is in charge of the measure, as to whether a declaration in substance like that embodied in the resolution I have had read should be added to the preamble of the bill as a declaration of the policy and purpose of the United States. I told him I did not wish to embarrass or interfere with his plans and would take no step without his approval, especially as I favor the bill as it is, since the bill as it is would grant a larger measure of liberty and autonomy to the Philippine people. I preferred, therefore, to leave the suggestions in his hands.

A few days ago the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] proposed an amendment to the bill before the Senate, which I will ask at this point to insert in my remarks without reading, as I presume Senators are generally familiar with it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SEC. —. The President is hereby authorized and directed to withdraw and surrender all right of possession, supervision, jurisdiction, control, or sovereignty now existing and exercised by the United States in and over the territory and people of the Philippines, and he shall on behalf of the United States fully recognize the independence of the said Philippines as a separate and self-governing nation and acknowledge the authority and control over the same of the government instituted by the people thereof. This transfer of possession, sovereignty, and governmental control shall be completed and become absolute within two years from the date of the approval of this act, under the terms and in the manner hereinafter prescribed. For the purpose of a complete and prompt compliance with this direction, the President is hereby invested with full power and authority to make such orders and regulations and to enter into such negotiations with the authorities of said Philippines or others as may be necessary to finally settle and adjust all property rights and other relations as between the United States and the said Philippines, and to cause to be acknowledged, respected, and safeguarded all of the personal and property rights of citizens or corporations of the United States resident or engaged in business in said Philippines or having property interests therein. In any such settlement or adjustment so made in respect to the rights and property of the United States as against the said Philippines the President shall reserve or acquire such lands and rights and privileges appurtenant thereto as may, in his judgment, be required by the United States for naval bases and coaling stations within the territory of said Philippines.

Immediately after the passage of this act, the President shall invite the cooperation of the principal nations interested in the affairs of that part of the world in which the Philippines are located, for the purpose and to the end that the cooperating nations shall mutually pledge themselves, in the form of a treaty or other binding agreement, to recognize and respect the sovereignty and independence of the said Philippines, and also to mutually obligate themselves, equally and not one primarily nor to any greater extent than another, to maintain as against external force the sovereignty of said Philippines for the period of five years from the taking effect of such treaty or agreement. If any of the nations so invited to join the United States in such undertaking shall decline to do so, then the President shall include as parties to such convention or agreement such nations as may be willing to join therein and to assume such obligations; and if none are willing to so unite therein, then the President is authorized to give such guaranty on behalf of the United States alone.

Mr. STONE. The same general idea runs through the joint resolution I proposed in 1908 and the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas. I think the plan proposed by the Senator from Arkansas for getting at this matter is better than the suggestion I made to the Senator from Nebraska, since the Senator by his amendment to the text of the bill seeks now, by a quick and direct method, to embody the idea of separation and neutralization into an absolute statutory enactment. That would be more effective and conclusive than a mere declaration of policy in the preamble. Unless the Senator from Nebraska and his committee colleagues are of the opinion that this amendment of the Senator from Arkansas would endanger the passage of the bill we are considering, I need hardly say that I will support the amendment, even in its present form, although it has some limitations I do not approve. I am certainly in favor of the general idea embodied in this amendment.

I wish now to address myself with respect to the idea covered by the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas—I mean especially with respect to the idea of neutralizing the Philippine Archipelago. I have in former years so fully stated my views on this subject that I shall not take much time in expressing what I have in mind to say to-day.

Mr. President, there are at least three schools of thought, three classifications of policy, prevailing in this country with respect to the Philippines: First, there are those who are unwilling to surrender the islands to their own people, withdrawing our sovereignty, at any time. The policy of those holding to this view—that is, the permanent occupation of the islands—was well expressed by the late Senator Elkins, of West Virginia, during a debate in the Senate several years ago, when he said: "The Philippine Islands constitute a part or portion of the territory of the United States," and that they would "furnish a base for operations in the East, where we must extend our commerce and protect American interests," and that they would "prove of great advantage to the United States." "Give them up!" he exclaimed, "surrender them to whom, how, when, and for what? * * * It does not belong to Anglo-Saxon blood to give up land under any circumstances." Then he added that whatever the Democratic Party might do, "the Republicans would declare and say they will never surrender our possessions and give them up for nothing—possessions that have cost us money and blood." That is one view.

Akin to this view is that maintained by those who say that at some indefinite and remote period the United States should grant independence to the Philippines. Former President Taft is a distinguished exponent of this view. He thinks that it is out of the question to talk about Philippine independence for many years to come, certainly not during this generation, and he thinks that it is both idle and vicious to even discuss the question of independence at this time. The first of these of whom I have spoken—that is, of the type of Mr. Elkins, bodly announce, with a straightforwardness of purpose we can easily understand, that they have no intention of ever surrendering our sovereignty and control over the islands; while the other class, of the type of Mr. Taft, sugar coat the bitter pill they offer the Filipinos—breathing a promise to the ear, which they must know is broken in advance to the hope.

Secondly, there is another school of thought, represented by another class of publicists, who go to the other extreme and declare that the United States should at once and forthwith, without any reservations or conditions, abandon the Philippines and turn them over to the native people there, admonishing them to take care of themselves in accordance with the old adage "Root hog or die."

This view has been expressed here in the Senate during this session, notably in the very charming and interesting speech delivered the other day by the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Thirdly, there is another class of men who think that we ought speedily to grant political independence to the Filipinos, but that we should not run away and leave them at the mercy of any powerful nation that might conclude to ravish them. The general idea of those who hold to this view is, in general terms, expressed in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] to the pending bill. It is to this last view of the question that I wish to address myself. The difference between those who favor permanency in our occupation of the islands and myself is so radical that there can be no hope of agreement between us, so I will pass that up. But as to those who really wish to confer the boon of liberty and independence upon the people of this archipelago, but who wish to do this at once and without any conditions, and without any provision whatever looking to their future safety, I think there is good reason why we should discuss this matter between us, with the hope of composing our differences.

Mr. President, it has been often said that we made a grave mistake when we took the Philippines under our jurisdiction and guardianship, making them either absolutely or qualifiedly a part of our national domain. It has been said that after the naval battle in Manila Bay, and after the Spanish authority over the islands had been overthrown through the joint efforts of our soldiery and that of the Philippines themselves fighting for their liberty, we should have sailed away and abandoned the islands to the native population, leaving them to work out their own destiny. That may be true; I will not stop to discuss that now. It is too late to discuss that. The fact is that instead of leaving the islands we took them over and put them under our sovereignty, and did this against the will of the natives. We shook loose the hand of Spanish sovereignty and thrust in our own. For more than 17 years this Government of ours has maintained a sovereign jurisdiction over the islands. And here I wish to say that during this long occupancy the work done by our people in the islands, taken as a whole, has been highly beneficial to the native population, at least in many important respects. We have aided them by teaching them the art and science of government, and have impressed upon them the great importance of order and integrity in the administration of public affairs. We have helped them enormously in educational work, and in the development of agriculture and industries of various kinds. We have taught them self-reliance and the value of a national equipoise. I have no doubt that these people have been benefited immeasurably by our work among them and for them, and I am sure that they are better equipped for self-government than they were before our advent. At the same time I think it is also true that mistakes have been made, and that the people there have been the victims of misconduct on the part of American representatives and American exploiters. Our presence there has not been a thing of unmixed blessing, but taken as a whole the Philippines, in a material way, have been far more benefited than injured. Nevertheless, in the hearts of the Filipino people there has always been an inextinguishable flame burning for liberty and independence. They are a good people, a Christian people, who love their homes and country. While they recognize and admit that the conduct of their affairs under American administration has been infinitely better than when administered under Spanish jurisdiction, they still resent and protest against a foreign and alien supremacy over them. I have always sympathized with their hopes and aspirations in this behalf. Moreover, looking down through the years to come I can not escape the conviction that it would be unspeakably better for us, whether considered from a moral or material point of view, if we should sever our connection with and responsibility for the government of these people. I would rather have these people grateful to us for giving them their liberty and independence, thereby making them our fast and firm friends, than to hold them in subjection by superior force. Mr. President, I think in this direction lies the path of wisdom and safety for us.

But, Mr. President, wisely or unwisely, we have exercised power and guardianship over these people for 17 or 18 years. Wisely or unwisely, we have assumed responsibilities and obligations with respect to them which would not have attached to us if we had left them at the close of the Spanish War. As I see it, the duty we now owe is more than the mere duty of giving them independence. We are so related to them and to their history that we can not now with honor send them adrift and leave them at the mercy of any great marauding power that might appropriate them and misuse them. The whole world would look upon an act of that kind with amazement, and we would fall under the just condemnation of mankind.

What, then, should we do? We should do something along the line suggested in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas. I have no doubt that upon the initiative of the United States a joint treaty could be made between what we call the Great Powers—or between such of them as would be necessary to make the agreement effective—to neutralize these islands, so as to protect them against the danger of invasion and appropriation by any foreign power. Of course, this could not be done now while Europe is rent by war, but it can be done when normal conditions are restored in the world. This ought to be done and, I am sure, can be done. We owe it to these people to do this if it is possible. If we are willing to give up this great, fertile, opulent land and voluntarily withdraw our sovereignty over this important field in the Orient, how could any other nation refuse to join us in a solemn agreement to leave these people free and to protect them against outside interference with their liberty and independence? I would not limit this agreement for neutralization to a fixed period, and certainly not to any brief period like five years. That is my objection to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas—the provision which would limit the period of neutralization to five years. I do not think it is at all likely that any foreign power would seek to overrun and appropriate these islands within five years from the date of our grant of independence to them. That would be too raw, too bold, too insolent, and insulting to us. I see no good reason for placing a limit of that kind at all, and certainly not for a period less than a generation—or at least not less than for 20 years.

Mr. President, I said in the beginning that I did not wish to elaborate my views in this behalf. The extent of my wish has been only to restate with as much brevity as possible the views I have heretofore amplified on this subject. If the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and his colleagues having charge of the bill approve of the general idea and think they could safely incorporate it in this bill, I would be very glad indeed to have that done. In any event, why should not a provision of this character be inserted in the bill by the Senate? If the Senator from Nebraska should afterwards find that it was antagonized elsewhere, he could exercise his judgment as to whether he would insist upon it or recede from it. Is it not worth while, at least, to make the issue now and put it to a test?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri will permit me, I wish to make an observation in the Senator's time. The Committee on the Philippines did not consider the provision referred to because they thought it was a matter which ought to be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I myself introduced a joint resolution asking the President to enter into negotiations with other leading nations of the world for the purpose of coming to some kind of agreement with relation to the neutralization of the Philippines; and I expected to appear before that committee after this bill was disposed of. I heartily agree with the Senator from Missouri that a provision of that kind would be very proper in this bill, and if it can be inserted by an amendment I have no objection to it whatever.

I agree, too, with the Senator that five years is too short a time. It ought to be of an indefinite nature. I believe there should be a limit of five years, if there is no agreement between the nations of the world and the guaranty of neutrality is made only by our Nation; but if an international agreement is made, I feel that it would be better to have unlimited time.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WADSWORTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. STONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to ask the Senator whether he has made any estimate or survey of what our obligations, either legal or moral, in a financial way would be in case we should sever within a reasonable time our relations with the Philippines. We have issued, or authorized the issuance of, a considerable amount of bonds there for the improvement of cities and the construction of railroads and other public works. It seems to me that our relation to those obligation would be one either of legal or moral responsibility. Has the Senator made any estimate of that?

Mr. STONE. Has the Senator read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have read it, but I do not recall it very fully.

Mr. STONE. That amendment makes provisions for a settlement of the question the Senator suggests as between the United States and the Philippines when the United States withdraws its sovereignty or jurisdiction over them. I assume that that can be settled as between the Philippines and this Government. I think the Philippine Government or people would assume the whole of the liabilities in cases where the Senator thinks there might be some kind of responsibility resting on us. It ought to assume responsibility for its part. All those questions would have to be settled as a part of the arrangement under which we would withdraw.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I am inclined, as the Senator from Missouri is, to support some proposal for the severance of our relations with the Philippines as soon as it can be done consistently with the interests of the Filipino people; but it seems to me before we can act intelligently upon such an amendment as has been presented by the Senator from Arkansas it is necessary for us to have some statement from the committee having jurisdiction as to the nature and extent of these obligations, either legal or moral, for I assume that a moral obligation would be as strong as a legal one, as far as the United States is concerned.

There is another question that disturbs me, and that is as to when the Filipino people will so acquire a common language as to enable them to communicate with each other. I can not understand that any scheme of independence or of self-government will be successful unless the people of those islands can communicate their ideas to each other on such important matters as those that relate to government. When this subject was up for consideration some 8 or 10 years ago I urged in that view that it was essential that we should by direct appropriation of the United States Government aid the Filipino people in acquiring a common language. The evidence that has been presented to us indicates that to-day little less than one-half of the Filipino people are in school, and in order to educate 500,000 more, assuming that 1 teacher would be required to every 50 pupils, we would require a great many teachers. I imagine that the annual expense merely for teachers' salaries alone would aggregate a sum half as great as the entire insular revenue at present. It is very evident that they could not stand that burden, and if we wish to prepare them for self-government it will be necessary for us to assume it. It would be a matter of economy to do so.

I imagine that the maintenance of our government in the Philippine Islands, self-sustaining as they are in all domestic matters, must cost the United States in matters of military and naval defense $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 annually.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator that the House committee, having investigated the matter, found that the cost to which he refers was $26,000,000 a year.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Assuming that we shall desire to sever our relations with those people in 10 years, during that time we shall have incurred an expenditure of $260,000,000 simply in the defense of the islands or in the preparation for their defense. As a matter of dollars and cents, it would be a great deal cheaper to appropriate five or ten million dollars annually for the purpose of instructing the Filipino people in a common language during that period of 10 years, involving a total expense of between fifty and one hundred million dollars, rather than to prolong our departure for 10 years longer at an expense during that additional period of $260,000,000.

It seems to me that we ought to have some definite information upon these two important questions: First, what will it cost to give the Filipino people a common language in the shortest possible period of time in which it could be accomplished; and, second, what will be the extent of our legal and moral obligations in those islands when we cease our relations? It seems to me that the committee having charge of this matter might furnish us with that information whilst this debate is going on.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, what the Senator from Nevada has just said and the questions that were raised at the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] indicate what seems to me to be the inconsistency of this bill. I have heard all of the debate upon this question, but no explanation of what the obligation of the United States rests upon, if there is such an obligation, that we should go on for an indefinite number of years expending millions of dollars annually in order to give the Filipino people a common language, with the expectation that after we have given them the common language we would abandon our investment there and unsettle the entire form of government as well as their relations between their own country and the United States.

It seems to be the idea—this is a little bit out of the order in which I expected to discuss it, and I am not going into it fully—that there is a moral obligation, to say nothing of a legal or international obligation, for the United States of America to go cruising around the world to find a people we think need a common language, who we think ought to have their country put in a sanitary or hygienic condition, who we think are not capable of governing themselves, and to do that work for them and to teach them how to govern themselves and then abandon them. Such an obligation does not grow out of any ordinary attributes of international relations or of sovereignty of nations. The United States of America has never undertaken it in any case in its past history, except where it grew out of the incidents of a war in which we had become engaged.

Mr. President, I would have hesitated to say anything about this bill except for the fact that I, in part, represent a State and represent, in part, a section of the country which are particularly interested in the question, lying, as they do, approximately near to the Philippine Islands, being only separated from them by the easy avenue of the Pacific Ocean, which needs no dredging and which is an open channel for our ships. That section has built up a considerable intercourse with those people; some of our citizens have located there; and I could not sit in entire silence without expressing some of the feelings with which I should witness the accomplishment of what is proposed by this measure. A great number of our young men enlisted in the volunteer forces of the United States which went to the Philippines; some of them gave their lives, many of them gave their blood, in bringing about the acquisition of these islands and the restoration of peace and order there.

What has been accomplished there since that time has been described by many of the advocates of this bill. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] in a very graphic way, with a wave of his hand, said that, unarmed, the traveler could pass from the northernmost point of the island of Luzon through the Philippine Archipelago to the Sulu group in peace and safety; that these people were happy and comparatively prosperous. That has been the result, Mr. President, of the American occupation, of the sacrifices of our soldiers who fell there, of the expenditure of vast sums of our treasure which have been stated by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and others.

Mr. President, in the practice of the law, as is familiar to every lawyer, there is a plea known as the plea of confession and avoidance; there is a plea of res adjudicata; there is a plea of the statute of limitations or prescription. We can apply, Mr. President, in the argument upon this matter of State, the principles on which these pleas are based in the formal pleadings in a lawsuit. An analogous answer would be applicable to the proposition here now—to the proposal to unsettle a question which has been settled for 17 years, on which rights have been adjusted, upon which people have builded their lives and adjusted their habits for the period of almost a generation. I want to discuss that feature of the matter a little later, in view of the insistence which has been placed in this debate upon the proposition that some promise has been given to the Philippine Islands which would bind the United States, after a long course of years of effort and expenditure there, to sever our relations with them and give up our sovereignty.

I can understand, Mr. President, the basis of the argument of those who insist that, in accordance with the fundamental principles of the American Government, we are not adapted to hold colonies, or to administer them, and that accordingly we ought to leave these islands. I can understand the argument of those, on the contrary, who say that these possessions having come under the jurisdiction and sovereignty of the United States as one of the unexpected incidents of an unexpected war, and we having become committed to their tenure and having made a success of their administration from our own standpoint and from that of the welfare of the Philippine people, we ought not to discuss the question of the abandonment of sovereign jurisdiction over them; but I can not understand the preamble of this bill or any policy which would justify it; that we should not abandon them; and, on the other hand, that we should not let the matter rest where it has rested for many years; but that we should continue to expend our lives and millions and hundreds of millions of dollars for an indefinite period in the future without hope of benefit to the American people, and when these expenditures have borne rich fruits to leave them all in the end. And, if you follow the argument of the advocates of the bill, it would also be without the possibility of benefit to the Philippine people, for it has been said time and time again that these people can not learn the principles of self-government so long as they are under our tutelage. Yet it is proposed to keep them under our tutelage for an indefinite period and then to relinquish our jurisdiction over them. That is the principal objection which I have to the measure. The preamble is more important than the enacting sections.

I should dislike very much, Mr. President, to be misunderstood as to my position toward the people of the Philippine Islands. I do not think there is anyone who would go further than I am willing to go in giving them self-government. I do not know that I would have any objection to that portion of this bill which deals with the internal administration of their government; but, for the very reason that I want to see these people led up and on toward the full fruition of self-government, I am opposed to the unsettlement of their international relations and of the tie which binds them to the United States, because I believe that it would defeat the purpose and the object of self-government. That is one of the reasons why I am opposed to the preamble of this measure.

Suppose we were to abandon them to-day, Mr. President, and absolutely sever this intangible tie by which the sovereignty of this great Republic attaches itself to them. I think there are some Senators here who believe that they would have self-government. I am aware of the fact that it is said by many that it is none of our business what they would do after we sever our relations, and that is quite logical. It is not, however, the position of the preamble of the bill. But, nevertheless, even though there are Senators who say that it is none of our business, it is an important phase of this matter which ought to be considered. My opinion is that it is our business, and the very Senators who say that it is none of our business refute their own argument when they talk about going on year after year and spending millions of dollars to give them, among other things, and only one among other things, a common language. If it is none of our business what condition those people should be in and will be in when the protection of the United States is withdrawn, why should we go on for a single day? Why should we negotiate treaties with foreign powers to neutralize the islands? What business is it of ours? That is what Senators say. Oh, Mr. President, it is some of our business; and I am impelled to say so, notwithstanding my belief that there are in the Philippine Islands a large number of people who are more cultured in many respects than we are. They have better manners than we have and are more polite, and that is a great thing. I think it was Montesquieu who said, "Commerce goes to those nations whose people are polite." It is a national asset—their culture, their education, their refinement of manner; but is that the Philippine people?

There has been some discussion here as to the meaning of self-government. I mean by self-government, Mr. President, that kind of government which was described by Webster and formulated by Lincoln as a government of the people, by the people, and for the people. Now, the Philippine people, as a people, will never have, in my judgment, that kind of a government when the United States pulls down its flag, which is the token of its sovereignty there, and takes away its restraining influence. The great interest which I have in the condition of the Philippine people is the same interest I have in the people of this country—not of a favored few, who in every country exist and can take care of themselves, but in the condition of the masses of their population. If American sovereignty were withdrawn from the Philippine Islands, civil war would break out. Between the so-called non-Christian peoples and the Christian peoples, between the wild tribes, so called, and the civilized tribes, there is undying unfriendliness. Time after time the Moros have boasted that, given the opportunity, taking away the obstruction of the United States, they would conquer the Filipino people.

This order which is described, and which exists, this peace, this security of person and life and property in the Philippine Islands, was not wrought out by themselves; but it was established there in the first place—as is almost always the case wherever a government has established order and security—by force of arms, then by the knowledge and the capacity of self-government existing in the United States backed up by military force. That is how they obtained it.

Pictures have been drawn of massacres and of horrors that attended the suppression of the Philippine insurrection. One Senator said that a number of Filipinos had congregated in a crater, and men, women, and children were massacred. I do not know what the purpose was in dragging that incident, whatever the circumstances may have been, into this debate. It was an incident, if it ever occurred, of the ordeal through which this country and the Philippines went when we undertook to establish peace and order there. But having established it, having paid that price for this result, does it follow that because it cost us that price, because horrors were attendant upon their acquisition, after they have been forgotten, after these people—a large portion of them, at least—have come to realize the material benefits, at least, which come from the government and sovereignty of the United States, we are to undo all of that?

Mr. President, there were two occasions when the question of the relation of the Government of the United States to the Philippine people might, under a wise policy, have been determined. One of them was when the question was presented of going to war with Spain. All of these problems grow out of the War with Spain; they are the aftermath of that war; they are burdens and responsibilities which, perhaps, were foreseen by President McKinley and which caused him to refrain, in the face of the insistent and passionate demand of the American people, from plunging this country into that war. But having gone into the war, this question, the Cuban question, and many other problems with which we have been burdened since, and the responsibilities of which we have borne with credit to ourselves, I am glad to say, became fixed upon us.

There was another time when we sensibly could have determined the question of our relations to the Philippines, and that was when the Spanish fleet had been destroyed in Manila Bay by Admiral Dewey. I heard some Senator describing inconversation the regret of Senator Hale, I think, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, when there was submitted to the council of officials of this Government the telegram to Admiral Dewey to proceed from Hongkong to Manila and destroy the Spanish Fleet, that he did not think of adding four words to the telegram—"and return to Hongkong." He expressed the opinion that if the suggestion had been adopted, and that course pursued, we would not have acquired the Philippines; and consequently we would not now—17 years afterwards—after the horrors which have been described, and the billions of dollars that have been expended—I think that is an exaggeration, but taking the estimates of Senators, probably a billion dollars, according to the estimates of some of them, first and last, directly and indirectly—we would not now, here in the Senate of the United States, be talking about undoing it all, abandoning it, and putting the Filipino people and the United States of America back where they were when the War with Spain was declared, or at least where they were when the insurrection began in those islands. And that reminds me——

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. In just one moment I will yield to the Senator. That reminds me that many Senators discuss this question as though we had imposed an arbitrary sovereignty upon a free people. Why, that is not the case. That is not borne out by history. We substituted the sovereignty of this free Republic for the oppressive Government of Spain in those islands. We have taken nothing of self-government away from the Philippine people, but we have given them more than they ever would have gained if they had never heard of the United States.

I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. I was simply going to add something to the historical value, perhaps, of the incident to which the Senator refers. Senator Hale told the incident partially to illustrate how easy it is for men of experience, temporarily vested with the control of things, to make a mistake. The Senator was always very bitterly opposed to the acquisition of over-sea territory, and the incident has some value in view of the fact that there it was, at least from his viewpoint, in the power of a man who was opposed to something to secure the adoption of a certain course of action, instead of which he failed at a critical moment to take advantage of the opportunity along the line of his own inclinations, for Senator Hale stated that if he had added the four additional words he did not think a member of the party would have objected to it. There it was in the power of the man to do something along the line of his inclinations, and yet at that moment he forgot to interpose and to add the words.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And yet, if I am not mistaken, Senator Hale subsequently, after the matter had become fixed and had taken on a new phase, voted against the evacuation of the islands by the United States.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, certainly. While the question of our supremacy was involved he was in favor of establishing the supremacy of the American arms.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But the statement which he made, and which has been so clearly described by the Senator from Minnesota, illustrates the distinction which Senator Hale made between the decision of the question before we had committed ourselves to the policy of occupying the islands and its decision after we had occupied them and had governed our course of action upon that occupation.

Mr. President, I suppose the best form of government which a people can have, eliminating from consideration abuses of administration, is that form of government to which they are accustomed. It is sometimes said that the sweetest word in the English language is "home," and I have reflected somewhat as to why that is. Many homes that we see are not more attractive than others around them, perhaps not nearly so attractive. A wanderer upon the face of the earth may be amid beauties of every kind of nature and of art, and yet we commiserate him as the most miserable of mortals because he is a wanderer. The pleasure and the attractions of home are based upon the familiarity of its occupant with his surroundings. It is because he is used to it. Man is like other animals in that respect. A dog or a cat or a horse will return from long distances and after long periods of time to the place to which it is accustomed, not because it is better than other places, but because the sensibilities of nature and of human nature yield to contact with their environment and they are easy and comfortable in the place and under the conditions to which they are accustomed.

I venture to say that the people of the Philippine Islands, after 17 years of American occupation, are becoming accustomed to that occupation. I venture to say that if it were possible to get the real sentiment of the great masses of the people of those islands and search the innermost recesses of their souls they would say, with all the impulses of their nature, that this occupation has been a blessing to them. If it should be submitted to the people of those islands in the proper sense, referring to the great masses of the people, I do not believe they would want to change that relation. They have experienced its benefits. They are looking forward to greater benefits which are to come; and while they may not know it, we know, or we ought to know from the teachings of the founders of our Republic, that it is unwise to unsettle the governmental relations of people. It is set forth in the Declaration of Independence. Men will bear the ills they have rather than fly to those they know not of.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield for a question.

Mr. SIMMONS. Before the Senator altogether leaves the phase of this question which he was discussing just before he was interrupted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], and which is very interesting to me, I wish to ask him a question with respect to his views upon an aspect of that subject.

The Senator had just stated—and stated truthfully, I think—that during our occupation of the Philippines we have taken nothing from those people, but that we have given them much of great value. We have, at large expense to ourselves, helped to initiate them into the methods of self-government. At large expense to ourselves we have helped them to establish schools, and with our help they have made very great progress in the direction of the education of the masses of the people. We have helped them in matters of sanitation at considerable expense to ourselves. We have helped them in road building, and in other directions we have broadened the development of their natural resources.

Do I understand the Senator, in making these comments upon our gratuities to the people of those islands, to suggest that in withdrawing, if we should withdraw, as provided by the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], we shall withdraw without any suggestion to them or any demand upon them or any requirement upon them of any sort of financial indemnity to the United States for the large sums of money that it has spent there for the purpose of their betterment politically, socially, industrially, and economically?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, there is nothing of that kind provided in this bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. There is nothing of that sort provided in the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas. I was desiring to elicit the views of the Senator from Washington as to whether, in case we do withdraw, we should do so unconditionally or whether we should require them to make us some sort of indemnity for the expenditures we have incurred for benefits to them which are permanent and perpetual.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Withdrawal, to be perfectly frank with the Senator from North Carolina, from the Philippine Islands now, whatever might have been right and wise 10 years ago, seems to me a stupendous mistake from every possible standpoint, and it is difficult for me to address myself to a consideration of the question which the Senator from North Carolina has stated. It is not agreeable to me to contemplate a business dicker with those poor people for a return to the Government of the United States of the vast sums of money which it is stated—as I said before, I think it is exaggerated—we have invested there. I do not know what the views of the Senator from North Carolina might be as to the means by which we could collect the returns for this great investment.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. POINDEXTER. My opinion is that it would be extremely difficult to the Filipino people ever to pay the United States for the money we have invested there, and they could never pay us for the lives which have been sacrificed or for the labor which has been expended by Americans in building up the government which they now have.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, I have not expressed any opinion with respect to the matter that I brought to the attention of the Senator. I could not say that I have any well-formulated opinion upon the subject. The Senator was discussing the subject of the expenditure on the part of the United States for their benefit, and I wanted to inquire of the Senator if, in discussing it, he had in view the idea that in case we did withdraw, as provided in the amendment to which I understand he is addressing himself, we should demand compensation.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is not only the amendment, Mr. President, to which I am addressing myself, but it is the bill itself, which is far more important in its prologue, as some dramas are said to be, than is the drama itself. This proposition, which involves the destiny of 8,000,000 people and the interest of all the people of the United States, is the adjustment of the relations between those islands and this country.

It was both those propositions to which I was addressing myself, and the reason why I suggested the amount which has been expended in the Philippine Islands was to call to the attention of the Senate that this was only one of the conditions which had become fixed and which had grown out of our occupancy of the islands, which rendered an evacuation now unreasonable, made it difficult to readjust to these conditions, and that we should have determined the question earlier. I shall point out in a moment that we did determine it earlier, and that it should not now be questioned after these sums have been expended—and I regard the funds which have been expended as the least which we have given to those islands. We have given our genius, we have given our knowledge of building roads, we have given the ability of our physicians to establish sanitary conditions, we have reduced the death rate, we have reduced the illiteracy of those islands. That grew in part out of the expenditure of this money. It grew also in part, and in far greater part, out of the knowledge, the capacity, the devotion, and the self-sacrifice of the people of the United States.

I want, Mr. President, in the discussion of this question to depart from that policy which seems of late years to have governed so many of our foreign relations, as in the Panama Canal, for instance, and to consider not only the welfare of foreign people but to consider as a part of the equation which is to be solved the interests of our own people.

Now, Mr. President, should we come to the proposition of abandoning the islands—pulling down our flag? I have no objection to pulling down the flag if it represents the policy which is to be adopted, but if we are to adopt that policy there are many questions, not only the one which the Senator from North Carolina suggests; there is the question of coaling stations for the use of the Navy, the question of making treaties with foreign countries for the neutralization of those islands, and a question which perhaps the Senator from North Carolina has not thought of, because he says he has not come to a conclusion upon the one which he mentioned—and which I doubt has been thought of by any of the advocates of that policy—and that is, when we have made neutralization treaties for the Philippine Islands are we prepared when we sever our relations with them to plunge into international war to maintain the treaties which we have signed? That is a question which will have to be answered, and if not answered now it will have to be answered hereafter.

One of the great responsibilities of legislation in this great tribunal is that what we do every day not only affects the interests of ourselves and of this generation, but in the laws which we pass we affect the woe or the welfare of generations that are to come. Are we going to saddle upon the next generation the responsibility of plunging this country into a great war or else of dishonoring itself by abandoning its treaty obligations because we have entered into a treaty with foreign countries for the neutralization of the Philippine Islands?

I should like Senators to give me their views about that. I know that there is an element which would say that we would arbitrate it, but suppose the other fellow would not arbitrate it, as has been said by quite a noted American on another occasion. I heard a great American speak in my State last summer, in which he said that if modern naval vessels and transports with armed troops came to invade this country we would go out to meet them and say, "We have the lives of 100,000,000 people to protect and priceless ideals to preserve for the benefit of mankind." He seemed to be of the opinion that, when we said that, that would settle it, and the fleet would turn back and the transports would return to the country from which they came. But that is not in accordance with common sense. That is ideally beautiful; it is theoretically perhaps defensible upon some high plane of brotherly love; but we all know that international relations are not, in our time at least, and, so far as I can see, will be at no time in the near future, determined by principles of brotherly love.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. POINDEXTER. In just one moment. Whether we would like it or not, whether we would like to put it upon that basis, however much our virtue might be in evidence, if it should be, our great rivals do not, as a matter of fact, adjust their foreign relations upon any such high principles. On the contrary, it can not be denied that matters of self-interest govern. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from Washington has very sagaciously called our attention to the real significance and possible consequence of a treaty by which the neutralization of the Philippine Islands would be guaranteed. Is not the same obligation and the same responsibility involved in the suggestion lately made of a treaty of alliance offensive and defensive with the Republics of America?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It might be, Mr. President, unless it was guarded against by some proviso in the treaty. I do not know that that proposal has been worked out to any definite form. It does not follow, if the Senator proposes to make that the basis of removing the difficulty of a Philippine treaty for the neutralization of the Philippine Islands, which I mentioned, that it can be used for that purpose at all. I do not know, so far as I am concerned, that a treaty of offense or defense with a great number of any foreign countries in the Western or Eastern Hemisphere would be wise.

Mr. WALSH. There is one other suggestion which has been repeatedly offered as a solution for war trouble, that the nations of the earth ought to band themselves together and agree jointly to use coercive measures with respect to any single nation that might engage in war. Such an engagement would likewise involve us in the same kind of responsibility and obligation as a treaty of neutralization.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The only difference is, Mr. President, that it is more extensive. There would be more opportunities for trouble. There would be more consequences involved in it.

Mr. WALSH. I merely desired to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that there is a general principle involved in any obligation of the Government with respect to the future.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is very true, but while there are general principles involved the neutralization of any country is not necessarily one of them; and even though it were, and if it were true, as the Senator seemed to intimate, that such treaties might furnish a cause for war, it does not follow that we should add to that difficulty by assuming a protectorate through neutralization treaties or otherwise over the Philippine Islands. I think one of the most illogical features, and there are many of them, of any of the proposals which have been made in regard to the Philippine Islands is that we should absolutely surrender our sovereignty and yet guarantee their independence. Three or four different times the National Democratic Party in its platform has proposed it. It is not proposed in this bill; it is not said by Senators defending the bill what the plans or purposes of their party are in regard to that, but of course, in view of the rigid adherence to other planks of their platform, they will abide by this one.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield further to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. Such a treaty of neutralization would impose no heavier obligation upon the United States to engage in war in case of its violation than it would upon any other signatory power?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It might not. That would not help us very much.

Mr. LIPPITT. I would like to ask the Senator if he does not think, under the peculiar circumstances of our connection with the Philippines, a treaty negotiated by us of the neutralization of those islands would involve us in some additional responsibility in case of a violation as compared with other nations of the world. There certainly would be a moral obligation on our part—considering the relations we have already assumed with those islands and considering the fact that such a treaty, if it was signed, would have been through negotiations of ours—to defend, to protect, and to take armed measures in case of a violation of it. It would seem to me that that would be involved.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why should we assume that burden? If we are to sever our relations with the Philippine Islands why should we bother ourselves and sacrifice our people's lives and pay out the taxes which have been ground out of them to protect the Filipinos? Why not go and protect the Chinese?

Mr. LIPPITT. If I may be allowed a word further, I do not for a minute assume that that could be a desirable course for us to pursue, but the Senator from Montana suggested that it would involve some more responsibility on our part than it would on the part of any other signatory power. It seems to me that it would.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I agree with the Senator from Rhode Island that the Philippine question being our question, we being the proponents of the proposed treaty, and we being in the attitude of plaintiff, so to speak, and the other parties defendants, the treaty being formed with the idea that we were not going to interfere with the independence of the Philippines, because we would be giving it up, and the treaties being framed to prevent some other country from interfering with their independence, that much greater burdens and responsibilities would be placed upon us than upon the other parties to the treaty.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield further to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator has been very kind in yielding. Let me ask him if this is not the situation, exactly: If we retained possession of the Philippines and any nation attempted to take them we would of necessity be involved in war with that nation without being able to call upon any other nation to assist us. If we surrender the possession and enter into a treaty with all the nations of the earth for the neutralization of the islands it may be, and undoubtedly would be, our duty to defend them by force of arms, but we could then call upon all the other signatory powers to help us. In other words, we lessen, do we not, the burden of the obligation?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It would be as hopeless as the prophets of Baal calling on the Lord to send down fire from heaven. The help would not come.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. All I was going to say is that just now there is not much dependence to be placed upon treaties.

Mr. WALSH. That is the unfortunate situation.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. POINDEXTER. For a question.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like, with the permission of the Senator from Washington, to ask the Senator from Montana a question with reference to the observation he has just made.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If it does not take the Senator from Montana too long to answer it I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. SIMMONS. It will not take me long to ask it and I am sure that it will not take the Senator long to answer it. The Senator said it would probably be easier for us to defend the neutrality of the islands with the assistance of the other nations to the agreement of neutrality than it would be to defend them during our occupancy against invasion. That is probably true, but I notice in the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, which we are now discussing, there is a provision that we invite other nations to join us in this work of guaranteeing the neutrality of the islands, but in case no nation will join us in that guaranty there is a provision that the United States shall guarantee the neutrality of the islands after we have retired. I will ask the Senator, if it should come to that, if we should evacuate the islands and become the sole guarantor of neutrality, would we not then be in a much worse position in order to defend that country against invasion than we are now while we are in the occupation of the islands?

Mr. WALSH. I should say obviously we would. I would not be able to give my assent to the amendment for that reason.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield in a moment to the Senator from Rhode Island. If the argument which has been made with so much eloquence by Senators in favor of this bill and this preamble, or of the amendment which the Senator from Arkansas introduced, is based upon the inalienable rights of people to manage their own affairs, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana and the Senator from North Carolina why we should make any treaty of neutralization for them?

Mr. WALSH. Why we should?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes. I was assuming that if the argument of the proponents of this measure and the amendment is correct, that it is one of the inalienable rights of people to manage their own affairs, and if superimposed sovereignty by a greater power can not benefit them in any way at all, why we should impose ourselves upon them to the extent of making a neutralization treaty?

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from Montana has not been sponsor of that provision.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand he is not in favor of it, and I do not want to press the Senator; I am just anxious to have his view about that.

Mr. WALSH. I think we should make an agreement if we can.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course the Senator need not answer unless he desires, but I will ask him out of what duty would such an act on our part grow? Why should we make such a treaty?

Mr. WALSH. I would like to relieve, so far as we possibly can, the Philippine people and any other people on earth from the evils of war. We have had such an example within the last year. It is my opinion that they would be very much less likely to be made the subject of foreign aggression if the whole world were leagued to preserve their independence. I should think it altogether unlikely under those circumstances that any nation would attempt to fight them.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator would be a long ways from the doctrines of George Washington, also of Thomas Jefferson and many of the leaders of the old Democratic Party to go so far afield as that and entangle ourselves in international agreements, out of which he admits war might come.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. COLT. If I may be permitted to ask the Senator from Montana a question, it would be in this line: Whether at the present time, when most of the great nations who are interested in the Far East are suffering from the delirium of war, the Senate of the United States should pass the Clarke amendment, which calls upon the President to enter into an agreement, pledging the independence of the Philippines, and whether he thinks these nations at this time would be willing to enter into any such guaranty?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I cheerfully answer the question of the Senator from Rhode Island. My opinion about the matter is that the present is an inopportune time to engage in any negotiations looking to a treaty of that character.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish just a moment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield in a moment to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish merely to say a word.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire simply to say to the Senator from Washington, that if he is laboring under the impression that I have committed myself to this amendment in that way he is laboring under an erroneous impression. I have not committed myself to it. I am listening to the argument. I am studying the question. I do believe and always have believed——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I hope the Senator will not commit himself to it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I beg pardon; I did not catch his remark.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I say I hope the Senator from North Carolina will not commit himself to the proposition of guaranteeing the independence of the islands and entering into treaties for that purpose.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was going to add to what I have said that I have always believed that as soon as it was wise and just to ourselves and to the Filipinos we ought to retire from the islands and give them an opportunity to govern themselves. I still feel that way about it. I believe when we do retire it would be a wise thing for us to provide for some international system of guaranteeing the sovereignty of those people, because I very much fear unless it be done that as soon as we get out of the way they will be the prey of some designing powers of the earth. But while I feel that way about it, I am not at all prepared to give my assent to this amendment. I am considering and studying the matter, listening to the discussion; but at this time I am not prepared to give my assent to the provision.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am encouraged to know that, Mr. President, because I think the counsel of the Senator from North Carolina on the other side will have great weight. My own opinion is that while the Senator says he is not in favor of entering into treaties, his subsequent remark that he is in favor of entering into some sort of international arrangement guaranteeing independence amounts to the same thing, and that undoubtedly it would lead us to a continuous series of difficulties and to war if we adopted it, owing to the responsibility which we would necessarily assume, regardless of the form which the agreement took, because the Senator is correct in saying that other nations would look upon the islands with covetous eyes. Other nations need them. Some nations need the undeveloped rice fields of the Philippine Islands to support their overcrowded population. Now, if we undertake to guarantee independence, we have got to meet that contingency.

Mr. President, if we propose to commit ourselves to the proposition of abandoning the Philippine Islands we ought to do it to-day; we ought to get out of the islands as soon as it is physically possible for us to get out of them. I can quote the argument of a dozen Senators on the other side to prove that we are under no obligation to remain there a day longer to educate them or to preserve their independence or for any other purpose. We ought either to be there or not to be there. If we are there, we ought to give them self-government, a good government, and we ought to exercise such sovereignty and jurisdiction over them as will enable us to do that; else we should leave at once.

However, Mr. President, should we pursue such a policy, within a very few months the people of the islands would be engaged in civil war. Instead of being a Philippine republic or a Philippine monarchy, there would be a large number of Philippine nations. Every local leader who chafed at the restraint of some national regulation which interfered with his interest would defy that restraint, and there would be independent governments set up in every island of any importance and perhaps in different portions of the larger islands of the archipelago.

Self-government reduced to its ultimate analysis means the capacity of the individual to submit to law; and the reason why so many of the Latin American colonies—not all of them, but many of them—have been in a constant state of disorder and violence is the lack of that individual quality on the part of their people.

A rule by violence, a medieval system—

> Let him take who has the power,
> And let him keep who can—would soon be established in the archipelago. So far from having freedom or individual liberty or self-government, a state of virtual slavery, a condition of gradually increasing peonage, would oppress the masses of the people of those islands, just as it has for generations ground down in pitiful bondage the masses of the people of Mexico. They would be the subject of exploitation of the so-called politicos. They have no knowledge, if one is to believe the statements of disinterested and well-informed and competent observers, of what independence means. There is no desire upon the part of their leaders to educate the masses, but, on the contrary, the policy is much like that of Spain—to keep them in a state of ignorance, in order to keep them in a state of subjection.

There can be independence, Mr. President, without self-government, and, in my judgment, independence in this case would make self-government impossible. On the other hand, there can be self-government without independence; and there are many concrete illustrations of both those propositions. When the great war between the British Empire and the Boers was on—if the Senate will pardon a personal reference, my sympathies were very strongly with the Boers. I looked upon them as a people who had been imposed upon, as a brave and courageous people, capable of self-government, who were being oppressed; but that question was settled the other way.

The power of Great Britain, not by conquering their armed soldiers in the field—for they did not do that—but by overrunning their country and concentrating their women and children in camps, threatening the entire race with extermination, imposed the superior might of its Government upon them by military force. To-day, Mr. President, after the lapse of years, just as there have been the changes of years in the case of the Philippine Islands—I have no feeling that the former Boer Republics are being oppressed or that they are being deprived of self-government. When I witness the advance that has taken place there, when I read of men who had committed an offense punishable with death—treason to the Empire—surrendered to their former compatriots to be dealt with as they saw fit, and, after a brief incarceration, given their liberty, I realize, as never before, that, while they may not have independence, and the tie of sovereignty to the British Empire is not released, they have self-government in the fullest and best sense of the word.

It is so, Mr. President, with our great and magnificent neighbor on the north, the self-governing Dominion of Canada; it is so with Australia, bound to the British Empire not by laws that oppress and compel their support but rendering in this time of the need of their mother country their full measure of men and means through the love which they bear to a country which gives them security, international peace, and individual liberty.

On the other hand, Mr. President—and this is the question which is involved in the preamble of this resolution—I see a country to the south of us which has independence. The so-called Republic of Mexico is a sovereign Republic, and yet the priceless privileges of self-government, a word which has been used so often in the course of this debate, and something which Senators are so eagerly seeking to give to the Filipinos, as though they did not have it in great extent now, is unknown in Mexico.

I witnessed the other day a Senator put into the RECORD the constitution that had been prepared under the Aguinaldo government, and he eulogized it as a beautiful expression of the principles of self-government and a proof of the ability of those people to understand and adopt it. Why, Mr. President, you can read in the laws of Mexico a constitution that is freer than that of the United States; but it is not the documents which a few men, sincere or insincere, in their drawing-rooms can frame and publish that is to determine whether a people are capable of self-government or whether they possess it; it is the use which they make of their opportunities. The proof is in the administration of the law. While Mexico is a free Republic on paper, it has for a generation been a military dictatorship in fact. For some five or six years it has been a hotbed of lawlessness, violence, and anarchy, of disregard for the rights of personal liberty, of life, and of property of their own people, as well as of the citizens of other countries who had been invited there on lawful missions of peace.

Mr. President, we know that we may give to the people of the Philippine Islands—and I mean no affront to them; I know the differences between those people and the Mexican people; they are an entirely different people—the same measure of independence which Mexico had; and, in a few years, although there will be many earnest souls there who will ardently desire it, they will have no more individual security and no more government of, by, and for the people than has Mexico.

Mr. President, if the object of this bill is, through the mistaken means of independence, to give self-government to these people, I agree that there can be no higher object. I know that the Magna Charta is as great a document, in the long course by which we won the blessings of liberty, as the Declaration of Independence; I know that the security of person, the dignity and self-respect which come from the guaranties of that instrument, which won a large measure of self-government in the island of Britain, are, in fact the ultimate objects which the patriots of our war for independence had in severing our relations with England; but unless they had had a capacity to establish on these shores those same individual privileges and rights which English subjects enjoyed in the mother country, they would never have framed nor ever have adopted a Declaration of Independence, because it would have been a fruitless labor.

I should like Senators to reflect, while they may talk about the fundamental principles of government and the inalienable rights of man, of which Rousseau and Tom Paine spoke, that there are some practical circumstances to be considered here and to be put ahead of academic reasoning and of abstract ideals and impossible theories, namely, the plain middle-of-the-day facts and conditions with which we are dealing. After we build up a government in the Philippine Islands and those people have adjusted themselves to it during a course of years, and laws have been made and enforced and the people have become accustomed to them, can you imagine anything more without reason or any foundation of solid judgment than to say we must now go back and examine Rousseau and Tom Paine and see what they said and find out whether or not the principles enunciated by them are in force in the Philippine Islands? If we are to found a government, Mr. President, we desire all the inalienable rights of man that are consistent with peace and order and good government to be embedded in its law; but when that government is founded, we must proceed with such means as may be adapted to the conditions which exist.

For one, I would not have acquired the Philippine Islands. Having some sense of the complex problems that would grow out of the War with Spain—and this is one of them, though I do not claim to have foreseen this identical question, except that in a vague way I apprehended similar problems—I felt that we ought not to have gone into that war; but after we had gone into the islands, I confess that when the question arose in 1900 of whether we should abandon them, I thought that, having expended our blood and treasure for them, we ought to keep them.

Mr. President, we might have considered then the fundamental rights of man and the fundamental principles which ought to be incorporated in the constitution of a State, but the time is very different now. These people are happy and contented; peace and order prevail; they have the growing blessings of education and increasing opportunities in business and for bettering their condition and relieving themselves from the servitude of absolute poverty. Under such conditions, to say that, because there is a doctrine that no man shall be governed without his consent, government ought to be overthrown, if applied in this country, would result immediately in disorder and rebellion even in the United States.

Why, Mr. President, when one of the Senators who is advocating the abandonment of all these great results of our occupation of the Philippines was a small boy—I do not think he was old enough to take part in the struggle—his father and relatives—and I may say my father—were engaged in one of the greatest struggles that mankind ever engaged in for the independence of Mississippi and Virginia, as a part of the Confederacy, from the Federal Union. No people could have given more for the faith that was in them than they gave. I am as fully aware as is the Senator from Mississippi, and understand just as well their devotion to that cause. The feelings it aroused still occasionally flare up after all these years. For four years they carried on that war, until they were exhausted in men, in treasure, prostrate before a superior power, resentful, hostile in their feelings toward the Federal Government; but now years have gone on, conditions have evolved from that state of chaos in which the South was left at the close of the war, and I do not think I make a mistake when I say that if you searched the innermost consciousness of the Senator from Mississippi and had him answer upon it he would not change to-day the relations which exist between his State and this great Republic; that he would not, if it were given to him to choose, have that independence for which his fathers fought.

So, Mr. President, after we have fought, after we have expended our genius and our time in the government of the Philippine Islands in building up there a self-governing dependency, the mass of the Filipinos would not go back to the conditions that existed before we went there.

I do not think any excuse can be given for such a provision as is incorporatd in this bill under which, though we stay there, at some unknown time in the future, under conditions which no man can foresee as to the Filipinos or as to ourselves, we shall find ourselves bound by a solemn legislative promise that we will come away and sever our relations with them. If that is statesmanship, then the great statesmen of the world have been misrepresented.

Now, it is said, Mr. President—and I want briefly to discuss another phase of the question—that we can not take up this matter ab initio, because binding promises have been given to the Philippine people which raised certain expectations among them which it would now be immoral to disappoint. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] has already discussed, I think, very conclusively the facts as to whether any such promises were given by any of our administrative executive officers. I do not think anything was said by them which, upon reasonable interpretation, could have been held to guarantee that we would evacuate the islands, whatever might have been said by them as to an autonomous form of government, which is rather a vague form.

I am in favor of an autonomous form of government as rapidly as it can be developed, so far as their internal affairs are concerned, and their internal affairs, mind you, are the same as their national affairs; if they get independence it covers the entire archipelago. I am willing for them to govern those things, and it may be that some of the expressions of American officials led them to expect that would be evolved. But, Mr. President, regardless of whether or not the expressions justified that interpretation, is it to be contended here that the American people have been deprived of the essential power over their government to determine this question for themselves through their Representatives in Congress? No. Is there any sophistry of argument by which it could be held that Mr. Taft or Mr. Francis Burton Harrison or anybody else who may have assumed such powers of government in the Philippine Islands have fixed their status by some individual declaration they may have made? Of course not, Mr. President. The proposition is absolutely absurd. They had no right to do so. The intelligent Filipino people knew they had no right to bind this Government; that it was a matter of congressional action. No belief that the question was precluded or concluded in any way could legitimately have arisen from those declarations, whatever they may have been, even though they went further than the Senator from Rhode Island has shown.

Mr. President, the fact of the case is that, so far from having bound ourselves to sever our relations with the islands and give them complete independence, and so far as it was possible for any past administration to bind this Government upon the question at all, we have informed the Filipino people by our action upon the question of independence that we proposed to retain the ultimate sovereignty over the islands. That is a statement of fact, and I want to briefly demonstrate that it is correct.

I mentioned a moment ago that in 1900 one of Mr. Bryan's issues—I think the "paramount issue," as he expressed it in that campaign—the Senator from Colorado will know if I am correct—was the Philippine question, or imperialism, as it was called.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I think that was regarded by Mr. Bryan as the paramount issue in that campaign.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. LIPPITT. If the Senator will allow me, it was not only regarded personally by Mr. Bryan as the paramount issue in that campaign, but it was distinctly so stated in the platform adopted by the Democratic convention of that year.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is certainly true, Mr. President, and I was going to call attention to the fact that it was submitted for decision to the highest tribunal known to our form of government for the settlement of general policies of this kind, namely the American people. This platform of the Democratic Party declared in 1900:

> We favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to give the Filipinos, first, a stable form of government; second, independence; and third, protection from outside interference.

If that platform is to be carried out in this bill, not satisfied with the burdens that we have assumed under the Monroe doctrine in the Americas, we will establish something analogous to it in Asia, among people who are so alien to our system of government that the Senator from Mississippi says we can never reconcile them to it.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield in just a moment. I was just going to state, to complete the sentence, that the Democratic issue which was submitted to the American people by the Democratic platform of that year—and I am going to call attention to some other features of it a little later—made the rather Quixotic proposal that we should have no interest in the Philippine Islands; that we should abandon our sovereignty over them, and yet we should not allow any other nation to go in there at all; it would be our business in case we abandoned them to prevent any other nation from going there.

Mr. GALLINGER. And to fight to prevent them going there.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I wanted to call the Senator's attention to the fact—although the Senator has referred to it already—that the effect of the Democratic platform was equivalent to this, "We will give you independence with an American protectorate."

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. NELSON. It was proposed that we should continue there as their protector, as their guardian.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Exactly.

Mr. NELSON. They were to have independence under those conditions.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That was exactly what was proposed, a proposal which, as I have said, would extend something analogous to the Monroe doctrine, which was supposed to be confined to the Western Hemisphere, into the Orient, and undertake to say to other countries—at least to this extent it was analogous to the Monroe doctrine—"you shall not colonize in the Philippine Islands or acquire territory there without their consent." Inevitably, Mr. President, that would have involved us in war, if we had undertaken to maintain it, and would have done so before now had independence been granted.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator if he took the Democratic platform seriously? It seems to me he is wasting time, because nobody else took it in that way, not even the Democrats.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Except for the purposes of debate. That seems to be about the only use that is made of it. There are various reasons given for not living up to it—as in the case of the abandonment of their platform on the Panama Canal tolls question, that when the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] read the platform there was so much noise in the convention hall that the delegates could not hear it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, in reference to the question as to the paramount issue in 1900, is it not also admitted by the Senator that while Mr. Bryan desired to make that the paramount issue, the New York papers would not let him, and that they claimed that he was in favor of free silver and thereby turned a great number of people in the East against him?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think that is true, Mr. President. Not only the New York papers would not let him, but the American people by a plurality of 849,790 would not let him. It was submitted to them and was decided against him. Of course the Senator's explanation in regard to the claim that Mr. Bryan was in favor of free silver is a good deal like the excuse I mentioned a moment ago about the Democratic platform at Baltimore. I know that there were other issues involved besides imperialism, but I do claim that was the paramount one, and, if our elections mean anything at all, if a public policy—and every national platform contains more than one question—can ever be determined in a general national election, this question was determined in that election, and the Philippine people knew it and took notice of it, or should have done so, any statement any executive officer made there to the contrary notwithstanding.

Practically the same proposition was again submitted very persistently in 1904. In that year the Democratic platform declared:

> We insist that we ought to do for the Filipinos what we have done already for the Cubans, and it is our duty to make that promise now, and, upon suitable guarantees of protection to citizens of our own and other countries resident there at the time of our withdrawal, set the Filipino people upon their feet, free and independent to work out their own destiny.

I can personally vouch for the fact that that issue was carried before the people upon the hustings and the decision of the people was 2,545,515 plurality against the proposition; and the Filipino people knew of that.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has read the platform of the Democratic Party for one year upon the Philippine question, and says that question was necessarily submitted to the people and the people decided against it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is right upon that. The people, when they decide against a party, are supposed to decide against the principles which the party avows and upon which it nominates its candidate for President. But in 1912 the Democratic Party again made a declaration with reference to the Philippines.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I can give the Senator the decision on that. The plurality of Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Taft over Mr. Wilson in that election was 1,311,444.

Mr. SIMMONS. Still, President Wilson was elected according to the Constitution of the United States, and both Houses of Congress were elected according to the Constitution of the United States, and they are now all Democratic.

The declaration of the party in 1912 was to this effect:

> We favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands as soon as a stable government can be established, such independence to be guaranteed by us until the neutralization of the islands can be secured by treaty with other powers.

The Senator from Minnesota was therefore mistaken when he said that the Democratic Party proposed to exercise suzerainty over the islands. The declaration of the last platform, the platform upon which we came into power, the platform upon which we have a Democrtic Senate and a Democratic House and a Democratic President, does not provide for any suzerainty over the Philippines. It simply provides that we will guarantee their independence, the independence of their government, until the neutralization of the islands can be secured.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. LIPPITT. I should like, with the permission of the Senator from North Carolina, to ask him whether he considers that there is anything in the bill now before the Senate that carries out the provisions of the platform as expressed by the convention of 1912?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think there is a declaration in the preamble of the bill.

Mr. LIPPITT. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to the fact that the platform specifies that independence is to be given when a stable government can be established, while the bill which is now under discussion specifies that independence shall be given when in the opinion of the United States it is for the permanent interest of the Filipino people. The proviso which constitutes the limitation on the bill and the limitation that is in the platform have no relation to each other in any way. In fact, if I may be allowed to say so, the bill is itself as foreign from the conditions on which the platform was based as many of the other methods and policies that the Democratic Party have adopted are different from their other platform utterances.

Mr. SIMMONS. The declaration in the preamble of the bill—that they shall be given their independence as soon as the well-being of the Philippine people will justify it—I think in itself implies that it is to be given when there is a stable government; because until there is a stable government, or until the people have reached such a stage of development and intelligence and education that they can establish a government in their own interest, to be operated for their own welfare, I do not think they are probably in a condition to establish a stable government. When they do, in that condition they have all the elements necessary to the establishment of a stable government. They can not establish a stable government——

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator from North Carolina is entirely——

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator will not permit me to finish a sentence. They can not establish a stable government in the Philippines until they are given an opportunity to establish a stable government. We are exercising such control and dominion over there as does not permit them either to establish for themselves a stable government or to demonstrate their ability to establish a stable government; but when they have reached that condition of intelligence, that condition of education, where it is reasonable to suppose that if permitted to establish a stable government they are in a condition and will be able to do it, then they have reached the requirements of the declaration in the Democratic platform.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I am very glad to hear the Senator make the last statement that he made, because he points out what is evident to any thoughtful person—that the Democratic platform as it was adopted by their convention and as it establishes the condition for independence of the Philippines is an absolutely illogical and impossible condition to conform to under any circumstances. It is manifestly true, as the Senator from North Carolina says, that it would be impossible for the Filipino people to demonstrate their ability to establish or to carry on a stable government so long as the United States continued to exercise its sovereignty over them.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. LIPPITT. I do not care to interrupt the Senator's speech.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I simply wanted to inquire if the Senator expected to go on at any considerable length?

Mr. LIPPITT. I am very much obliged to the Senator for allowing me to interrupt him.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I agree with the point the Senator is making; and that, in my opinion, is one of the chief objections to this bill. The advocates of it argue, on the one hand, that we must give the Filipinos independence before they can fit themselves for self-government, and upon the other hand say that they will not give them independence until they are fitted for self-government. That is the inconsistency of the bill. The Senator from North Carolina is also wrong, I think, in regard to the platform of 1912 not committing the Democratic Party to guarantee the independence of the islands.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not say that. I said the platform of 1912 expressly committed the Democratic Party to guarantee the independence of the government of the islands, and that that was not a suzerainty; that it did not propose, as the Senator from Minnesota suggests, that this Government would continue to exercise suzerainty over them, but that it would continue to guarantee their independence against any nation seeking to overthrow their government.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the question whether or not guaranteeing their independence amounts to a suzerainty depends upon the definition of the word "suzerainty." I think, myself, that it does.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, have not nearly all the nations or great powers of the world guaranteed the integrity of the territory and the Government of China? As the result of the Boxer troubles there, all the great nations intervened; and after that trouble was overcome, and order was restored in China, they then withdrew and gave an international guaranty of the integrity of the territory and independence of the Government of China. Does the Senator contend that that was a suzerainty that the great nations of the earth set up over the territory of China and the Government of China?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think the Senator has stated accurately the language of the international agreement relative to China; but assuming that it was in substance as the Senator says, it would be, in my judgment, a form of suzerainty by the nations making the guaranty for the protection of China as against any other nation not a party to the agreement or against any one of them attempting to violate it. I think it would come within the meaning of "suzerainty," and might, of course, lead up to conflict between the nations so agreeing in case of its violation by one of them.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to ask the Senator whether it is contended, either by him or by the Senator from North Carolina, that there is anything in this bill that provides that our Government shall guarantee the independence of the Philippines after it is once established until the neutralization of the islands is secured by treaty with other powers, as stated in the Democratic platform of 1912?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator that while I have not examined the bill very carefully, I do not understand that in this particular bill there is any language providing for the guaranty of the independence of the government of the islands. There is in the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I understand that.

Mr. SIMMONS. The bill, as I understand, contents itself with a declaration that so soon as an independent government is thought by this Government to be in the interest of the Philippines it is proposed to allow them that degree of liberty.

Mr. NORRIS. It is not claimed, then, as I understand, by the Senator from North Carolina or anyone else, that this bill is a full compliance with the declaration of the Democratic platform of 1912?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think the bill assumes that the time for granting independence has arrived. I am speaking now of the bill itself, independently of the amendment. The bill does not assume that the time has arrived when the United States should retire from the islands and accord independence to the Filipinos. The amendment does assume that the time has arrived.

Mr. NORRIS. That being true, if the Senator from Washington will permit a further interruption, is it, then, the intention of the Senator from North Carolina that when independence is brought about there shall be coupled with it a proposition that the Government of the United States shall guarantee the independence of the islands until a treaty with the powers can be agreed upon regarding their independence?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not a member of the Committee on the Philippines, and I speak only as an individual Senator; but it would be my desire that whenever this Government shall accord independence to the Filipinos, it shall at the same time guarantee them the independence of their government until their country can be properly neutralized and have the support of the powers of the world. That is the position I occupy with reference to this question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like very much to proceed, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield in just a moment. As particular attention has been directed to the Democratic platform of 1912, it may be well to point out this fact: I suppose the party who made the platform are back of this bill. It is reasonable to hold them responsible for it; and as the Senator has just said, the bill does not assume that the time has arrived to make a declaration in favor of Filipino independence. The Democratic convention, however, did assume that the time had arrived, and declared in favor of an immediate declaration.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator fails to differentiate between a declaration favoring the immediate passage of legislation giving them independence and an immediate declaration that they should at some future time, when certain conditions have transpired, be awarded their independence. The platform declaration is not that the Democrats shall immediately accord to the Philippines independence of the United States. That is not the platform declaration. That seems to be the idea the Senator has in his mind, however.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; that is not my idea.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator seems to think the platform provides that we shall immediately accord to the Filipinos their independence. The language of the platform is as follows:

> We favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands—

When?—

> as soon as a stable government can be established.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the bill attaches an entirely different condition. It leaves it entirely in the discretion of the United States—

> when, in the judgment of the United States, it will be to the permanent interest of the people of the Philippine Islands—

An entirely different condition from anything that could be interpreted out of the platform.

Now, Mr. President, on this question of whether or not the Philippine people had any reason to feel that we had bound ourselves as a nation to grant them entire independence, I want very briefly to put in the RECORD the language of the Democratic platform of 1908, in which this declaration was contained:

> We favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands as soon as a stable government can be established, such independence to be guaranteed by us as we guarantee the independence of Cuba, until the neutralization of the islands can be secured by treaty with other powers.

That issue was submitted to the people, and was decided against the Democratic Party by a plurality of 1,269,804 for Mr. Taft.

Those, however, were not the only occasions on which the American Nation committed itself upon this policy. The question was decided a number of times by a yea-and-nay vote in the Senate of the United States. When the treaty with Spain was presented to the Senate, Mr. Vest offered an amendment to it, as follows:

> The United States, desiring that the people of the archipelago shall be enabled to establish a form of free government suitable to their condition and securing the rights of life, liberty, and property and the preservation of order and equal rights therein, assumes for the time being and to the end aforesaid the control of the archipelago so far as such control shall be needful for the purposes above stated, and will provide that the privileges accorded to Spain by Article IV and V of this treaty shall be enjoyed.

That was decided in the negative by a vote of 53 to 30 in the Senate of the United States on the 6th day of February, 1899.

Everybody remembers the diligence with which the identical discussion that has been carried on upon this bill was carried on throughout the country on the so-called issue of "imperialism" immediately after we had made the treaty with Spain. I remember the prominent part that Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, took in it. There was a gentleman named Edward Atkinson, a statistician, who was very prominent among the anti-imperialists. They were able men. All of this is like raking up bones from a sepulcher of dead issues. They have been decided and determined time and time again. Even though it should have been well at that time, as I have said, to decide against so-called imperialism, an entirely different question is presented now, after the lapse of years.

On the 6th day of February, 1899, Mr. Hoar moved to amend the joint resolution which was pending with regard to the Philippines by inserting after the word "islands," where it appeared the third time—that is, after the words "to make such disposition of said islands as will best promote the interests of the citizens of the United States and the inhabitants of the said islands"—the words "with the consent of the people thereof"—that is, with the consent of the people of the Philippine Islands—thus raising this identical question. It was submitted to a record vote on the motion of Mr. Aldrich to lay it on the table, which motion to lay it on the table prevailed by a vote of 45 against 34.

The issue was very persistently made in the Senate; and in view of the insistence with which the argument has been made here now that we have promised to give them independence, I am taking the time to put in the RECORD the proof that we not only have not promised to give independence but we have put ourselves officially on record in the only way we have ever taken any official action on this question—and this was official action, because it was a matter officially determined by the Senate in the exercise of its powers and jurisdiction—against the proposition of absolute independence, saving all the time, at least so far as I am concerned, the matter of self-government, for which I shall vote, and which I hope to see developed for the people of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. Hoar again moved to amend the resolution by inserting, after the words "United States," where they appeared the second time, the words "or to force a government on them against their will." Where the declaration in the resolution said:

Nor is it intended to permanently annex said islands as an integral part of the territory of the United States—

He moved to amend by inserting the words "or to force a government on them against their will." On a motion to lay that amendment on the table, the motion to lay on the table prevailed by a vote of 46 against 30.

Mr. Bacon, of Georgia, one of the leading Senators of this body at that time, and at one time chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, moved to amend the resolution by inserting at the end the following:

Resolved further, That the United States hereby disclaim any disposition or intention to exercise permanent sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said islands—and assert their determination, when a stable and independent government shall have been erected therein entitled, in the judgment of the Government of the United States, to recognition as such, to transfer to said government, upon terms which shall be reasonable and just, all rights secured under the cession by Spain, and to thereupon leave the government and control of the islands to their people.

The same identical question which is now before the Senate—

There, Mr. President, was a statesmanlike proposition, supposing the policy of getting out was to be followed. He proposed to get out, not to get out, and at the same time to stay in—a logical impossibility. He proposed to leave the government and the control of the islands to their people. That question was voted on, and on the direct question of the passage of the resolution the yeas were 29 and the nays were 29. There was a tie vote in the Senate upon that resolution, which contains almost the same language as the preamble of this bill and attaches the same condition as to when their independence should be actually granted, and the Vice President cast the deciding vote against the resolution, thereby again officially declaring the policy of the United States on that issue.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. LIPPITT. I simply wanted to ask whether that vote was a vote on the Bacon amendment or on the bill itself?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It was upon the adoption of the Bacon resolution.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If these votes in the Senate are so important as the Senator from Washington seems to think them, what would he say as to the vote which was taken in the House of Representatives last year, in the Sixty-third Congress, the Members of which were elected at the time of the election of 1912, when President Wilson was elected? The bill declaring in favor of Philippine independence as soon as a stable government could be established was passed in the House of Representatives by a vote of 3½ to 1, there not being even a party division upon it.

If these votes in the Senate are to bind the American people, does not the Senator think the vote of the direct representatives of the people, elected under the platform which was expressed in the Democratic convention, would have some binding force to show that those representatives understood that the people meant to give the Filipinos independence?

Mr. POINDEXTER. On the contrary, Mr. President, strange as it may seem, it shows just the opposite. I think it did not have any binding force, because the Senate many years before, in its official capacity, declared just the opposite, and the House of Representatives did not consider it had any binding force. So you have to apply the same rule to the action taken by the House of Representatives. I am not contending that this action of the Senate had a binding force, because it has always been my contention that we not only ought not to undertake to bind the future of the United States in this matter, but that we had no power to do so. That has been the argument of the advocates of the bill, based upon the declarations of administrative officers. I have attempted to refute it by showing that it has been declared to the opposite effect, and those declarations are entitled to more weight in the consideration of this question than are the others.

One or two other phases of the question——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Right there, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not understand that anyone in this debate has taken the position that binding promises have been made, because nothing but an act of the Congress of the United States can absolutely bind. But the position they take is that the Governor General and the President of the United States have said certain things with relation to the independence of the Philippines, and the statement is here made, and it is contended upon our side that those promises are morally binding, because they represent high officials of the Government and that the world takes them as governmental promises. Now, I want to call the Senator's attention to one.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I hope the Senator will not go on at great length.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like the Senator's opinion as to this which I am going to read.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If it is not too long and does not take too much space.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will read just that and then yield. I want to read it, and I want to ask the Senator whether he thinks it ought to be considered as a governmental promise.

The President of the United States has charged me to deliver to you the following message on behalf of the Government of our country:

That was Gov. Gen. Harrison talking to the Philippine General Assembly.

We regard ourselves as trustees, acting not for the advantage of the United States but for the benefit of the people of the Philippine Islands. Every step we take will be taken with a view to the ultimate independence of the islands and as a preparation for that independence; and we hope to move toward that end as rapidly as the safety and the permanent interests of the islands will permit. After each step taken experience will guide us to the next.

When a man sent to the Philippine Islands as the Governor General of the islands, addressing in their General Assembly representatives of the Philippine people, says "The President of the United States has charged me to deliver to you this message of independence," can it be possible to say there is no moral obligation there? I should like to have the Senator say whether he thinks that would imply a moral obligation?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think that it is impossible, Mr. President, for Mr. Burton Harrison to fix such an obligation upon the United States. I do not say that with any reflection upon Mr. Harrison. I know that he is a very honorable gentleman. I served in the House of Representatives with him and have a very high personal regard for him. But I say that in the nature of things, even though Governor General of the Philippine Islands, he could not deprive the people of the United States of the right to settle this question for themselves, and if he could fix a moral obligation upon them that is as binding as any other obligation, of course the result would be that it did deprive them of the right to settle it for themselves.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to his colleague?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. JONES. I merely wanted to ask my colleague if he thought Gov. Gen. Harrison even assumed to do that? He says he is charged by the President. That was the message he was told to deliver to those people by the President himself. Does my colleague think that the President even could impose a moral obligation upon the people of the Philippines?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Undoubtedly not, Mr. President. The President of the United States knows perfectly well that he had no right to impose any sort of an obligation upon the people. He might have been in a general way representing his party. He is representing his own views about the matter, and of course his own views were entitled to great weight, but it did not constitute any obligation, moral or legal or otherwise, upon the people of the United States to carry it out. If it did, it would handicap them and deprive them of the free agency in this matter which, of course, they have.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I agree with the Senator from Washington that any utterance by the Governor General could not be taken at this time as imposing a moral obligation upon the people of the United States to do anything, but I want to ask the Senator if there has not been an implied promise? Has there not been an understanding from the day the American flag was planted on the Philippine Islands that independence would ultimately be given to those people?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Answering that question with the utmost frankness, Mr. President, and having been at a place where this question was quite near to us, on the Pacific Coast, and where public questions are probably as actively discussed as they are in any part of the country, my impression was that the opposite proposition had been established as a policy of the Government. I should like to say why. I am impressed with the memory of the issue of imperialism that was thrashed out before the country, and with the division of public sentiment upon that question, and with the fact that it was decided against those who wanted to withdraw from the Philippine Islands, or to make any declaration of withdrawal. The general impression, the public impression, in my vicinity, and I think it represented the general public impression of the country, was that we were to remain in the Philippine Islands, to give them self-government; that after the difficulties and bloodshed of restoring order and setting up a competent government all would be well, and the Philippine people themselves would be thoroughly satisfied.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Was not this the impression upon the Senator's mind, that to the argument of imperialism the answer was made that we made a mistake when we went there, but having gotten into the islands, having taken control of them, it was not fair to the Filipino, it was not fair to the people who have made investments there, to leave at this time, waiting until under the tutelage of the American Government the Filipinos might be qualified to maintain a government of their own?

I have heard, I think, for the first time any Senator or any student of this question announce that it was the purpose of the United States to hold those islands permanently. As a matter of fact, we have always contended that we were not going to hold them. We knew they were not fit for citizenship in this Republic. We did not desire that the Philippine Islands become States, because we did not want any more of that colored virus injected into the body politic, and we were only holding them there until such time as they might be qualified under the control of the United States Government to maintain a government of their own. Not such a Government as ours, but a government for themselves.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, we are under no responsibility to do that. The Senator can not point out in any principle, even of generosity and philanthropy toward a weaker people, any duty on the part of the United States to go to the other side of the world to maintain order and in a foreign country to put their country in good condition, to establish free government for a people knowing in advance that we were to retain no permanent interest there.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. Do not make a mistake. I have never thought that we had the moral right to hold those people. I have never had any sort of respect for the argument made in favor of holding them as long as we have done, but my understanding has always been that the advocates of holding the islands have only believed that we should hold them for such time as those people might be qualified under American instruction for self-government.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, that time never would arrive, according to the argument of the Senator from Mississippi, because I have heard the junior Senator from Mississippi very eloquently express the view that no people, being supported and guided by another government, would ever develop the capacity to take care of themselves. So you are looking for the gold in the rainbow. You are looking for something that is visionary.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am not looking to that, but I was just taking the argument those gentleman have made who insisted on holding the islands. I do not think they were qualified.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator agrees with me at least to that extent. I think the most unreasonable proposition in this whole issue is the proposition to go on there after we have made up our minds to get out. If we have made up our minds to get out, as I said before, the sooner we do it the better.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will pardon me, I think the time has arrived when we ought to get out, and I shall vote for such an amendment to the bill. I wish we could have gotten out yesterday.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The other day one of the Senators here—I think it was the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH]—asked if the Argentine Republic is not capable of self-government, if Chile is not capable of self-government. I think the Senator from Colorado would agree that neither the Argentine Republic nor the Republic of Chile would have had an opportunity for self-government but for the protection of the United States. I do not say that, Mr. President, with the intention of reflecting in any way upon the character or capacity of the people of those marvelous Republics of South America, any more than I would reflect upon the American people if I were to say that, in my judgment, we should never have gained our independence but for the assistance of France at a critical time in our Revolutionary War. Something was said here the other day about the President being a man who had visions. There was a time when we were not so strong materially but much stronger spiritually as a nation than we are to-day when by a statesman who had vision indeed a great doctrine was promulgated which involved the safety of our own Republic and the integrity of every Latin American Republic on the hemisphere.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Now, to apply it to the Philippine Islands. If you withdraw, unless you do the illogical thing of giving them independence according to the Democratic platform, and yet protecting them, while you have no control over their action, their situation, if left alone, will not be comparable to that of Chile and Argentina under the protecting ægis of the Monroe doctrine during all their growth. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, when I asked the question as to whether the people of Argentina are capable of self-government I was discussing the question as to their ability for self-government by their own officers, and I referred to the fact that their illiteracy was fully as great as that of the Philippine Islands, that Brazil's was a great deal more, and that Chile's was about the same as that of the Philippine Islands. As to whether or not there should be a protectorate, or whether they would maintain their independence, failing to be subjugated by some other country, is an entirely different question. The proposition whether those people are capable of self-government or would become capable of self-government is for them to settle; it is not for us to settle; and on that account the fact that we had the Monroe doctrine in South America has nothing to do with their ability to maintain a government of their own or self-government except to the extent of interference from outside.

The Philippine people do not care for a suzerainty or a protectorate over them by the American Government. They say that no other nation that has ever attained its independence has ever asked for a protectorate of any kind or character, and that usually there is more danger from a protectorate on account of the iron-hand policy that might be invoked at some time than there is danger of being subjugated by some other country. Consequently the question which I was discussing was as to whether Argentina, Brazil, and Chile were capable of self-government by the passage of laws and the administration of laws within their own country. The question as to whether there should be a protectorate is an entirely different question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is a different question, Mr. President, but it is the same question which is involved in this bill. This bill proposes the absolute independence of the Philippine Islands, and not only self-government in their internal affairs. I think I said in the beginning of my remarks that I would vote for a large degree of local self-government. That matter can be adjusted, even though mistakes are made in the trial of it. I am in favor of it. I should like to see the experiment.

The Senator says that is a different question from the question in Argentina and Chile, but the objection which we have to this bill is the preamble which proposes to give independence.

Since the Senator cited Chile and Argentina as a comparison, if we give the Philippines independence and do not assume a protectorate over them, there will be no such opportunity there as Chile and Argentina have had, either for maintaining independence or for developing self-government. Some foreign country—and I have heard it admitted this afternoon by Senators on the other side—would occupy the land. Many of the leading Filipinos have expressed the opinion that if the United States should withdraw its protection Europe would divide up the islands. It might not be Europe; it might be some Asiatic power. I think inevitably that that would take place.

In whatever way we undertake it, whatever the form of the treaty, whether a protectorate or by treaty of neutralization, the United States would still have the burden and responsibility, even though war should result. If it were known that we would not go to war to protect it, such a policy would be but a scrap of paper and as worthless as a dead leaf blown by the wind.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the Senator recognize that there are a good many small governments in the world that have maintained their independence for hundreds of years and have never had any war over it at all? Does he not recognize that Switzerland has been a republic for 500 years right in the midst of hostile nations? Siam has been an independent government. There is Holland that has been independent and Sweden and Norway have been independent governments. Italy and Greece have maintained independent governments. It is a question, however, it seems to me, that you put to the people as to whether they want a protectorate or not, and they are the ones, if we would be willing, who should determine that question. If the Philippine people are willing to take their independence without a protectorate it seems to me we ought not to raise an objection on our part.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I do not care to protract this dialectic process of reasoning indefinitely. I am very glad to yield to the Senator as long as he expresses his opinion. If I can just call attention to it, that is what I desire to do. He is not considering the interests of the United States or the expense or the responsibility so much as he is considering the desire of the Philippine people. I would reverse it myself. I have great regard for the Filipino people; I should like to see them happy and prosperous, but I have a greater regard for the interests of our own people.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Do you not think, Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. And I would not put upon the United States the great burden of protecting the Philippine Archipelago at the discretion of the Philippine people. I would reserve the decision of that question for our own Government and make the decision ourselves. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the Senator believe, if he is acting in the interest of the United States, and I have no doubt he would so act, it would be better for the United States to recognize the independence of those people than attempt to hold them under a protectorate?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think it would be much better, Mr. President, to give them their independence absolutely and unconditionally than it would be to give them their independence and then guarantee to protect them. I think that would be the height of unwisdom.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is nothing whatever in this bill that speaks of a protectorate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; but the Senator from Colorado talked about it a great deal; and the Democratic platform, which I suppose has presumptive force, at least declares in favor of it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think that the last Democratic platform was to the effect that a neutralizing agreement should be made with the leading nations of the world.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes. Now, are you going to back up your neutralization agreement when you make it, or allow it to be flouted and defied?

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is no responsibility in that, compared with the responsibility of holding suzerainty over the people.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator, it seems to me, does not believe in the traditional policy of his country to keep out of entangling alliances and treaties with foreign countries and confine ourselves to our own affairs and let Asia and Europe alone. I think myself that we cut off a pretty big slice of the world's affairs when we undertake to be a leader in the Western Hemisphere, without going into Asia and undertaking to say to the countries there what they shall do about the Philippine Islands. The retention of the Philippine Islands is a condition that has existed for 17 years. I have attempted to argue that it is not now open for argument any more than a law case that has been tried and submitted and finally determined. There ought to be an end to the discussion of this question, a settlement of the governmental policy, just as there is an end to litigation in the interest of repose. There ought to be a statute of limitations against continually reopening the relations of the Philippine Islands to the United States.

What I say is that with the burdens that we already have in America we ought not to go beyond these and undertake the responsibilities of the Philippines without the advantages of control over them. Answering the other part of the Senator's question, I will say I think there are advantages in the retention of the Philippines for the United States. I will very briefly undertake to show why there are.

But the Senator proposes to go beyond that and give up those advantages, if any there are, and retain all the dangers, all the responsibilities, by entering into an agreement as to what the future status of the islands shall be, after surrendering any power of control over their action, and allow them to become embroiled with every nation upon their borders with whom their people come in contact, surrender their finances, turn them over to any possible revolutionary orgy of selfish interest that may get control of the islands, and civil strife, which will inevitably break out, not only between the Moros and between the Christian tribes of the islands but between the different Christian tribes themselves; allow them to violate their contracts with the people of foreign countries, to conduct themselves in the most irresponsible way in which they may be capable of, and then assume the responsibility for the consequences.

That is quite different, Mr. President, from our present status there, maintaining our relations with the islands and keeping a hand upon their affairs to such an extent that security of life and property is preserved and the sanctity of contract is upheld, and the finances are reasonably well managed. Then we can afford to be responsible for their conduct because we can, in a measure, direct the course of their conduct.

But to propose, as is implied by the Senator's question, that we will release this control, the power to protect, and still be answerable to any country that wants to hold us answerable is quite a different proposition. Suppose you pass this bill to-day, Mr. President; suppose you adopt the Clarke amendment, or rather the preamble to the bill pledging this country in an official way by act of Congress that at some unknown indefinite time in the future we will withdraw from the islands, and we should have a war—I am not apprehensive as some of war—suppose that a war about the islands should arise next year or the year thereafter or 10 years from now, does the Senator propose, and whether he proposes or not it is inevitably involved in the preamble of the bill, that unless we dishonor ourselves, if we are to maintain our honor and protect our sovereignty, we shall have to go to war about the Philippine Islands and expend the treasure and the lives of our country, knowing at the time it was all for nothing, that we had pledged ourselves in advance to abandon the islands?

What has the Senator to say about that? It is a contingency which may happen. It may not be probable, but it is just as liable to happen in 10 years or in 5 years as at any other time. That is a contingency which should be considered in promising to give them their independence while yet retaining them.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I do not regard that a promise of independence imposes any obligation upon us whatever after we have established their independence. Until it is established of course we have a responsibility, but we have these hazards right now, and as long as we maintain the present status of the Philippine Islands we will continue to have that hazard. As sure as we have a difficulty with any foreign nation on the face of the globe there is where they are going to attack us. It is generally recognized by military men that they are a source of weakness to us; that there the attack will be; that there it will be impossible for us to defend because we are 7,000 miles from our base of supplies. That being the case, it seems to me if we could get the leading nations of the world to join us in having a neutralization agreement made it will preserve the peace and quiet not only of our own country but of the Philippine people.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I do not understand that the Senator is a military strategist. I respect his opinion, but I claim the same right to form an opinion about the military features of the question as the Senator from Colorado does, and I do not agree with him.

Mr. SHAFROTH. All I know is that every military man whose opinions I have read seems to imply that. President Roosevelt himself said it was a military weakness to us. Prof. Robinson, the lecturer at the War College, not two months ago announced that it would be a tremendous error for the Government of the United States ever to attempt to defend the Philippines. He said nothing but a weak President would ever send our Navy over there; that if the Philippines were attacked the only way to do would be not to defend them, but at the end of the war, as the result of the war, getting them back by reason of whatever treaty might be made.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I know, Mr. President, some military men may have expressed that opinion and many military men have expressed a contrary opinion. It is easy enough for a Senator—and I am not referring to the Senator from Colorado, whose nearest approach to carrying on a military campaign is running a plantation—to settle a question by saying if you put a chessman out in front of the others it will be captured, and, with a wave of the hand, upon that profound analysis of the situation, say that the Philippines are a military weakness.

The Senator quotes former President Roosevelt. I have never seen the statement to which he refers, but whether or not Mr. Roosevelt made such a statement, actions speak louder than words. In one of the crises through which Mr. Roosevelt brought us—a difficult situation with Japan—so far from claiming that we ought not to send our fleet to the Orient, he did that very thing; and he settled the crisis with Japan by so doing. When Mr. McKinley was President of the United States he sent a portion of our fleet to the Orient. When we had war with Spain we did not own the Philippine Islands, but he sent the fleet to the Philippine Islands, and the greatest naval victory in our modern history was gained in Manila Bay.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield to the Senator from Colorado for a question, but I should like to complete my argument.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well; then I shall not interrupt the Senator, if it is at all disagreeable to him.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is not at all disagreeable to me; it is very pleasant to be interrupted; but it occupies so much time; that is the only objection. I yield to the Senator, however, for a question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will ask the Senator whether it is not a fact that when we declared war against Spain we did not send our forces against Spain in her home territory, because it would have taken ten times the number of men and ten times the number of battleships to have accomplished the same result? Was it not because the Philippines were a source of weakness to Spain, and that it was a point of attack where we would have great advantage, that we attacked her outlying possessions, that were 13,000 miles from her base of supply? And did not that give us an advantage in that war which we would not have had if we had attacked Spain on her home territory?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the Philippine Islands were not so very much farther from Spain than they were from us, so far as miles were concerned. I will listen to the Senator's statement, and then I should like to go on.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like the attention of the honorable Senator for a moment. He stated that he had not seen the declaration of Mr. Roosevelt to which I referred and which I would like to read to him, because I regard Mr. Roosevelt not only as an able statesman but also as a strong military man. In the January, 1915, number of Everybody's Magazine, President Roosevelt stated:

> If we act so that the natives understand us to have made a definite promise, then we should live up to that promise. The Philippines, from a military standpoint, are a source of weakness to us. The present administration has promised explicitly to let them go and by its action has rendered it difficult to hold them against any serious foreign foe. These being the circumstances, the Islands should at an early moment be given their independence, without any guarantee whatever by us and without our retaining any foothold in them.

I regard the statement of Mr. Roosevelt upon the military situation, that the Philippines were a source of weakness to us, as being in accord with the sentiments that I have read of many military men, to the effect that any possession that is far distant from its base of supplies must of necessity be a source of military weakness to the country to which it belongs.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am very glad to know that the Senator from Colorado is following the opinion of Col. Roosevelt, even in that matter. I do not know the main subject of his remarks, and I am always skeptical of extracts from statements detached from their context and without knowledge of the circumstances under which they were spoken. I have a very great respect for Col. Roosevelt's opinion, but if he ever expressed the view which it is now stated he did, it is one of the few with which I disagree out of the many opinions which he has expressed, on a great many subjects, with which I heartily agree.

It is proposed by everybody in discussing this question to retain a part of the Philippine Islands for a naval station. It would be as difficult for the United States to defend a part of the Philippine Islands as it would be to defend them all.

I used to have a different opinion, and, in fact, I accepted it without giving any thought to the question. I remember seeing a very distinguished man, under whom I had the privilege of studying law, John Randolph Tucker, who served 20 years in Congress, a very brilliant man, make diagrams on the blackboard to prove that the Hawaiian possessions were a source of weakness to the United States, on some sort of mathematical calculation of fulcrums and levers—I do not remember the details of it—and I accepted it as Gospel truth; but upon thinking about the question, for the purpose of determining my vote on this bill, I have come to an entirely different conclusion as to the strategics of the Philippine Islands.

If we maintain a coaling station and naval base in the Philippine Islands, we shall be called on to defend it. The people of the United States would never for an instant submit to having it taken away from us by force of arms by a foreign country. Consequently such an attempt would precipitate a conflict there; it would necessitate a defense of that coaling station. I am told that Corregidor, the island in Manila Bay, is practically impregnable.

Now, I want to say, Mr. President, that however many men Japan—and I only mention Japan by way of illustration—or any other nation might land upon the shores of the Philippine Islands, however great an army it might put there, it could not maintain them there. Such a power could not hold the Philippine Islands unless she had the supremacy of the sea. It is a question which will be determined by the mastery of the sea; and it will be another instance in history of the determining influence of sea power upon the destinies of nations. If Japan——

Mr. LIPPITT rose.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just a second. If Japan should succeed in landing troops in the Philippine Islands—which she could probably do somewhere upon their shores—she could not maintain them except by keeping up a continuous line of communication with Japan; she would have to cross the sea; she could be met there by the fleet of the United States, and there, as well as anywhere upon the ocean, if the issue is ever to be made, it can be determined. If we gain the victory, she must evacuate the islands, because she could not maintain her armies there. If she gained the victory, she is the mistress of the Pacific; she has humbled and humiliated us; she can land her troops not only in the Philippines but in California and Washington, and she can invade the continental territory of this country.

Not only that, Mr. President, but she can deny us the right to sail the high seas of the world if she destroys our fleet; she can dictate to us the terms upon which we shall trade with the Orient. We shall be a humbled and subject power if Japan ever reaches the point where she is able to take and hold the Philippines against the United States, regardless of the question of the Philippines themselves.

I may say, Mr. President, that the same proposition applies on the Atlantic coast; that there, as well as upon the Pacific, we must maintain the mastery of the seas, at least against any naval armament which would be sent against us, or else we shall be cut off from intercourse with Europe and there would ensue a slow process of social, political, economic strangulation and disintegration. We must prevail with our Navy upon the sea, whether we have the Philippines or not, for the protection of our honor, of the right to trade and to travel, for the protection of our people around the world. If we do, the Philippines will fall into our lap as an easy result of that power. Now, I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I simply wanted to say to the Senator from Washington, in confirmation of the position which he has most eloquently and forcefully stated, that within two months one of the most eminent officers of the American Navy during a recent visit of mine to the Naval War College in Newport—this officer was at that time studying strategy—expressed to me almost identically the opinion which the Senator from Washington has expressed, and he did so in as forceful language as the distinguished Senator himself is using.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I thank the Senator for calling my attention to that.

Mr. LIPPITT. I should like to suggest one other thought to the Senator in considering this question of the Philippines in time of war, and that is that the enormous development of the submarine and the flying machine is, of course, something as to the exact extent of which we can not tell. It already has given such promise of further possibilities that it is only reasonable to suppose that it may go a great deal further than it has up to the present time. It is not at all unreasonable, it seems to me, to suppose that the day may come when the possibility of the Philippines as a station for submarines and flying machines may be of very great importance. We are only considering them now as a coaling station for our war vessels, but there are other means of offense and defense now in existence than war vessels. It is not at all unwise, it seems to me, to recognize the possibilities in these other directions.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, there have been some very able men who have visited the Philippine Islands for the express purpose of studying all of these questions on the ground, and the very suggestion that has just been made by the Senator from Rhode Island has been pointed out by Prof. Blayney, of Rice Institute, of Houston, Tex. I took some pains to inquire into the standing of Prof. Blayney, and I ascertained from the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] that Rice Institute is very handsomely endowed with something like $12,000,000 endowment, and that all its faculty are men of the very highest class. Consequently I accept with a great deal of confidence—subject, of course, to correction, as lawyers get in the habit of accepting everything, if any evidence to the contrary is introduced—the statements of Prof. Blayney in calling attention to the anomalous proposition in the preamble of this resolution that at some indefinite, vague, future time we pledge ourselves in advance to abandon those islands, that the vital interests of the United States might depend in the unknown developments of warfare upon their retention, just as the Senator from Rhode Island has said. In passing I want to say——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What is the article to which the Senator has referred?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am going to read from it in a moment. It is an article entitled "Our administration of the Philippine Islands," in the January, 1916, issue of the Review of Reviews. I will read an extract from it in a moment, because it is very pertinent, in my opinion.

Before passing the question of the advantage of the islands to the United States I want to say that we must accept the opinion of observers of credence if we desire to arrive at the truth on this question of fact. The success of the American Government in the Philippine Islands in the establishment of a government there such as it has established, in the administration of the material interests of the islands, in their sanitation, in the eradication of disease and of cattle pests, and in the restoration and maintenance of order has enhanced the reputation of the United States and of the citizens of the United States in every country of the Orient. By reason of that accomplishment American citizenship is worth more in that part of the world.

We have gained the respect and admiration of the Orient and of those European nations that have the responsibility of governing oriental countries by our work in the Philippines—a work upon an entirely different theory and different basis than that upon which the government of the British and French colonies is conducted. We have given them a greater amount of autonomy in government; we have extended to them privileges of self-government and of personal liberty and of right and security to a much greater extent than has any other country, and, at the same time, what we have done has not been incompatible with law and order. It is regarded as a great object lesson, and, aside from the military value, Mr. President, which I believe the possession of the islands is, the distinction and reputation which the United States has gained from the work we have done there is not only of a moral value but is of a material value to this country.

Why, Mr. President, one Senator said the other day that we ought to get out of those islands notwithstanding the wishes or the opinions of a lot of two-by-four ward politicians. If the men who, through war and the horrors of war, through the intricate problems of dealing in the Tropics with an oriental people ever accomplished the work which observers say they have accomplished, are the kind of two-by-four ward politicians that they have in Mississippi, my idea of that sort of timber would undergo a great change. They are men who have earned the gratitude of their country, if impartial observers are to be believed, by the honest and unselfish and efficient administration of government for 8,000,000 people; and it throws some light upon the amount of information which Senators discussing the question have when they refer as "two-by-four ward politicians" to men who have increased the honor of the country among foreign nations that have observed what they are doing.

I want to read, preliminary to the article of Prof. Blayney, this note by the editor of the Review of Reviews. He says:

In view of much recent and current discussion regarding the present management of public affairs in the Philippine Islands, we are publishing herewith an article by Prof. Thomas Lindsey Blayney, of the William M. Rice Institute, Houston, Tex. Prof. Blayney is a distinguished scholar, a man of great experience, and an admirer and supporter of President Wilson. All the circumstances of his visit to the Philippines, as well as his relationships at home, render it impossible that Prof. Blayney should have been actuated in his inquiries, and in the preparation of this article for the Review, by any other than the highest and most disinterested motives. Prof. Blayney was one of the professors honored by appointment during the past year by the American committee representing the Albert Kahn Foundation of Paris. This foundation sends two American university professors around the world each year, with the special object in view of having them study oriental conditions and ideals. In correspondence with the editor of this magazine, Dr. Blayney made the following remark:

"I have heard so many expressions of dissatisfaction from prominent Americans, both Democrats and Republicans, in various parts of the world, concerning the present policies of the administration at Manila that I determined to go to the Philippines and satisfy myself concerning the situation there.

"I talked with business men, native and foreign, educators, clergymen, Army and Navy officers, editors, American and British, and many Filipinos of undoubted patriotism and intelligence, and I do not hesitate to assure you that the demoralizing tendency of the policies of the present American administration in the islands is deserving of the widest publicity.

"I am an admirer of President Wilson, and do not wish to be considered as making an attack upon his policies. I have no direct or indirect interest in the islands, other than that of any American citizen who has left nothing undone in the brief time allotted to him to form an unprejudiced opinion, and who cherishes a sincere desire for the prosperity, happiness, and future independence of the islands, whether this be within or without the pale of the American Commonwealth."

I now quote from the body of the article:

When historians of the future shall have spoken a dispassionate and final verdict upon the deeds and achievements of the first decade of our occupancy of the Philippine Islands (before some of our less thoughtful politicians and papers at home had begun to make political capital out of the so-called "independence movement" in the islands), no more inspiring chapter in our national history will be found. Nor will there be found elsewhere a finer list of names of men representing the best type of American manhood and idealism than the pages that record the first 12 years of American administration and achievement in the Orient.

The present projection of partisan politics into the administration of the Philippine Islands—the tendency to allow party theories and sentimental notions to supersede the dictates of sound judgment and common sense—must needs be looked upon as an incidental, though regrettable, moment in the development of our over-the-sea policies. Above motives of such a type, our real statesmen of both parties, as contradistinguished from political opportunists, will surely rise. There is no phenomenon of our national life more passing strange than that which inclines many of our good people to accept the statements of paid emissaries of the Filipino political junta, or of some of our new and inexperienced officials at Manila, rather than those of our fellow countrymen of long administrative experience in the islands. Especially is this remarkable in view of the fact that the statements of men of this last-named class could easily be either verified or disproven by appealing not only to the records but also to residents of character. To accuse all former officers of administration of insincerity or narrow bias, and to disqualify the evidence of the best men of our own blood in the islands—whether clergymen, educators, jurists, or students of colonial policies—as being prompted by selfish motives, must of necessity be but a passing phase of party blindness and can not continue as a fundamental defect in our national character.

Mr. President, in order to avoid occupying the time of the Senate, I ask leave to print as part of my remarks such portions of the article as I see fit, or the whole of it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

OUR ADMINISTRATION OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

[By Thomas Lindsey Blayney.]

[In view of much recent and current discussion regarding the present management of public affairs in the Philippine Islands, we are publishing herewith an article by Prof. Thomas Lindsey Blayney, of the William M. Rice Institute, Houston, Tex. Prof. Blayney is a distinguished scholar, a man of great experience, and an admirer and supporter of President Wilson. All the circumstances of his visit to the Philippines, as well as his relationships at home, render it impossible that Prof. Blayney should have been actuated in his inquiries, and in the preparation of this article for the Review, by any other than the highest and most disinterested motives. Prof. Blayney was one of the professors honored by appointment during the past year by the American committee representing the Albert Kahn Foundation of Paris. This foundation sends two American university professors around the world each year, with the special object in view of having them study oriental conditions and ideals. In correspondence with the editor of this magazine, Dr. Blayney made the following remarks:

"I had heard so many expressions of dissatisfaction from prominent Americans, both Democrats and Republicans, in various parts of the world, concerning the present policies of the administration at Manila that I determined to go to the Philippines and satisfy myself concerning the situation there.

"I talked with business men, native and foreign, educators, clergymen, Army and Navy officers, editors, American and British, and many Filipinos of undoubted patriotism and intelligence, and I do not hesitate to assure you that the demoralizing tendency of the policies of the present American administration in the islands is deserving of the widest publicity.

"I am an admirer of President Wilson, and do not wish to be considered as making an attack upon his policies. I have no direct or indirect interest in the islands other than that of any American citizen who has left nothing undone in the brief time allotted to him to form an unprejudiced opinion, and who cherishes a sincere desire for the prosperity, happiness, and future independence of the islands, whether this be within or without the pale of the American Commonwealth."

On arriving at Manila Dr. Blayney was told that it would be impossible to induce representative natives to give their real views upon the situation on account of their fear of the political ring. He was therefore greatly gratified at the marks of confidence shown him by intelligent and independent Filipinos. This may be attributed to experience acquired by extended residence in Latin countries of Europe and to his knowledge of oriental character gathered through an extensive acquaintanceship with orientals in Morocco, India, China, and Japan. Prof. Blayney suggested a well-known personage as qualified to give to the people of the United States an unbiased account of the situation. We have preferred, however, to invite Dr. Blayney to give our readers the results of his sincere effort to get at the real facts of a situation which he describes as "bidding fair to become a national disgrace if we allow politics and sentiment to take the place of reason and justice."—The editor.]

Ruskin has said, "The art of any country is the exponent of its social and political virtues." After one has visited our own and other great colonial dependencies in the Orient, he is tempted to paraphrase Ruskin's statement and to assert that "the colonial undertakings of a country are the surest reflection of its social and political ideals." Nowhere can the best impulses born of national virtues be appreciated more clearly than when seen in perspective as translated into the administrative policies of a great nation in its control of an alien people.

A great nation—a nation whose body politic is sound and whose greatness is measured not merely by its economic prosperity, but by all those dynamic potentialities reflected in varied forms of civic and philanthropic idealism—necessarily projects into the economic, social, and political life of a dependency (the situation being normal) the quintessence of the best aspiration of the race.

Tested by the foregoing, our own country may well be proud of the record made by its administrators in Habana, Porto Rico, Panama, and till recently in the Philippines. Both we ourselves and foreign critics have found weaknesses in our national life. Nevertheless our recent history has amply proven that in the last analysis we are both efficient and idealistic. This has been shown by the varied manifestations of our endeavors as applied to dependent peoples—the reflection of the disinterested idealism and nonpartisan motives of our best lawgivers at home and our experienced administrators abroad.

OUR SPLENDID RECORD.

When historians of the future shall have spoken a dispassionate and final verdict upon the deeds and achievements of the first decade of our occupancy of the Philippine Islands—before some of our less thoughtful politicians and papers at home had begun to make political capital out of the so-called "independence movement" in the islands—no more inspiring chapter in our national history will be found. Nor will there be found elsewhere a finer list of names of men representing the best type of American manhood and idealism than the pages that record the first 12 years of American administration and achievement in the Orient.

The present projection of partisan politics into the administration of the Philippine Islands—the tendency to allow party theories and sentimental notions to supersede the dictates of sound judgment and common sense—must needs be looked upon as an incidental, though regrettable, moment in the development of our over-the-sea policies. Above motives of such a type our real statesmen of both parties, as contradistinguished from political opportunists, will surely rise. There is no phenomenon of our national life more passing strange than that which inclines many of our good people to accept the statements of paid emissaries of the Filipino political junto, or of some of our new and inexperienced officials at Manila, rather than those of our fellow countrymen of long administrative experience in the islands. Especially is this remarkable in view of the fact that the statements of men of this last-named class could easily be either verified or disproven by appealing not only to the records but also to residents of character. To accuse all former officers of administration of insincerity or narrow bias, and to disqualify the evidence of the best men of our own blood in the islands—whether clergymen, educators, jurists, or students of colonial policies—as being prompted by selfish motives, must of necessity be but a passing phase of party blindness and can not continue as a fundamental defect in our national character.

Undoubtedly the overwhelming majority of the Members of Congress and of the American public, irrespective of party, wants to do the right thing by the Filipinos. Nevertheless there is an unfortunate impression abroad that much that has been written regarding the present administration is prompted by selfish interests. The following observations made in the course of a visit at Manila are therefore submitted as disinterested evidence. These observations deal largely with questions upon which opinions differ at Washington and concerning which it is very difficult in the United States to secure first-hand information. They reflect the consensus of opinion of most representative Americans, as well as of Filipinos and foreigners in the islands, and, for brevity's sake, the opinions and arguments of the writer are allowed to obtrude as little as possible.

THE CHANGE IN SENTIMENT TOWARD AMERICANS.

No greater surprise is in store for the traveler upon his arrival at Manila to-day than the realization that American ideals are now at a discount in the islands. With but one exception practically all Americans, Filipinos, and Englishmen speak of a marked lessening of respect for Americans and things American. (The exception is an American lawyer having business relations with Filipino politicians, and who, the writer understands, has represented Filipino interests at Washington.) This was explained by the fact that the politicians and public have seen courageous administrators, men whom they at heart admired, but under whose efficient administration the "politicos" had chafed and who therefore had been mercilessly attacked by them, replaced under the new administration by inexperienced officials. And when they saw these new arrivals begin to curry favor with the politicians and to call themselves "friends of the Filipinos," they became bewildered. And this bewilderment gave way to a lessening of respect for Americans in general when it was seen that these inexperienced men of the "new régime," by the frequent use of this word "friend," attributed by implication the contrary to the long list of the best administrative officers the American Government in the past had been able to send to them, and whom it seemed now the fashion to consider as little better than "carpet baggers." And when they found some of the most important of these new "friends" at times deficient in statesmanlike judgment and poise and not too careful in their utterances of the dignity of their positions, there could not but result an inevitable slump in their esteem for Americans in general. It is felt that this situation should be remedied at once; that so long as the American flag continues to fly, our administrative officers should not fall below a fixed high standard of attainment, experience, dignity, courage, and vision; and that ample powers should be vested in them for the sake both of administrative efficiency and of the dignity of their offices. The writer concurs in believing that the early actions and pronunciamentos of some of our high officials of the new administration can not be lived down. He regrets also to have to add that the personality and qualifications of two of the important American officials of the new administration are of such an order that he has never seen their names mentioned without a general smile of commiseration being called forth.

CURRYING FAVOR WITH FILIPINO POLITICIANS.

All Americans and foreigners of experience agree in feeling that it is not only a serious mistake studiously to curry favor with disaffected politicians, but that it is a grave error of administrative judgment to hesitate, either at Manila or Washington, in adopting effective measures and policies for fear of wounding the susceptibilities of the Filipinos. The contention seems established that the "mestizo" politician is devoid of any feeling of gratitude toward the United States. That, therefore, discarding any hope of appreciation in return, it should be our single purpose to give to the islands the kind of administration which may command, not the plaudits of the present but rather the approbation of history and the gratitude of future generations. It is felt at Manila that anything short of this does not represent the highest and best form of American idealism; that this is what the great majority of American people want to see practiced abroad, however far at times we may fall short of it at home.

On the other hand, many of the "wild tribes" are considered as having a genuine appreciation for whatever they realize as being done to help them. It is the consensus of opinion of informed persons that the government of these tribes must remain in the hands of the United States and its representatives. The Filipino has never shown, nor is he likely to show, any real concern for their welfare. And yet they are considered to have a future full of promise under the capable and sympathetic hand of men like Mr. Dean C. Worcester. It is felt on all sides that the loss of this experienced administrator has in nowise been replaced, and that the President could do a real service to humanity by seeing to it that men of this type be not eliminated from the service.

A HIGH STANDARD OF CIVIL SERVICE ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY.

And this brings us to the very heart of the question. It is the opinion of all Americans and foreigners that the inviolability of the civil service must be reestablished by Gov. Gen. Harrison or by his successor if the good name of our governmental methods is not to be irrevocably compromised. Also that the mere fact of a Filipino being an aspirant for office should not be a sufficient reason for his appointment, as has been too frequently the case under the present administration. The claim is made by the administration that such charges are not in keeping with the facts, and that only Filipinos of unquestionable qualifications have been allowed to supersede American officials. The following incident, the facts of which were received first hand by the writer, will, however, illustrate the "careful" way in which under the new era Filipinos have been appointed to offices of trust:

The post of assistant director of the Bureau of Agriculture was to be filled. Without even consulting the American director of the bureau, the Governor General promised the post, at the i quest of the speaker of the assembly, to a henchman of the latter, the then governor of the Province of Pampanga. Shortly before the appointment was to be made public Gov. Gen. Harrison at a dinner party casually informed the director that he had "found an assistant director" for him. Now, it so happened that the Filipino governor selected for the post by the "ring" and accepted by the Governor General had been one of the most recalcitrant of the native governors toward carrying out the hygienic orders issued by the bureau for the prevention of the spread of rinderpest, and a man who had caused the bureau in the past endless trouble. And yet here he was being placed by the administration in a position to enforce in an executive capacity the very regulations which he had insistently ignored. The director endeavored to impress the Governor General with the utter impossibility of the situation, but it was not until after a number of conversations and until the director had threatened his immediate resignation, if a man with such a record were foisted upon him, that the Governor General made what explanations he could to the speaker of the assembly and found another berth for this "excellently recommended" official. It can readily be imagined that such an uncomplacent director of agriculture was not able to continue to serve the "new régime" very long and is now numbered among those who have "resigned."

This incident is cited not to insinuate that the Governor General promised the friends of this Filipino to appoint him, knowing him to be incompetent, but merely to illustrate the "spirit" that now reigns and the happy-go-lucky and reckless manner in which appointments are promised where "politics" and not "efficiency" is the watchword. Such political theories are bad enough in some of our cities at home, but infinitely worse in our distant possessions, where they bring disgrace upon our flag under the very eyes of the efficient colonial administrations of the Dutch and British.

It is believed, furthermore, that to make a financial showing at the expense of efficiency, or to attain this end by stopping expenditures that have heretofore gone for greatly needed public improvements, is neither "making a record" in keeping with American notions of progress nor in accord with what are felt to be the views of the President of the United States as regards governmental efficiency. The loss of men like Gov. Forbes, Mr. Worcester, Dr. Heiser, Capt. Sleeper, Mr. Taylor, and many others who have recently "resigned," is not only a reproach to present-day methods at Manila—a matter of grave local importance—but is looked upon as a distinct setback in the development of better and more stable institutions in the entire Orient in the interest of humanity as a whole.

MORALE OF BUREAU OF SCIENCE VIRTUALLY DESTROYED.

No institution has prospered more under civil service than the Bureau of Science at Manila. This admirable institution had been developed to a point where it had commanded the high respect of scientists in all parts of the world, and especially in the Orient. The ill-advised utterances of the new secretary of the interior upon his arrival, regarding the abolishment of certain departments of research (with the workings of which it was said he had not been familiar and which seemed to him to be "too theoretical"), has created, as might easily have been foreseen, a most unfortunate impression upon the minds of the people. It necessarily has not only lowered the prestige of the bureau and discouraged men from remaining in it or attaching themselves to it but it has reflected upon the sound judgment of American scientists. It is felt that such a thoroughly representative American institution and its corps of experienced scientists should be placed beyond the reach of the vagaries of any individual.

THE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE PHILIPPINES AT WASHINGTON.

One of the greatest hindrances to a clearer appreciation of the merits of the arguments favoring a more or less immediate independence for the Filipinos consists, strange as it may seem, in the personality of Señor MANUEL QUEZON, Resident Commissioner from the Philippines at Washington. It is felt at Manila to be very unfortunate that Señor QUEZON should have succeeded in establishing himself in the opinion of Washington as a typical representative of his race. After meeting practically all the leading native political leaders, the writer does not hesitate to assert, that in knowledge of America and of American ways, in ability to adopt our mannerisms, to play upon our feelings and prejudices, and to make himself interesting and attractive in society, there is no public man of his race who can begin to measure up to him. It is vital that this be kept in mind when our lawgivers are discussing the question of independence. For it must be remembered that, as high as he stands above his political colleagues in all those attainments calculated to influence the susceptibilities of Americans, an immensely greater and for the present practically impassable gulf separates these colleagues from the great mass of the ignorant populace even in Luzon. A great proportion of the Filipino people have no clearer notion of "independence" than that it is some sort of a tangible or intangible thing that will bring them an era of plenty with little work and no taxes.

FILIPINO POLITICAL MEETINGS NOT ALWAYS REPRESENTATIVE.

Another point to be kept in mind is that meetings organized to further the measures of political leaders do not necessarily represent the feelings of intelligent, independent Filipinos. Native civilians of this latter class informed the writer that the rivalries already existing, and the taste for spoils already whetted by an ever and too rapidly increasing share in the offices of state presage certain revolution as soon as a firm hand is withdrawn; that it will require several generations of peace and prosperity to train an oriental people into a genuine respect for stable institutions.

In this connection it should be noted, further, that one of the serious mistakes made by visitors at Manila is to form an opinion of the intelligence of an audience or delegation in the islands by its general appearance. Gatherings of this kind are exceedingly impressive, especially if large and if the visitor is a recent arrival, owing to the fondness of the men for well-tailored white suits, which give them an outward appearance of prosperity and intelligence out of keeping with their attainments and with the environment out of which they come.

INDEPENDENCE NOT DESIRED.

Certainly one of the most surprising things to the visitor, if he is fortunate enough to have heart-to-heart talks with representative Filipinos who are not themselves political aspirants, will be to learn that independence is not desired at this time by men of this type. Every one of them gave it as his opinion that revolution would certainly follow the lowering of the flag. Not one of them would name a time now to be foreseen when he thought independence could be safely promised or granted. Each stated, however, that, should his sentiments become known, he would be a marked man and, whether directly or indirectly, would feel the heavy hand of the "politicos."

The writer has been informed from a most unimpeachable source that even one of the two leading Filipino politicians had recently become rather skeptical about early independence, in view of recent events in the Orient. He feared now he had builded better than he thought and that independence might actually be granted, owing to the support of certain Congressmen not entirely in sympathy with the movement, but who, like many of their constituents, were beginning to feel that the present situation is no credit to the United States. He recognized the dangerously increasing impatience of others in Congress and in the public at seeing ourselves invited "to get out" of the islands, and yet in the same breath being requested to permit the Filipino politicians to bury, as it were, the Stars and Stripes at the foot of the flagpole, to be resurrected and run up whenever they got into international complications. His position, however, rendered it very difficult for him to backwater.

CHARACTER AND WORK OF THE PHILIPPINE ASSEMBLY.

Another matter of disillusionment for those of us who have been guided by feelings of sentiment toward the independence movement is to learn, on studying the situation on the ground, that much that we have heard about the excellent work and disinterested patriotism of the Philippine Assembly is not borne out by the facts. Space will not permit even the mention of the many accounts of the inefficiency of the lawgivers. It might be noted, however, that the last assembly—and, by the way, the very one which, as the writer was informed, Gov. Gen. Harrison went to the length of complimenting in a telegram to Washington—occupied, despite the more or less direct protests of the governor, a great part of its time with questions relating to political posts and appointments, and it was with the greatest difficulty induced to discuss the budget. The statements we sometimes hear regarding "the remarkable work of the assembly demonstrating the capacity of the people for self-government," if sincerely made, are considered at Manila as based upon information furnished by parties interested in the successful workings of the theories of the "new era."

FACTS VERSUS THEORIES.

The facts tend to disprove the statements of those who would rapidly "Filipinize" the service. No clearer proof is needed of the grave risks being run for the sake of a theory than the unfortunate results following the "resignation" of Capt. Sleeper as chief of the land office. This efficient officer had built up a remarkable department, and one that had required years of labor to bring to a standard that was considered a model of efficiency. Deaf to the warnings of men of experience, the new administration appointed a Filipino to succeed him. This man was most carefully selected, since it was recognized on all sides as a test of native ability. In a short time the work of years had become but a shadow of its former self, and, however reluctantly, the administration had to remove the new incumbent. Another Filipino was ultimately appointed, but the department was in very bad shape when the writer left the islands.

REGRETTABLE REFLECTIONS ON AMERICAN ADMINISTRATORS.

There is another factor which bodes for many years to come little success to a Filipino administration of the islands. The ingenious lies, innuendoes, and slanderous attacks, under the very shadow of the flag, upon the character and administration of our most highly respected officials in the past, because their rulings ran counter to special interests or prejudices of certain factions, is not considered as auguring well for the conditions that would exist when the flag comes down, granted even that native officials would pretend to attempt to uphold hygienic or other efficient measures against the wishes of the masses. The rapid increase of the rinderpest under the régime of Gov. Gen. Harrison after the control of the situation had been taken from the bureau of agriculture and placed under provincial supervision and certain "economies" of administration has been inaugurated should sober the most enthusiastic advocates of immediate wider autonomy.

CRITICISMS ON PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

Filipino politicians, backed by their party papers, have long made the expenditures for the construction of the Benguet Road and its terminus—the splendid health resort of Baguio—a favorite subject of attack in reflecting on the administration of former American commissioners. It is true there was an error of judgment on the part of the engineering expert who reported on the probable cost, but for this the commissioners should not be held responsible. Rather than being a reproach to the executive ability of former administrations, both the road and the resort are now seen to be assets of the highest value, although the road will soon lose its importance, owing to the construction of a safer highway in another part of the mountains. Personally the writer feels, after visiting India and the famous British "Hill Station," Darjeeling in the Himalayas, that Baguio is one of the most creditable and enduring monuments to the foresight and forethought of former commissions. Mr. Harrison and Mr. Denison, possibly for the sake of consistency, spent the past summer in Japan and China, and therefore the government was not transferred to Baguio for the hot months. And yet when the writer visited Baguio it was full of Filipinos from Manila, who now own residences in what only a few years ago was but an uninhabited mountain top. This is conclusive proof that, although always ready to seek out every possible excuse to compromise the administration of American commissioners in the eyes of Congress, they are not slow to profit by the results of the very administrative policies they have so severely criticized.

APPOINTING A PRESIDENT OF THE UNIVERSITY.

Since leaving the islands the writer has learned through a copy of the Manila Times that prophecies he had heard made there, and which it was hoped would not be realized, had proven correct, and that the presidency of the University of Manila had been given to a Filipino gentleman "for whom no other post was available, but whose friends insisted that he must be taken care of." This program of Filipinization was too much even for Secretary Denison, who, as a member of the board of control, at first opposed the Filipino, desiring an efficient American educator at the head of this important institution during the first and most important years of its development. His protest, however, was unavailing. This stand represents a radical change in his views as expressed soon after his arrival in the islands in a much-criticized speech, the general tenor of which might be summed up in the since oft-quoted assertion it contained: "Why should we insist upon 'hustling' the East against its will and at its expense if the East itself wishes to lie placid, murmuring mañana?" It is felt that his other no less famous public statement in regard to a letter delayed three weeks in delivery is typical of the sophomoric theories of government entertained by the new administration: "If the Filipino people prefer to have their letters arrive in three weeks and do it themselves, why haven't they the right to do it that way?"

THE PRESIDENT NOT BLAMED.

The majority of Americans and foreigners at Manila do not feel that the President is correctly informed concerning existing conditions, and are therefore unwilling to hold him directly responsible for the present situation. They rather attribute it to the shortsightedness and excess of zeal shown by the administration at Manila in making a "record" such as they might wish to make at home after a political upheaval. Some of these officials seem forgetful of the ignorance of the great mass of Filipinos regarding our traditional treatment of "officeholders" in this country upon a change of administration, and inexcusably forgetful of the supreme importance of maintaining in our over-the-sea dependencies the well-earned reputation of American officials, past or present, and irrespective of party, for disinterested public service. Some of them have compromised the good name and dignity of American institutions abroad by actions and utterance which either reflect upon the sincerity of the intentions of past administrations or else are not in keeping with the views which the American public at Manila believed to be those of the President relative to administrative decorum abroad. To mention but one example:

Only those who have been in Manila and are familiar with the various undercurrents of sentiment and with the personal histories of individuals there can form a conception of the astonishment felt by the audience when, as a number of witnesses told the writer, the distinguished guest of the occasion, a man who incorporates the dignity of American institutions by his exalted position, placed his arm about the shoulders of a Filipino politician and declared that it was "to this man" that he owed his position, and that he would not forget the kindness as long as he lived. The remark was considered, for reasons that can not be touched upon here, not only as lacking excessively in good taste, but also as showing exceedingly poor judgment, in that it magnified the Filipino in the esteem of his countrymen at the expense of the President of the United States, from whom the appointment had come.

HOW THE PRESENT ADMINISTRATION IS REGARDED.

Señor QUEZON made the public statement at the Lake Mohonk conference in 1914 that "Gov. Harrison has gained for himself and for the Nation that he represents the confidence and good will of the Filipino people." This statement, according to reliable American evidence and that of intelligent Filipinos, is not in keeping with the facts. Never since the early years of occupation has genuine respect and esteem for America and things American been at so low an ebb, for the reasons mentioned above. Gov. Gen. Harrison and his administration enjoy, quite naturally, a certain kind of popularity with the politicians and factions whose aims he seems to support. But that he has raised his country or his countrymen in the respect of the inhabitants is an altogether different matter. Deep regret was voiced on all sides that at the very outset he had launched himself upon a campaign of "reform" from which, in spite of experience gained, it is very hard for him to turn back.

THE FEELING IN THE ISLANDS ON THE JONES BILL.

The feeling of Americans and foreigners in the islands concerning the Jones bill is somewhat as follows: It is considered impossible to foresee what the next 25 or 50 years may bring in the international situation in the Pacific, nor how essential to us and to the best interests of the Filipinos the new inventions constantly being made in aerial and maritime armament and our commercial interests in the East may render the retention of the islands in whole or in part. Therefore it is believed that, if an unnecessary preamble to such a bill must be formulated, sound statesmanship dictates that it should go no further than declaring it to be "the intention of the United States to grant independence to the Philippine Islands as soon as in the judgment of Congress it is deemed to the best interests of the islands and of the United States to do so." It is further believed that the political element would make at first a bold front of disapproval, but that the great mass of intelligent and peaceful civilians would greet such a statement with sincere satisfaction. A statement of this kind would do more, it is thought, to clear the unhealthful atmosphere of uncertainty and apprehension existing at Manila and to preclude unprofitable discussion than anything that has occurred since the change of administration.

FOREIGN OPINION ON OUR PRESENT PHILIPPINE POLICY.

It is a striking fact that among the many Americans and Britons whom the writer met in India, China, and Japan, and who were more or less familiar with the situation from personal observation, there was not one who did not feel that the almost nervous eagerness of the administration at Manila to conciliate the politicians, even at the cost of some dignity, and the excessive zeal shown in changing the "Filipinizing" the service, had proven a grave error of judgment of more than local importance. That it was destined to render the work of the white man in the uplift of dependent races very difficult in more distant parts of the Orient. It was pointed out by the British that, if, as we claimed, our interest in the islands was purely humanitarian, we should not transfer our political differences of opinion and more or less questionable party theories into the administration of our island dependencies, but rather seek to govern them along recognized lines of administrative efficiency for their own highest welfare, and in the interest of humanity as a whole. That to transfer our own advanced theories of democratic government to an inexperienced people just emerging from a period of almost medieval darkness, many of whom have not the remotest conception of the real meanings of the words "democracy" and "independence," would be little short of criminal.

OUR LEGACY TO THE PHILIPPINES.

The following statement was made to the writer by an intelligent and highly respected Filipino and is submitted as a final résumé of a situation which can not possibly continue with credit to our Government:

"When the American flag is lowered, whether it be in 1 year or in 10 years or in a hundred years, I feel that the United States will be remembered in our island by three principal contributions to our national life: First, by a splendid system of public instruction; secondly, by an excellent judicial system; and, thirdly, by an all-pervading system of petty Tammany politics, to the fostering of which the present administration has very largely contributed. And I feel that the last of these contributions will far outshadow in effect the results of the other two to the everlasting misfortune of my race."

No words of the writer could possibly add to the simple force of a statement of this character.

Such, in briefest possible form, are the opinions of the overwhelming majority of men of every shade of opinion and nationality in Manila, both native and foreign, whose opinion, the writer feels, the public would care to learn, and by whose judgment it would wish in a measure to be guided in the solemn hour so fast approaching when a courageous, creditable, and unequivocal decision should be reached—a decision free of political bias and sentimental theories, but destined to involve irrevocably the good name of our country, the statesmanship of our lawgivers, and the future welfare of a dependent people.

AMERICAN IDEALS SHOULD PREVAIL IN THE PHILIPPINES.

We are told that the islands are a menace to us; that by their retention we run the risk of grave complications. And yet, these are the very warnings that were directed against our fathers whenever they contemplated moving our frontiers farther toward the Pacific. Thus far in our history we have never recoiled from following our star of destiny because of real or fancied dangers. And it is not believed that we are going to hesitate now, when millions whom we have led toward a brighter day stand sorely in need of our strong helping hand to conduct them over the last and most difficult part of the way.

If we have not the courage of our forefathers, if the splendid work of American achievement, the self-sacrificing labors of countless men of our own race—the scientist, the educator, the administrator, and the soldier—are to be sacrificed to the empty shibboleth "independence," is it not due our good name to leave the islands now? It is the firm belief of the writer that we owe it to ourselves, to the Filipinos, and to humanity to insist, so long as the American flag continues to fly over Manila and over the hundreds of schools, city halls, and courthouses of the archipelago, promising liberty and justice under its stars and stripes, not to a few political aspirants, but to all that just so long American, and not Filipino, ideals of efficiency, administration, and justice should reign at Manila. And this can not be realized unless we cease the present methods of tearing down the laboriously constructed work of years achieved by American administrative officers, not because we feel it to be in the interest of the people, but at the behest of the native office seeker, whose plea, "independence," seems so irresistable to our democratic ears. The individual man is "free" to-day wherever the Stars and Stripes float to the breeze in the islands. That he will not be "free" when the flag comes down is the firm conviction of all men of broad judgment and experience in the Philippines.

Every principle of humanitarianism and of enlightened statesmanship dictates that we should jealously guard this heritage of future generations and hand it down to them in the form of an efficient, model administration unto the day when they, as an enlightened people, and not as a handful of political dictators, tell the people of the United States what they desire. The American people will then gladly give them what they want.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to take only one moment, I should like to add to the extract he has put in the RECORD just a few words which appeared in the Washington Post of yesterday.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will be very glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. LIPPITT. The quotation is from a statement by Mr. William F. Montavon, who has just been appointed a commercial attaché of the United States and who for many years has been a superintendent of public schools in the Philippine Islands, and who has a very high opinion of the Philippine people. The Senator from Washington a moment ago was talking about the prestige which our administration of the islands has given us in the Orient. Mr. Montavon, after speaking in the very highest terms of the Philippine people, says:

Our prestige as a Nation is bound up intimately with this Philippine business. The world will be richer materially and morally because of the integrity and intelligence manifested by able men in solving the big questions relating to the islands and their inhabitants.

The quotation was so pertinent to what the Senator was saying that I took the liberty of asking to have it put in the RECORD.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The article by Prof. Blayney is an extremely illuminating one, as will be realized by those who will take the pains to read it.

Our people have over $70,000,000 invested in the Philippine Islands. In 1911 they had $70,000,000 invested there, and I am informed, as I said in the debate here the other day, by Gen. McIntyre that it is known that a large amount of capital has been invested there since that time. There are between eight and ten thousand Americans resident in the Philippine Islands. Many of them have established important businesses there. All of this money was invested there, and all of these people went there, of course, relying upon the benefit of American control of the islands. I do not contend that that is a governing factor in the case; I realize the fact that it is a matter of secondary importance to the larger questions that are involved, including in those larger questions our duties toward the Filipino people themselves; but we can not escape the conclusion, Mr. President, that, other things being equal, the obligation to protect, in a proper way, the property and business of our people who have invested and who reside in those islands rests upon this country. I object to their abandonment. There is no proposition advanced in connection with the preamble of this bill that any steps whatever will be taken to give security to the Americans, with their great investments and their great interests in these islands. On the other hand, it is proposed to ignore them, proposed to abandon them; to abandon them just as we have abandoned our citizens in Mexico.

I do not want to irritate that issue, but my opinion is that when the European war is closed, when one or the other of the great powers of Europe will be victorious in that struggle, armed as it never was before, we will be confronted with a real international problem if in the meantime we have not quit this policy of neglect which we have adopted in Mexico.

Now, it is proposed in this bill to adopt the same policy in the Philippine Islands. It is a part of our general foreign policy of surrender and indifference. We have argued many of these questions in detail, and it is not necessary to go into the details again. Our citizens must not travel abroad, for fear they will involve us in trouble with Europe; they must not remain in Mexico, for fear we will be involved in trouble there; we must abandon our right to special rates for the passage of our vessels through the Panama Canal, because of intimate secret issues about which we know nothing; we must pay $25,000,000 to the Republic of Colombia for their good will. I mention these things because they all together show a general course of conduct, a general attitude in our foreign policy which is bringing shame upon us in many quarters of the world; and a proposal to abandon the fruits of the work of 17 years in the Philippine Islands is a consistent part of that general policy of abandonment and of retreat in every direction in which our people have established their interests abroad. The idea seems to be that we must confine ourselves to our continental borders and must not venture beyond them; that we must give up the interests that we have abroad, and that our people, if they go abroad in pursuit of trade or travel, can not depend upon the Government of the United States to protect them. If this bill should pass, and if all that the flag guarantees in the Philippine Islands is to be withdrawn, there ought to be some provision by which a guaranty of security and of life can be given to Americans who are established there.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think it is in order to ask that the Philippine bill be temporarily laid aside. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

SAN ANTONIO BICENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I wish to ask unanimous consent for the passage by the Senate of Senate joint resolution 72. I would not ask this but for the fact that immediate action is necessary. The resolution authorizes the President to invite the countries of Spanish America to an exposition to be held at the city of San Antonio in 1918. It does not carry an appropriation. The citizens of San Antonio will hold a meeting next week to prepare the invitations. For that reason I should like to have the resolution go through at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas will have to guarantee to the Senate that there will be no appropriation hereafter made or asked for for that purpose or I certainly shall object to its consideration at this time.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will say to the Senator that the participation we expect the Government to have in the matter will be through exhibits by the various departments, and not through an appropriation by the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know about how much the Government will be involved in that respect?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; I can not give any assurance along that line, but I say to the Senator that the extent of the Government's participation will be such exhibits as are usually made by the departments at expositions.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask that the joint resolution be not considered at this time. I must object to its present consideration, but I will talk to the Senator from Texas about it and see just exactly what it proposes. I have not read it at all, but I say to the Senator that if it is the beginning of another exposition and the entering upon of an appropriation by the Government for that purpose at this time I certainly do not think it ought to be done. As I say, however, I have not read the joint resolution, and I will see the Senator about it between now and to-morrow.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is entirely satisfactory to me. I shall be glad to talk to the Senator about it.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS.

Mr. SIMMONS. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably Senate resolution No. 10, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. It is simply for the purpose of obtaining information with respect to imports and exports for the use of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if it is the resolution submitted by the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] on December 7 last?

Mr. SIMMONS. It is the resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate information regarding the value of imports, exports, and import duties under the present and the two preceding tariff acts, with a special statement for the period from the enactment of the existing tariff act to the outbreak of the European war, compared with a corresponding period of the previous year; the value of imports, compared with the value of domestic production, and the expenditure for wages in each industry before the outbreak of the European war, and the imports and exports of leading manufacturing countries during recent years.

ADDRESS BY OSCAR T. CROSBY (S. DOC. NO. 245).

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask to have printed as a public document an argument by Oscar T. Crosby, of Washington, D. C., relative to Senate bill 2710, to encourage the establishment of an international peace-keeping tribunal, and pending such establishment to assure the military preparedness of the United States. It is a very short matter, and I do not ask that it be printed in the RECORD, but simply that it be ordered published as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 18, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 17, 1916.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

COAST ARTILLERY CORPS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 17, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We come to Thee, Almighty God, our heavenly Father, because we believe in Thee as the final cause, the source from whom proceedeth all things, and we most fervently pray that we may be susceptible to the Holy Spirit ever emanating from Thee, that Thy kingdom may come in our hearts and Thy will be done in our lives. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, January 15, 1916, was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER. The credentials of Mr. W. W. VENABLE, the newly elected Member from Mississippi, are on the Speaker's table, signed by the governor and secretary of state in the regular form.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I present Mr. VENABLE and ask that he be sworn in.

Mr. VENABLE appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the father-in-law of my son is dead at my house, and I feel that I ought to ask leave of absence for to-day. I wish to say that there are a number of bills on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent reported from the committee of which I am chairman. The authors and the gentlemen who reported those bills are here and are able to take care of them. I request leave of absence for to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks leave of absence for to-day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

ANSHE CHESED CONGREGATION, VICKSBURG, MISS.

The first bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 4954) directing the Secretary of War to reconvey a parcel of land to the Anshe Chesed Congregation, Vicksburg, Miss.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota objects.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to all of these bills to-day on this Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question? I ask unanimous consent to do so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question. It seems to me the gentleman from Minnesota would determine that, but in any event the Chair will put the request. Is there objection to the gentleman from Texas catechizing the gentleman from Minnesota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARNER. Did I understand the gentleman to say that he was going to object to all of the bills on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent?

Mr. LINDBERGH. All of these that are here; yes.

Mr. GARNER. Then, I suggest that it is not necessary to call these bills for unanimous consent if the gentleman gives notice now that he intends to object to all of them, unless the Chair is going to recognize Members in charge of bills to suspend the rules and pass them.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair is going to do.

Mr. COLLIER. Then I will make that motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FERRIS. Has not the gentleman to wait until the bills are called through the calendar?

The SPEAKER. No; the gentleman from Mississippi moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 4954, with committee amendments.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a perfect right to make that point. Evidently there is not a quorum here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anthony	Driscoll	Hulbert	Patten
Bacharach	Drukker	Hutchinson	Porter
Barchfeld	Dupré	Jones	Powers
Beales	Dyer	Keister	Reilly
Bennet	Fairchild	Kent	Riordan
Brown, W. Va.	Farley	Kless, Pa.	Sabath
Bruckner	Flynn	Kitchin	Scott, Pa.
Buchanan, Tex.	Focht	Kreider	Scully
Caldwell	Gallagher	Lafean	Sells
Carew	Gallivan	Lieb	Sherley
Casey	Garland	Liebel	Siegel
Chandler, N. Y.	Graham	Linthicum	Slemp
Chiperfield	Gray, Ala.	Loft	Stedman
Coady	Gray, N. J.	Longworth	Sumners
Cullop	Gregg	McLemore	Tague
Dale, N. Y.	Guernsey	Maher	Talbott
Darrow	Hamill	Mays	Ward
Davenport	Haskell	Miller, Pa.	Whaley
Dempsey	Haugen	Mooney	Williams, W. E.
Dies	Hilliard	Morgan, La.	Winslow
Dooling	Holland	Nolan	Wise
Doremus	Howell	Paige, Mass.

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 346 Members, a quorum, responded to their names.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 4954) as amended, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4954) directing the Secretary of War to reconvey a parcel of land to the Anshe Chesed Congregation, Vicksburg, Miss.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to convey by deed to the Anshe Chesed Congregation, Vicksburg, Miss., a small tract of land for cemetery purposes, which land is now part of the Vicksburg National Military Park, and more particularly described by metes and bounds as follows:

Commencing at the southeast corner of a tract of land as described in deed book C C, page 611, in chancery clerk's office, Warren County, Miss.; thence with an astronomical azimuth 100° 40′ 992 feet to a stone post; thence 209° 10′ 509 feet to a stone post; thence 225° 55′ 461 feet to a stone post; thence 220° 50′ 398 feet to a stone post on the south side of the Baldwins Ferry Road; thence 296° 10′ 198 feet; thence 355° 10′ 105 feet; thence 23° 15′ 178 feet to the point of beginning.

Thence with an astronomical azimuth no degrees and 15′ 534 feet; thence 270° 15′ 318½ feet; thence 132° 5′ 251 feet; thence 171° 20′ 259 feet; thence 134° 25′ 143 feet to the point of beginning; containing 1.64 acres, more or less, and being part of section 21, township 16, range 4 east: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States in carrying out the provisions of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimoust consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from Mississippi is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois to 20 minutes.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I think I can get through discussing this bill in much less than the 20 minutes of time allotted to me. In fact, the report accompanying the bill states the facts as completely as I could, but to save you the trouble of reading that fine print I will state briefly, for your information, the following:

When the Vicksburg Military Park was established it was found that the Anshe Chesed Congregation Cemetery was stationed near the place where the old fortifications were, and that some of this land was needed to complete the park. In 1900 the congregation gave to the Federal Government 19.5 acres of land——

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. What was the name of the cemetery?

Mr. COLLIER. The Anshe Chesed, the Jewish cemetery at the city of Vicksburg. Through their patriotic desire to see that great work perpetuated the congregation gave to the Federal Government 19.5 acres of their cemetery for a nominal consideration. They wanted to give it for nothing, but it was given for a nominal consideration of $1 and the moving of a fence.

It now seems, gentlemen, that they gave more of their cemetery than they should, because they now need more room, and they come and ask the Federal Government to reconvey to them 1.64 acres. There is no objection to this from any source that I have found. The land that is being asked to be reconveyed has no special significance in that it is commemorated by a tablet, memorial, or marker. The chairman of the park commission, Capt. W. T. Rigby, has recommended that this 1.64 acres be conveyed back to that congregation, but the Judge Advocate General has stated—and you will find it in the report—that the War Department has no authority to reconvey that land, but that we will have to come to Congress to get that authority. Judge Crowder states that the War Department will favor any congressional legislation looking to that end, which opinion is concurred in by the Acting Secretary of War.

Now, another point. It might be suggested as to what effect this will have upon the appearance of that park. It will simply be moving a fence down a short distance, and any effect it will have will be that of still more beautifying the park, because they will add more monuments therein.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time, except I wish to bring this out, that the committee has made an amendment that this transfer shall be made at no cost to the United States, which amendment was, of course, accepted by the author of the bill and is entirely satisfactory to the congregation.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. From what committee did the bill come?

Mr. COLLIER. This bill comes from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demanded a second in order that the matter might be explained to the House. I have myself no opposition to the bill. If anyone desires a part of my time in opposition to the bill, I will yield to him, otherwise I will yield two minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the Washington delegation, Mr. Henry J. Pierce, of Seattle, Wash., will deliver a lecture on "The necessity for water-power development" at the new National Museum, at the foot of Tenth Street NW., on to-morrow evening at 8.30. I have heard this lecture of Mr. Pierce upon this very important proposition. It contains a vast amount of information, and Mr. Pierce is certainly one of the best-posted men on this question in the United States. In addition to his lecture he will show moving pictures of the great nitrogen establishments of Norway and Canada. I call special attention to this as bearing on this question of preparedness. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert this invitation of the Washington delegation in the RECORD, so that Members may see it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to insert the invitation mentioned in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The invitation is as follows:

At the request of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Washington Mr. Henry J. Pierce, of Seattle, Wash., will deliver his lecture entitled "The Necessity for Water-Power Development" in the auditorium of the new National Museum, B Street, foot of Tenth Street NW., on Tuesday, January 18, 1916, at 8.30 p. m., illustrated by moving pictures.

The Members of Congress and their families and others to whom this is addressed are cordially invited to be present.

This procedure is prompted by the critical importance of this subject at this session of Congress. Among the many important matters which are dependent upon water-power development is the establishment of the nitrogen industry. Nitrogen is necessary to our national defense and to our agricultural welfare. We are now dependent upon foreign sources, which may be cut off in time of need. Among the motion pictures shown by Mr. Pierce are those of the great nitrogen establishments of Norway and Canada. It is believed that a general attendance by Members of Congress will prove exceedingly valuable and timely in connection with the legislative consideration that must be given to a Federal water-power policy at this session of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

BIRTHDAY OF BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this bill pertains to national memorials, which enables me to say the few words I desire to say to the House this morning on a kindred subject.

Mr. Speaker, contemporaneous history does not always record that which is great in our citizenship. We are periodically boastful and are sometimes addicted to hero worship, but that which is truly great in our men and women is too often permitted to pass without that recognition which is the sweetest reward of achievement. The definition of a statesman attributed to Thomas B. Reed, a truly great Speaker of the House of Representatives, will serve best to illustrate the thought in mind. "A statesman," he said, "is a successful politician who is dead."

I am prompted to make these observations this morning because, with the indulgence of the House, I shall speak briefly of Benjamin Franklin, one of the truly great Americans who has come to be recognized the world over as the greatest of our philosophers. To-day is the two hundred and tenth anniversary of the birth of Franklin in the city of Boston. The major part of the 84 years of his life were spent in the district in Philadelphia which I have the honor to represent. When he was not laboring in that district as a practical printer or in working out the many problems which placed him a century ahead of the geniuses of public thought and benefaction he was performing for the American colonists those admirable feats of diplomacy in the courts of Great Britain and France which commanded a respect for American characteristics that in later years we have come to refer to proudly as "American institutions."

It would be idle, however, in the few minutes I am permitted to speak to attempt a eulogy, much less a review, of the life and works of Benjamin Franklin. I have in mind only to say that his mortal remains, now long since turned to dust, lie under a marble slab—provision for which was made by his own will—in old Christ Church burial ground at Fifth and Arch Streets, Philadelphia. It would not be fair to the American people of April 17, 1790, when Benjamin Franklin died, to say that they did not mourn his loss, for they did. He had asked for a plain funeral, and had designated the maker of the stone and the inscription that should go upon it to mark the last resting place of his wife Deborah and himself; but the people of Philadelphia and such distinguished visitors as could appear at the obsequies turned out in goodly numbers and with much formality to honor the man whom they had come to respect and admire. The greatness of Franklin as a world figure, however, had not then fully dawned upon them. It was perhaps more in the Old World, notably in France, that Franklin's fame was heralded, even as one who had brought a new light into the world. In England he was not only famous, but, if the stories of the suppression of the manuscript of his autobiography, even as Jefferson has referred to it, be true, he was also feared. He had delivered his message to the world, and that message, although not fully printed or understood until long years after his death, left no doubt as to its meaning or of the world influence of the new Republic in the Western Hemisphere.

But now, Mr. Speaker, a full century and sixteen years having elapsed since the mortal life of Franklin was extinguished, we find in every avenue of thought and activity the light of his philosophy, his truth, and his inventions illuminating the world. The greatness of the individual has been recognized in consequences and effects more durable and more beneficent than even the author of them could have ever hoped for. And yet whether it be due to the ingratitude of succeeding generations or, as is more likely, to their thoughtlessness in the press of the activities generated in the philosophy and thought of Franklin there has been no National, State, nor local memorial erected over his last resting place. There under the stone for which he personally made provision, hemmed in by the towering walls of business structures in the heart of the great city, he lies. Across the street is the identical house in which the American flag was first woven into its present form by the deft fingers of Betsy Ross. Within rifle shot is the scene of his courtship and the incident of the penny loaves to which history refers. The scene of his kite-flying, through which he drew electricity from the clouds, is equally near. The home of the American Philosophical Society, of which he was the president, stands intact two blocks away. And there, also, is Independence Hall, in which he signed the Declaration of Independence and in which he labored, as no other man, to perfect in the Constitution of the United States those provisions which gave us a bicameral form of government.

The sites of the homes of Washington and Morris, his great contemporaries in the establishment of the Union of States, are easily traced a short distance from his grave, and Christ Church, in which Washington and the signers of the Declaration of Independence worshiped and by whose walls some of them lie buried, is still breathing forth its message of hope and sympathy to a religious community. Indeed, in the immediate environment of Franklin's grave, with its fast deteriorating cover of stone, paid for by his own estate, historic landmarks and memories cluster in profuse array.

If at last, Mr. Speaker, we have come to recognize that which was truly great in the wonderful Franklin is it not time, for the sake of his teachings and the influence of his philosophy upon the present generation and of the generations to come, that we celebrate in some national way the worth and the patriotism of this many-sided American? [Applause.]

In the city of Philadelphia he is not forgotten. There are memorials yonder which do honor to his name. On this the anniversary of his birth, the Poor Richard Club, which is now looking forward to a convention of the advertising clubs of the world who honor Franklin as the patron of "The Art Preservative," will lay a chaplet on his grave. Elsewhere in the great City of Brotherly Love tributes will be paid to his memory, notably at the University of Pennsylvania, which owes to him its origin.

But it is not alone for a city or a State to honor Franklin; it should be the grateful task of a Nation the honor and integrity of which he successfully sustained in the courts of the world. [Applause.]

Putting on a practical basis the suggestion just made for a national recognition of Franklin in some such memorial as will signalize the pride of the Nation in his character, I have introduced a bill to which the attention of Congress and the Nation is respectfully invited.

I see by the clock, Mr. Speaker, that a few minutes yet remain of the time kindly allotted to me by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and in that brief period I wish to read one or two extracts from the autobiography of Benjamin Franklin which was not published until many years after his death. These extracts will show but feebly the many sides of this truly wonderful man, but they will assure us something of the intense humanity that dominated his every action, not only in things which were political or in the line of statesmanship but in those which pertained to the elevation of mankind generally.

I had, on the whole, abundant reason—to be satisfied with my being established in Pennsylvania.

Says Benjamin Franklin—

I call attention to this brief specimen of beautiful English, a style that was used by many of the founders of the Republic, and which to a large extent, due to our modern interest and our desire to hit the bull's-eye quicker than our forefathers did, has passed away:

There were, however, two things that I regretted, there being no provision for defense nor for a complete education of youth; no militia, nor any college. I therefore, in 1743, drew up a proposal for establishing an academy; and at that time, thinking the Reverend Mr. Peters, who was out of employ, a fit person to superintendent such an institution, I communicated the project to him; but he, having more profitable views in the service of the proprietaries, which succeeded, declin'd the undertaking; and, not knowing another at that time suitable for such a trust, I let the scheme lie a while dormant. I succeeded better the next year, 1744, in proposing and establishing a Philosophical Society. The paper I wrote for that purpose will be found among my writings when collected.

With respect to defense, Spain having been several years at war against Great Britain, and being at length join'd by France, which brought us into great danger; and the laboured and long-continued endeavour of our governor, Thomas, to prevail with our Quaker Assembly to pass a militia law, and make other provisions for the security of the Province, having proved abortive, I determined to try what might be done by a voluntary association of the people. To promote this, I first wrote and published a pamphlet entitled "Plain Truth," in which I stated our defenseless situation in strong lights, with the necessity of union and discipline for our defense, and promis'd to propose in a few days an association, to be generally signed for that purpose. The pamphlet had a sudden and surprising effect. I was call'd upon for the instrument of association, and having settled the draft of it with a few friends, I appointed a meeting of the citizens in the large building before mentioned. The house was pretty full; I had prepared a number of printed copies, and provided pens and ink dispers'd all over the room. I harangued them a little on the subject, read the paper, and explained it, and then distributed the copies, which were eagerly signed, not the least objection being made.

When the company separated and the papers were collected we found above twelve hundred hands; and, other copies being dispersed in the country, the subscribers amounted at length to upward of ten thousand. These all furnished themselves as soon as they could with arms, formed themselves into companies and regiments, chose their own officers, and met every week to be instructed in the manual exercise and other parts of military discipline. The women, by subscriptions among themselves, provided silk colors, which they presented to the companies, painted with different devices and mottos, which I supplied.

The officers of the companies composing the Philadelphia regiment, being met, chose me for their colonel; but, conceiving myself unfit, I declin'd that station and recommended Mr. Lawrence, a fine person, a man of influence, who was accordingly appointed. I then propos'd a lottery to defray the expense of building a battery below the town and furnishing it with cannon. It filled expeditiously and the battery was soon erected, the merlons being fram'd of logs and fill'd with earth. We bought some old cannon from Boston, but, these not being sufficient, we wrote to England for more, soliciting, at the same time, our proprietaries for some assistance, tho' without much expectation of obtaining it.

Meanwhile Colonel Lawrence, William Allen, Abram Taylor, Esqr., and myself were sent to New York by the associators, commission'd to borrow some cannon of Governor Clinton. He at first refus'd us peremptorily; but at dinner with his council, where there was great drinking of Madeira wine, as the custom of that place then was, he softened by degrees and said he would lend us six. After a few more bumpers he advanc'd to ten, and at length he very good-naturedly conceded eighteen. They were fine cannon, eighteen-pounders, with their carriages, which we soon transported and mounted on our battery, where the associators kept a nightly guard while the war lasted, and among the rest I regularly took my turn of duty there as a common soldier.

There is much more of this to show that they were as intensely human in those days as we are to-day, but that they were even a little more frank about it. [Laughter.]

But having referred to the activities of the Poor Richard Club in celebrating Franklin's birthday, and on this day laying a memorial on his grave, I wish to quote just a few words that Franklin himself said about his creation of the character of Poor Richard:

In 1732 I first publish'd my Almanack, under the name of Richard Saunders; it was continu'd by me about twenty-five years, commonly call'd Poor Richard's Almanack. I endeavor'd to make it both entertaining and useful, and it accordingly came to be in such demand that I reap'd considerable profit from it, vending annually near ten thousand. And observing that it was generally read, scarce any neighborhood in the Province being without it, I consider'd it as a proper vehicle for conveying instruction among the common people, who bought scarcely any other books. I therefore filled all the little spaces that occurred between the remarkable days in the calendar with proverbial sentences, chiefly such as inculcated industry and frugality, as the means of procuring wealth, and thereby securing virtue, it being more difficult for a man in want to act always honestly as, to use here one of these proverbs, It is hard for an empty sack to stand upright.

These proverbs, which contain the wisdom of many ages and nations, I assembled and formed into a connected discourse, prefix'd to the Almanack of 1757, as the harangue of a wise old man to the people attending an auction. The bringing all these scattered counsels thus into a focus enabled them to make greater impression. The piece, being universally approved, was copied in all the newspapers of the continent, reprinted in Britain on a broadside, to be stuck up in houses; two translations were made of it in French, and great numbers bought by the clergy and gentry to distribute gratis among their poor parishioners and tenants. In Pennsylvania, as it discouraged useless expense in foreign superfluities, some thought it had its share of influence in producing that growing plenty of money which was observable for several years after its publication.

And just here, before closing, Mr. Speaker, it is fair to say that previous to his success in publishing the sayings of Poor Richard, this sturdy American, who attained so great a celebrity as to win the attention of the nations, was as modestly human as the rest of us, as indicated in a humorous prologue to his almanac, published along with the first issue in 1733:

The plain truth of the matter is—

He wrote—

I am excessive poor, and my wife, good woman, is, I tell her, excessive proud; she can not bear, she says, to sit spinning in her shift of tow while I do nothing but gaze at the stars, and has threatened more than once to burn all my books and rattling traps (as she calls my instruments) if I do not make some profitable use of them for my family. The printer has offered me some considerable share of the profits, and I have thus begun to comply with my dame's desire.

So the lady of the house was as much in evidence then as she is now, and in the matter of fashions was impelled by motives of style and taste somewhat similar in degree to those that prevail to-day, and the great Franklin, diplomat and philosopher that he was, was generous enough to admit, like any other good husband who wished to keep up with the times, that he actually "needed the money." [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] is recognized.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to use any more time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill H. R. 3954, with amendments.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

DUPLICATE CHECKS OR WARRANTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 3636) to amend section 3646 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as reenacted and amended by act of February 23, 1909.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3636) to amend section 3646 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as reenacted and amended by act of February 23, 1909.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3646 of the Revised Statutes be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3646. That whenever any original check is lost, stolen, or destroyed disbursing officers and agents of the United States are authorized, within three years from the date of such check, to issue a duplicate check, under such regulations in regard to its issue and payment, and upon the execution of such bond, with sureties, to indemnify the United States, and proof of loss of original check, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That whenever any original check or warrant of the Post Office Department has been lost, stolen, or destroyed the Postmaster General may authorize the issuance of a duplicate thereof, at any time within three years from the date of such original check or warrant, upon the execution by the owner thereof of such bond of indemnity as the Postmaster General may prescribe: Provided further, That when such original check or warrant does not exceed in amount the sum of $50 and the payee or owner is, at the date of the application, an officer or employee in the service of the Post Office Department, whether by contract, designation, or appointment, the Postmaster General may, in lieu of an indemnity bond, authorize the issuance of a duplicate check or warrant upon such an affidavit as he may prescribe, to be made before any postmaster by the payee or owner of an original check or warrant."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Is this bill intended to apply to some particular persons, or is it a bill that applies to conditions generally? It has reference to a good many cases, has it not?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I will say that this bill is a matter of general legislation. In order to explain the general purposes of it, I will say that the people who at the present time I have chiefly in mind are pensioners. In case a pension voucher is lost, either with or without the fault of the pensioner, the Treasury Department can not, without such an authority as this, if the amount is over $50, issue a duplicate within six months. At the present time with these old men six months is a long period. Hence I introduced the bill in order to reach that class. When it was submitted to the Pension Office it was approved, and when submitted to the Treasury Department they suggested a different draft of the bill, in which the Treasury Department is given authority to prescribe regulations such as it deems best, covering all the vouchers of the Treasury Department; and that is the bill that is here pending. It has the approval of that department as well as of the Pension Office. It passed this House in the last Congress, but in the crush of business in the Senate at the close of the session it did not receive action.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 19, on page 2, insert the following:

"Provided further, That disbursing officers and agents of the United States are authorized and directed, in the settlement of pensions, to make a monthly payment to all persons borne upon the rolls who can furnish satisfactory proof that they are without an income exceeding $500 over and above the pension now paid to them."

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. I make a point of order on that. I do not think it is germane to the bill pending.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. FRANCIS RIVER, MO. AND ARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 4716) to authorize Dunklin County, Mo., and Clay County, Ark., to construct a bridge across St. Francis River.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Dunklin County, Mo., and Clay County, Ark., are hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across St. Francis River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at a place known as Browns Ferry, about 4 miles west of Holcomb, Dunklin County, State of Missouri, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "at," near the end of the line, insert the words "or near."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. FRANCIS RIVER, MO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6448) to authorize Butler and Dunklin Counties, Mo., to construct a bridge across St. Francis River.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Butler and Dunklin Counties, Mo., are hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across St. Francis River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near the township line between townships 22 and 23, range 8 east, in Dunklin and Butler Counties, in the State of Missouri, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

SALARIES IN THE PATENT OFFICE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 900) amending sections 476, 477, and 440 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, pending a statement from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MORRISON].

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 476 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 476. There shall be in the Patent Office a Commissioner of Patents, one first assistant commissioner, one assistant commissioner, and five examiners in chief, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The first assistant commissioner and the assistant commissioner shall perform such duties pertaining to the office of commissioner as may be assigned to them, respectively, from time to time by the Commissioner of Patents. All other officers, clerks, and employees authorized by law for the office shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior upon the nomination of the Commissioner of Patents, in accordance with existing law."

SEC. 2. That section 477 of the Revised Statutes be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 477. The salaries of the officers mentioned in the preceding section shall be as follows:

"The Commissioner of Patents, $5,000 a year.
"The First Assistant Commissioners of Patents, $4,500 a year.
"The Assistant Commissioner of Patents, $3,500 a year.
"Five examiners in chief, $3,500 a year each."

SEC. 3. That so much of section 440 of the Revised Statutes as follows the words "In the Patent Office," and refers to said office only, be amended to read as follows:

"One chief clerk, who shall be qualified to act as a principal examiner.
"One librarian, who shall be qualified to act as an assistant examiner.
"Five law examiners.
"One examiner of classification.
"One examiner of interferences.
"One examiner of trade-marks and designs.
"One first assistant examiner of trade-marks and designs.
"Six assistant examiners of trade-marks and designs.
"Forty-three principal examiners.
"Eighty-six first assistant examiners.
"Eighty-six second assistant examiners.
"Eighty-six third assistant examiners.
"Eighty-six fourth assistant examiners; and such other examiners and assistant examiners in the various grades as the Congress shall from time to time provide for."

Mr. SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object, Mr. Speaker. I do not believe that this bill should be passed by unanimous consent at this time.

Mr. MANN. May I say to the gentleman from New York that this bill was passed in the last House, I think, by unanimous consent, after it had been amended? I think it was amended somewhat to conform to the views of the gentleman from New York. I am not interested in the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MORRISON] to have the bill passed over, so that it can come up on the next unanimous-consent day. My purpose in doing so is this: The preparation of the legislative bill has just commenced. The gentleman in charge of the bill wanted to have an opportunity to go into this question with the Commissioner of Patents. The bill involves providing additional assistants in the Patent Office. After the examination it may be that the gentlemen may get together.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman had better ask to have it passed over. This bill was agreed upon by everybody in the last Congress and passed both Houses.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know; but bills that pass by unanimous consent do not always have very much substantial argument from that fact in their favor.

Mr. MANN. This was not passed the first time it came up by unanimous consent, by a long shot.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it should be passed over temporarily.

Mr. MORRISON. I have no objection to its being passed over temporarily, provided that it can be called up later during the day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no. I object to its being brought up to-day. Let it go over and reserve its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE TUG FORK OF THE BIG SANDY RIVER, KY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 306) granting the consent of Congress to William H. Preece, of Inez, Ky., to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River, Ky., at or near Warfield, Ky.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to William H. Preece, of Inez, Ky., and his successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Warfield, Ky., in the County of Martin, in the State of Kentucky, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, I object to that. This bill seems to be a purely private bill, and I object to it for the same reason that I objected to the others.

The SPEAKER. It is a bridge bill.

Mr. LINDBERGH. It is a private bill, and I object.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 1773, a bill of like import to the one just read, and substitute it for the House bill, and amend the Senate bill by inserting the words "Warfield, Kentucky, and" in line 9, page 1, after the word "near," and that the title be amended accordingly. I move that we pass the Senate bill as amended and that the House bill lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] moves to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 1773, and pass the same with an amendment, which the Clerk will read into it. The Clerk will read the entire bill, with the amendment in.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH] makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirty-nine Members are present—not a quorum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does the vote on this call of the House include a vote on my motion?

The SPEAKER. No; this is simply a roll call.

Mr. LANGLEY. I did not quite understand whether we had gone far enough to include a vote on my motion in this call or not.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Adamson	Dyer	Igoe	Paige, Mass.
Allen	Fairchild	Jones	Parker, N. Y.
Bacharach	Farley	Keister	Patten
Barchfeld	Fields	Kent	Platt
Beales	Finley	Key, Ohio	Porter
Bennet	Flynn	Kiess, Pa.	Pratt
Brown, W. Va.	Focht	Kitchin	Rauch
Bruckner	Frear	Kreider	Reilly
Brumbaugh	Gallagher	Lafean	Riordan
Caldwell	Gallivan	Lieb	Rowland
Carew	Gardner	Linthicum	Sabath
Casey	Garland	Loft	Scott, Pa.
Chandler, N. Y.	Glass	Longworth	Scully
Chiperfield	Graham	Loud	Sells
Coady	Gray, Ala.	McLemore	Siegel
Cullop	Gray, N. J.	Magee	Slemp
Dale, N. Y.	Gregg	Maher	Snell
Darrow	Guernsey	Mays	Snyder
Davenport	Hamill	Meeker	Sparkman
Dempsey	Hamilton, N. Y.	Miller, Pa.	Stout
Denison	Haskell	Mondell	Sumners

Dooling	Hilliard	Moss, W. Va.	Vare
Doremus	Holland	Mott	Ward
Drukker	Howell	Mudd	Whaley
Dunn	Hulbert	Nolan	Winslow
Dupré	Hutchinson	Olney	Wise

The SPEAKER. On this call 319 Members—a quorum—have answered to their names.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors, a quorum being present. The Clerk will report the bill and read into it the amendments.

The bill (S. 1773) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Warfield, Ky., and Kermit, W. Va., was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That W. H. Preece and associates (or the Interstate Bridge Co., a corporation organized under the laws of Kentucky), their (or its) successors and assigns, are hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near Warfield, Ky., and Kermit, W. Va., in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 23, 1906, entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters."

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH] demands a second, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH] has 20 minutes.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, this is the usual form of bill granting authority for the construction of a bridge across an interstate stream. Gentlemen of the House understand, I take it, all about the proposition, so that it is not necessary for me to debate it, and I shall not occupy the time to which I am entitled under the rules unless some one else desires to be heard or to interrogate me regarding it. My bill, which has been unanimously reported by the committee and is now on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, was introduced for the purpose of getting authority for some constituents of mine, who are gentlemen of high standing and entirely responsible, to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River. The Senate bill is of slightly different phraseology but its purpose is the same, and in order to expedite the matter I have made the motion to substitute the Senate bill for mine. There is a great deal of development going on along the Tug River, and the point at which it is desired to construct this bridge is becoming quite an important commercial community. The river there is not fordable during a large part of the year, so that a bridge is badly needed. The Senate bill does not describe the location of what I regard as the more important end of the proposed bridge—the Kentucky end—which is to be at or near Warfield, Ky., and the amendment which I have offered is to accomplish that.

I have no desire to take the time of the House myself, but I desire to assure Members that it is a meritorious bill in every respect and I hope it will pass. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LANGLEY. I have yielded to the gentleman from Minnesota, but I will yield later to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. LINDBERGH. What does the gentleman mean by this language?—

At a point suitable to the interest of navigation.

Is this bridge in aid of navigation?

Mr. LANGLEY. No; that is the language that is usually put in such bills. It means that the bridge must be constructed subject to the regulations of the War Department, the Tug River being a navigable stream.

Mr. LINDBERGH. What is the bridge to be used for?

Mr. LANGLEY. A highway bridge for ordinary traffic.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Is it to be a toll bridge?

Mr. LANGLEY. I assume that it will be a toll bridge, although I have not been specifically advised as to that. A private corporation is being organized to build it, and, of course, it must be their purpose to make it a toll bridge, unless the local county authorities should decide to purchase it and make it a free bridge, which is sometimes done. However, I know nothing personally about that phase of the matter. I simply know that a bridge is needed there, and I am trying to help pave the way for it.

Mr. LINDBERGH. That is all I wish to ask the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the House whether there is any opposition to this bill in the locality?

Mr. LANGLEY. Oh, none whatever that I have heard of. The bill has been pending for nearly a month and a half. I introduced it the first day of the session, and I have not been advised of the slightest opposition.

I will say further to the gentleman, repeating myself somewhat, that the junior Senator from Kentucky introduced the bill in the Senate and it has passed that body. I introduced a similar bill in the House, which has been unanimously reported by the House committee and is on the calendar. In order to expedite the matter I am asking that the Senate bill be passed and that my bill be laid on the table. That is all the explanation I desire to make.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules, taking this bill from the Speaker's table, and passing it with the amendments which have been read into it.

The question being taken and two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, does that action include amending the title, as suggested by me?

The SPEAKER. The amendment to the title was included in the title as read.

RURAL POST ROADS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 7617) to provide that the Secretary of Agriculture, on behalf of the United States, shall in certain cases aid the States in the construction and maintenance of rural post roads.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I had that bill put on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent some days ago, but since that time a different arrangement has been made, and I will ask that it be passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks to pass the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. That it be stricken off this calendar.

Mr. MANN. I object. That will strike it off the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and that takes it off the calendar. The Clerk will report the next bill.

FISH HATCHERY IN OKLAHOMA.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 403) granting to the State of Oklahoma permission to occupy a certain portion of the Fort Sill Military Reservation, Okla., and to maintain and operate thereon a fish hatchery.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of Oklahoma is hereby granted permission to enter upon and occupy, for the purpose of operating and maintaining thereon a fish hatchery for the propagation of fish for public distribution to the people of said State, and in pursuance thereof to construct ponds, drain the land, plant grass, shrubbery and trees, and otherwise improve and beautify the area to be occupied, the following-described tract of land within the Fort Sill Military Reservation, Okla., viz.: All that portion of said reservation lying and being within the boundary lines described as beginning at the northeast corner of section 19 in township 3 north, range 12 west, Indian meridian, and extending thence west along the section line a distance of 1,820 feet to a point in the center of Medicine Bluff Creek; thence in a southeasterly direction, following the center line of Medicine Bluff Creek, to a point 200 feet west of the east line and 1,700 feet south of the north line of said section 19; thence 200 feet east of the section line between said section 19 and section 20; thence north on the section line between said sections 19 and 20 a distance of 1,700 feet to the point of beginning, said tract containing an area of 39.5 acres more or less: Provided, That the occupation and use of the said land for the aforesaid purpose shall in no manner affect the rights, title, and interest of the United States in and to said lands; nor the Government's rights of passage over and across the lands so occupied: Provided further, That the United States shall not be liable for any damages whatsoever that may at any time occur to the improvements of the State of Oklahoma on said lands: And provided further, That the exercise of the rights hereby granted and the execution of any work on said lands hereby authorized shall be in accordance with such plans and specifications as may be approved by the Secretary of War and subject to such further stipulations and conditions as he may prescribe.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to the present consideration of this bill, though it is not on the call for to-day. I think it ought to be understood that hereafter the rule in reference to three days on the calendar will, in the main, be enforced.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; but I hope the gentleman will not object to this.

Mr. MANN. I say I shall not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following committee amendment was read:

Page 3, line 3, after the word "prescribe," insert the following:

"Provided further, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to revoke the permission herein granted, if in his judgment it is necessary for the use of such military reservation by the War Department."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to have the gentleman make a brief statement of the bill, so that Members of the House may know what it provides.

Mr. FERRIS. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. MANN. That instead of asking the Government of the United States to maintain a fish hatchery in Oklahoma, as other States have asked the Government to maintain hatcheries within their boundaries, what this bill does is to grant permission to the State of Oklahoma to maintain a hatchery at State expense; an example which other States might well follow.

For several years my district has insisted on my getting a fish hatchery from the Government, but I have never been able to do so. Last year the State appropriated $25,000 and built a fish hatchery, and now they want a little corner of this 56,000-acre military reservation to put a few ponds on, and we ask a revocable permit from the Government to establish on that little corner of this reserve, 7 or 8 miles away, these little ponds.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I am in harmony with the gentleman's bill, but Oklahoma is not the only State that seeks this privilege.

In fact, many States have already exercised it, and I want to say that Illinois does more work in the line of fish hatching for the streams of Illinois than does the Federal Government.

Mr. FERRIS. I thank the gentleman from Illinois. It affords me some gratification, because I was afraid I was alone in failing to secure a Federal appropriation for that purpose.

The War Department drew this bill, and recommends that the bill pass. It only seeks to occupy a remote corner of this large reservation. It is a revocable permit, so that the Government can retake it at any time it sees fit.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What committee reported the bill?

Mr. FERRIS. The Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I want to say that I have had a bill before Congress for some time for a fish hatchery in Texas, but I have not yet been able to secure it. We have only one fish hatchery in the State of Texas, and that is 500 miles from where I live. I hope that we shall soon get a report on that bill.

Mr. COX. Has the gentleman a military reservation in his district?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS TUG FORK, BIG SANDY RIVER.

The SPEAKER. The bill (S. 1773) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River, and so forth, was a Senate bill. The bill H. R. 306, of the same tenor, without objection, will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent will be passed, as it has not been on the calendar the requisite three days. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] is recognized for one hour under a special order.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, for nearly 11 years I have been a Member of this House and for a goodly portion of that time I have been a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I have served one term as the chairman of that committee and have just entered upon my second term as chairman of that committee.

Mr. Speaker, believing that my experience upon the committee mentioned justifies me, I desire to submit a few remarks to the House and the country on the public-building operations of the United States. It seems to me that the many articles which have appeared in the public press of the country during the past three or four years condemning the committee and holding up the Congress itself to public scorn and ridicule for alleged indulgence in "pork-barrel" legislation demand from some one a plain, simple statement of the real facts, if nothing more.

The storm of ridicule and abuse of the committee and of Congress for what has been designated "pork-barrel" legislation was brought into being by certain sensational metropolitan newspapers and safron-colored magazines and has been so assiduously nurtured by the same agencies that the general public has begun to believe that the chief occupation of the average Member of Congress is the plundering of the Public Treasury for the sole benefit of his particular district. In fact, it has been made to appear that public-building bills have been framed with no regard whatever to the needs of the public service, without reference to the public revenues, with entire disregard of all economic administration, and have been constructed solely upon the idea of giving to every Member of Congress and Senator a slice of the pie.

If these things are true, if Members of Congress are actuated in their legislative conduct by no higher motive than to grab from the Public Treasury all they can get for their own districts, regardless of the merits of the particular proposition, then they are unworthy to be here and should be mercilessly driven by an indignant people from the high places which they dishonor. But, Mr. Speaker, my 11 years of service in this House, my knowledge of its membership during all those years, my close association with the rank and file of this great body, and my fixed, immovable confidence in the integrity of the American House of Representatives all give the lie to these villainous insinuations. [Applause.]

During my humble service here I have seen many men come and go. Some have voluntarily retired from the service, either to private life or to enter upon the duties of some other station; some have gone down in defeat while seeking reelection; and some, answering the last call, "have crossed over the river and now rest under the shade of the trees." Looking back over the Congresses in which I have been permitted to serve, I can truthfully proclaim that nowhere upon the earth can a more upright, honorable, and patriotic body of men be found than is the American House of Representatives. [Applause.] We may and do differ as to the means of reaching the end, but I do believe that in the heart of every Member upon this floor, and uppermost in that heart, is a sincere and honest desire to reach that end which will best conduce to the honor and glory of the United States. We who are native born love the States from which we hail; those of us who were born on foreign shores love the fatherland; but over and above all we love this glorious Republic, an indissoluble Union of indestructible States, over which floats Old Glory, proud emblem of liberty now and forevermore. [Applause.]

Men representing a Government like this, in a country like this, can not be guilty of the petty pilfering laid at our door by these sensational yellow publications, and this I intend to demonstrate in words and figures so plain that "a wayfaring man, though a fool he be, need not err therein." In the first place, Mr. Speaker, let me say that no politics has ever entered into the deliberations of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It has been a strictly nonpartisan committee, both under Republican and Democratic control. The question of a Member's party affiliation has never been considered in passing on a bill; the merit of the proposition itself was the only thing in each case to which the committee gave thought. No one has ever attempted to make of this a partisan committee, and therefore I was pained a few months ago when a distinguished Republican of the State of Massachusetts, well known to all of us, in an attack on the present Democratic administration, made the astounding statement that if the Democrats would quit squandering so much money on magnificent public buildings in small towns in the South that there would be plenty of money for the legitimate purposes of the Government. I shall not retort by saying that Republican Congresses "squandered" money in public buildings—on the contrary, I expect to show that no Congress, Republican or Democratic, has "squandered" money on public buildings—but I will remind this distinguished gentleman of the fact that the Democrats have not yet passed an omnibus public-building bill, and therefore could not have "squandered" any money on "magnificent public buildings in small towns in the South." The last omnibus public-building bill passed by Congress was approved by President Taft on March 4, 1913, and at that time we had a Republican Senate and a Democratic House. We have had no general public-building bill since the Democrats have been in control of Congress and the Presidency, and, therefore, if there has been any squandering of the public funds on account of public-building legislation it can not be charged to the Democratic Party.

But let us see what the facts are. I intend to appeal from the reckless, sensational statements made by the yellow press, and gleefully repeated by a few alleged statesmen industriously trying to hold onto their jobs by posing as watchdogs of the Treasury in their attacks on public improvements, congressional mileage, a superfluity of janitors, and other like weighty questions of statecraft, to the actual record. [Laughter and applause.]

Congress has been viciously assailed for wasteful extravagance in the matter of the provision for and the construction of public buildings throughout the country. The bills coming from this committee have been referred to as "pork-barrel" bills, and the public has been deceived into believing that in the construction of these general bills it has simply been a matter of "you tickle me and I'll tickle you," without any regard to the merits of the proposition or the needs of the public service whatsoever. In the first place, Mr. Speaker, I deny that there has been any appreciable waste of the public money in public-building construction; and, in the second place, I assert without the slightest fear of successful contradiction that if there has been any waste of public money in Federal-building construction, the responsibility therefor can not be laid at the door of Congress. I shall address myself to the latter proposition first, and will recur to the former later on in my remarks. In order to convince the House and the country that Congress is not responsible for any waste of public funds in Federal-building construction, I have only to refer to the law itself. Let it be understood that Congress does not construct public buildings. All we can do is to authorize their construction and furnish the means therefor. Some other governmental agency must attend to the actual construction of the buildings, and Congress, by solemn enactment, has charged the Treasury Department with this duty. In the very nature of things it is utterly impossible for Congress to determine to the dollar what a public building for each and every city and town in the United States should cost, and therefore a measure of discretion had to be lodged in the executive department charged with their construction.

This being the case, Congress in every item of every general public-building bill has left the cost in the discretion of the Treasury Department. We have never enacted that a specific sum of money should be expended in the construction of a Government building at a particular place, but in each and every case we have fixed the maximum of cost beyond which the Treasury Department could not go. For instance, where we provided for a building at a given place with an authorization of $100,000 we have always expressly fixed that amount as the "limit of cost," and if in such case the department, in its discretion, felt that a $50,000 building would answer the purpose, there has never been anything to hinder the construction of a cheaper building. If, therefore, magnificent, monumental buildings have been constructed in one-horse, crossroads towns, where the business of the Government did not demand it, and thereby the money of the people has been needlessly wasted, the fault lies at the door of the Treasury Department and is not chargeable to us. "Thou can'st not shake thy gory head at us and say, Thou did'st it."

The last public-building bill passed by Congress was approved March 4, 1913, when we had a Democratic House and a Republican President and Senate. The next preceding omnibus public-building bill was approved June 25, 1910, at which time the House, Senate, and President were all Republican. The next preceding general omnibus public-building bill was approved on May 30, 1908, at which time the House, Senate, and President were all Republican. These three bills carried an aggregate authorization in round numbers of some $104,000,000, or an average of about $13,000,000 per annum. From the year 1908, when the first of these omnibus public-building bills was passed, until the present time Congress has passed a number of individual public-building bills; that is to say, bills providing for buildings at particular places. These individual and separate items have amounted in round numbers to some $13,000,000. Upon a calculation it will be shown that about half of the $117,000,000 which has been authorized within the last eight years has been authorized to be expended in cities of 25,000 population and over, and the remaining half has been authorized to be expended in cities under 25,000 population. Adding these miscellaneous and separate acts to the three omnibus bills, it will show an authorization of something over $14,000,000 during the past eight years for public building construction in the United States annually. Thus it will be seen, Mr. Speaker, that practically half of all the money authorized by us in the construction of public buildings in this country for the past eight years has gone to cities of 25,000 and over, while the rural communities, which I venture to say, if it could be correctly arrived at, pay into the Treasury much more than half the taxes of the country, have received the other half. If this calculation should be made upon the basis of cities and towns with more than 10,000 population and those with a population under that figure, it would be found, in my judgment, that the cities of more than 10,000 population have received a much larger proportion of these funds than they are entitled to if measured by the amount paid into the Treasury in the way of taxes. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and the Congress has not dealt unjustly, but, on the other hand, has dealt in a very liberal way with the large cities of the country. But, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the facts as disclosed by the record, a certain element of the metropolitan press and a certain class of magazines denounce us as "pork-barrel devotees" or "looters of the Treasury" every time we propose to construct a modest public building in a live, progressive, wide-awake town in the rural districts, but when we propose to expend millions for the erection of a marble palace in one of the great cities of the country we are pictured as broad-minded, progressive, and patriotic statesmen. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the Office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department is about five years behind in its work, and there is not the slightest prospect under existing methods of ever catching up. There are to my mind two reasons why that bureau or branch of the service is so far behind. One reason is the fact that some years ago the then Secretary of the Treasury, without authority of law, issued orders to his subordinates that they were only to construct in one year 25 per cent of the buildings provided for in a general public-building bill but recently passed. Thus it will be seen that with one stroke of the pen and in utter contempt for the will of Congress these buildings were thrown three years behind. I want to say right here that this practice of executive departments issuing orders which practically have the effect of nullifying acts of Congress has grown to such proportions and has been so long and persistently practiced until the departmental veto has come to be recognized as a legitimate governmental function. Congress is no longer the supreme power in matters of legislation. We, the chosen representatives of the people, selected by popular vote every two years, charged with the duty of writing into the law of the land the will of the sovereign citizenship of the Republic, sit supinely by while mere appointees of the Executive set aside and declare null and void our most solemn enactments. We have tamely submitted to Executive encroachments for so long, we have for so many years given the world such an example of spineless statesmanship, and have with such unconcerned complacency witnessed the Executive appropriation of practically all our prerogatives that even the janitors and messengers of executive departments no longer have respect for the House of Representatives, but instead appear to have a pitying contempt for what they regard as a harmless aggregation of legislative mollycoddles. [Laughter and applause.] How long shall this condition continue? Shall we assert ourselves and again become the vigorous, virile, powerful legislative force which we once were and which it was intended by the fathers of the Republic we should be, or shall we continue to drag out the miserable existence of a dwarfish, misshapen legislative eunuch? [Laughter and applause.] It is up to us, my friends. Which road shall we travel?

Mr. Speaker, I think we will all agree that from every viewpoint it is desirable to have the Supervising Architect's Office keep abreast of the building operations of the Government. It is neither in the interest of economy nor is it in the interest of good administration to have this or any other branch of the public service five or six years behind in its work. It is better in governmental affairs, as it is better in individual affairs, to drive your work rather than have your work drive you. If it is conceded that it is desirable to catch up and keep up with this important work of the Government, the question How can it be done? naturally arises. Mr. Speaker, I have given a good deal of thought to this question, and I believe that two things are absolutely necessary to be done in order to accomplish the desired result.

First. I believe it is absolutely necessary to reorganize the Office of the Supervising Architect, and place at the head of it a first-class architect who is also a practical, common-sense man of good executive ability. I admit that this combination is hard to find, as most good architects are, as a rule, impractical, visionary dreamers; but there are some who measure up to the requirement, and I have in mind now a gentleman who, in my judgment, will fully meet the requirements in this particular case.

Second. Standardization of buildings wherever possible. This question of standardizing has been much discussed, and most of the architects are opposed to the idea. But, Mr. Speaker, it requires no technical architectural knowledge to know that the plan is entirely feasible. [Applause.] It is not only feasible, but good business judgment demands it as a saver of both time and money in public-building construction.

I am fully aware that both climate and the topography of the country are to be considered, but from the first floor up a standard type can be used no matter what "the lay of the land" or climatic conditions may be. But, Mr. Speaker, my plan of standardization would be to divide the States of the Union into groups with particular reference to climate and topography, and then divide the cities and towns of each group into classes. For instance, I would form one group of the New England States, which for my present purposes I shall call "Group A." I would then take all the towns or cities in group A where the annual postal receipts were from ten to twenty-five thousand dollars and I would designate this as "class 1." I would then have the Supervising Architect draft plans and specifications for a post-office building for a town in class 1 of group A, and these plans and specifications would answer for every town of this class and group. It is absolutely nonsensical to tell me that a post-office building suitable for a certain-sized town in New Hampshire would not be equally suitable for the same-sized town in Rhode Island, or that a post-office building for a certain-sized town in Mississippi would not be equally suitable for a town of like size in Louisiana. A plan of this kind would save to the Government annually a large sum in the drafting of new plans, to say nothing of the immense saving in the matter of time.

In addition to the saving in the drafting of plans and time standardization would result in a tremendous saving in the cost of construction, and would also result in the erection of a class of buildings much better suited to the purposes of the Government from the standpoint of utility than those we are now getting. Of course in advocating standardization I am speaking with particular reference to those buildings which are to be used solely for post-office purposes.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Is the position of Supervising Architect of the Treasury still under the civil service?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; but it is vacant now.

Mr. KAHN. Before anybody could be appointed he would have to pass the civil-service examination and be near the top of the eligible list, would he not?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Under the present law; yes.

And, Mr. Speaker, I want to say here that the post-office building of the future should be essentially a workshop. It should be constructed with a view to utility and comfort rather than with a view to outside architectural beauty. The truth of the whole business is that the waste and extravagance of the past is chargeable directly to the fact that the esthetic dreamers who have been in the Supervising Architect's Office have sacrificed the utility of the building and the comfort of the workers therein to the gimcracks and curly cues of architecture. [Laughter and applause.] Mr. Speaker, I venture to say that with a common-sense system of standardization and a competent, level-headed architect with executive ability in charge of the Supervising Architect's Office we can effect a saving of at least 40 per cent in the building operations of the Government, have more and better buildings, and catch up with the work in less than three years.

Mr. Speaker, it is said that we should not have an omnibus public-building bill at this session of Congress, and I have heard but two reasons given in support of that contention. I desire to say right here that so far as I am personally concerned it makes very little difference to me whether we have a bill or not. I have only one town in my district unprovided for which, under the rule, is entitled to a public building. That town is already provided with a site, and if we have a general bill I shall in all human probability simply ask for a building on the site already secured. It seems to me that under these conditions I should be acquitted of any selfish motive in what I am about to say.

The objections to the passage of an omnibus public-building bill are:

First. That the Supervising Architect is so far behind in his work that it is unnecessary and useless at this time to authorize any further construction.

Mr. Speaker, this is no excuse at all. We can reorganize that office and soon have its work abreast of the authorizations. There is no question of this; and, second, that we are short of funds and can not afford it just now. We can not afford it, we are told, because we will need all the money we can raise for "preparedness." Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of reasonable "preparedness," but if "preparedness" means stoppage of all progress, if it means that all the works of internal improvement must cease, then I am against "preparedness" "tooth and nail," "forever and a day." In this question of "preparedness" a great and unexpected emergency confronts the country. The expense incident to it ought not to be paid out of the current revenues of the Government. It is an unexpected and extraordinary expense to be incurred more for the protection of the future than for the safety of the present, and therefore the logical and proper way to meet it is by an issue of bonds, using the current revenues for the ordinary expenses of the Government, including river and harbor improvements and the construction, enlargement, and repair of public buildings.

Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that some of our friends who are so extremely anxious to meet the desire of the people for an economic administration of public affairs have entirely forgotten the meaning of economy. One of the great reasons, in my humble judgment, which moved the people to turn the Republicans out and put us in in 1912 was the desire of the people for greater economy in public affairs. But the people did not mean by that verdict that they wanted all river and harbor improvement and public-building construction to cease; they simply wanted us to give them the same things which they had been getting for less money than our Republican friends had been giving it to them for. A cessation of progress is not economy; it is simply stagnation and dry-rot. Any man can save money by cutting off one meal a day; but that is not economy—it is pure cussedness and niggardliness. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, a great hue and cry has been raised in some of the metropolitan newspapers and some of the magazines of the country over the construction of public buildings in some of the smaller cities and towns, particularly in the West and South. These publications have had so much to say about "pork," "spoils," "looting the Treasury," and so forth, that all public-building legislation has been brought into ill repute in the minds of a great many good people. I desire for a short time to discuss this feature of the public-building activities of the Government and answer, if I may be able, the indictment which has been drawn and filed against the manner in which the work has been carried on. Let me assert in the beginning that it is beneath the dignity of this great Republic to occupy the position of a tenant for quarters in which to conduct the public business. Mr. Speaker, when this great Republic was born among the nations of the earth it was never once thought by the great men who established it that government among men was to be a money-making institution. The patriots of those days expected, and rightly expected, that the people who were to inhabit this God-favored land would be willing to pay for Government protection of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." They never dreamed that in the years to come a class of alleged statesmen would be found upon this floor seriously debating the question as to whether a certain proposed legislative enactment would be remunerative to the Government or not; they never supposed that men deemed worthy to represent 200,000 free-born American citizens in this great body would be sent here to waste hundreds of thousands of dollars of the people's money annually in a demagogic opéra bouffe effort to cut down the mileage of Members; they did not believe that the American public would ever reach that stage of avarice and venality where their only concern about proposed legislation was whether or not it would pay. Mr. Speaker, the people of the United States are intelligent, broad minded, and patriotic. They want the best, and they are willing to pay for it. It has been suggested, and in some quarters it is strongly insisted, that a public building should not be erected at any place where the rent is less than the interest on the cost of a building plus the upkeep charges. I take issue with this contention, and shall endeavor briefly to give some of the reasons which impel me to take this position. I freely concede that this question of financial profit or loss should be considered, but I do most emphatically deny that this should be the controlling factor. In determining whether the Government should construct and occupy its own building in a given town quite a number of matters should be taken into consideration.

First. The present and prospective importance of the town, with particular reference to the volume of public business transacted there, and the probability of its increase in the near future. We now have a statute in which Congress has declared that in those places where there is no Federal activity other than the post office no site can be purchased where the postal receipts do not amount to at least $7,000 and no building can be authorized where the postal receipts do not amount to at least $10,000 annually. This rule was written into the law of the land in the Sixty-second Congress after conference between the two Houses and mature deliberation. So that your committee, in determining whether a public building should be constructed at a given place, not only investigates the postal receipts for the past year, but looks into the receipts for several years past, examines into the growth in population, business, and so forth, in order to determine as to the stability of the town and the likelihood of the continuance of its growth.

Second. The amount of rent being paid by the Government, the character of building occupied, and its distance from the railroad station or stations or steamboat wharves.

Sometimes we find that the rent is merely nominal, with the object of having the post office located in a certain section of the town. Sometimes we find that while the Government is paying a very small rental the office is located in a veritable fire trap, which is not only dangerous but a positive disgrace to a great Government like ours. Very frequently we find that the post office is located more than 80 rods from the depot or wharf, which entails on the Government the additional cost of carrying the mails from the depot or wharf to the post office and from the post office to the depot or wharf.

Mr. Speaker, it is proper for me to state here that in all towns or cities where the post office is located within 80 rods of the depot or wharf to which mail is brought the railroad or steamboat company, as the case may be, is compelled under the law to deliver that mail at the post office, and I have in mind now one city in the United States where the Government is under contract to pay, and is paying, $200,000 per annum for the hauling of the mail to and fro between the post office and the railway stations. I want to say in this connection that in every case of a new building your committee is, and has been for some years past, trying to locate it within this 80-rod limit.

Third. Whether any Federal activities other than the post office are located at that particular place. We do this because sometimes we find, particularly in the South and West, small towns whose postal receipts do not quite reach the required amount, but where, in addition to the post office, there is a Federal court, land office, or some other Federal activity which must be housed.

Fourth. The location of the town. That is to say, whether it is a railroad or mining center or the center of a vast territory, growing rapidly and with an unquestionable future.

These are some of the principal matters, Mr. Speaker, into which your committee makes inquiry in determining the location of a public building for the use of the Government.

I hold no brief for the committee in what I am about to say, but speaking for myself alone, and as an individual member of this great body, I want to say that there are some other considerations which move me and operate upon my mind when giving attention to the matter of constructing Federal buildings in the smaller cities and towns, and particularly those of the interior. The great rural population of this country constitutes the very "bone and sinew" of the land—the backbone of the Republic. If I had the time, I believe I could show that they pay the great bulk of the taxes necessary to support the Government in times of peace, and God knows that in times of war the American country boy follows Old Glory where "thickest falls the red rain of human slaughter." He sees very little of the blessings of government beyond the post office and the rural carrier, and if I had the power I would erect for every presidential post office throughout the broad domain of the Republic a Government building representative of the sovereignty and the glory of this great country. From Maine to California and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf, in every town of sufficient importance to have the President name the postmaster, I would erect a suitable but not extravagant building, and from its apex the Stars and Stripes, proud emblem of the glory of the Republic, should forever wave an inspiration to the youth of the land. Suppose here and there it should be a little more expensive in dollars and cents to own a building than it is to rent. Is it worth nothing to inspire patriotism and love of country in the hearts and minds of the youth of the country? No youth or citizen ever looked upon a Federal building in which the business of his country was being conducted but that he became a better American. Mr. Speaker, I remember quite well when I gazed for the first time upon this imposing building. It was just about 39 years ago, when I was a boy, not quite 17 years of age, and came to Washington for the first time. I had started from my home down in Georgia for the great Northwest, there to carve out my fortune. Although it was out of my way, I decided to come by Washington and see the wonderful city of which I had heard so much. I looked upon it as the seat of government of a foreign people, and somehow when I crossed the Potomac felt that I was on hostile soil. But, Mr. Speaker, when I came up Pennsylvania Avenue, and standing at the foot of the hill looking up at this magnificent structure, surmounting the dome of which stood a figure of the Goddess of Liberty; when I recalled the seven-years' struggle of the revolutionary patriots; the War of 1812; and the triumphant march of American soldiery across the sands of Mexico into the "Halls of the Montezumas," and remembered that the same blood which coursed through my veins had been shed in each of those three conflicts, I said, Thank God, this is my country, and Old Glory is my flag. [Applause.]

Breathes there a man with soul so dead
Who never to himself has said
This is my own, my native land?

[Applause.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. KITCHIN, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. GARLAND, for three days, on account of death in his family.

STOCK-RAISING HOMESTEADS.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 407) to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H. R. 407, with Mr. Cox in the Chair.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The committee did not go into a long discussion of the merits of this bill, with the idea in view of taking it up under the five-minute rule so that it may be disposed of as expeditously as possible under all the existing circumstances. I just want to say a word in regard to the general features of the bill. It is well known that we have had for many years our 160-acre homestead law and that it has been effective in the West, and permitted the valuable tracts of land to be taken up, so that a man could go upon a tract with his family and get a comfortable living for himself and those dependent upon him. Following that we had the 320-acre homestead law, which applied to a different character of land than that provided in the 640-acre homestead. That applied to land that was nontimbered, land that was not then known to be subject to irrigation. At the same time we reserved the minerals to the Government in the 320-acre homestead and do the same in this bill. That law has worked well, has permitted many hundreds of thousands of acres of the public land of the West to be filed upon, and it gave homes to our citizens, to the end that they have been able to maintain their families successfully and assist in building up the community in which the land is located and in the construction of schools and towns and good roads. Before passing this it must be recognized, and I am sure that many of the Members have forgotten it, that we had in force for many years what was known as the timber-culture law, which permitted a man to obtain 160 acres adjoining his homestead by planting trees upon it, to be added to the rest of his home, that he might use it for agricultural as well as grazing purposes.

In conjunction with the homestead of 160 acres we had during many years what was known as the preemption law, which permitted a man to file upon 160 acres and, living upon that land for six months and paying $1.25 an acre for it, to obtain title to the land. It ought to be called to the attention of the committee, and I think I can safely say this, that with the exception of those who have gone there since the repeal of the preemption law, over half of the men in the West obtained a preemption claim and a homestead claim, which gave them 320 acres for their home. A number got the benefit of the timber-culture law. While few literally complied with the terms of it, it was afterwards amended to the extent that if they proved they cultivated a certain percentage of it they were permitted to make final proof. So that we find they were permitted to acquire a considerable quantity of land.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, we now find large tracts of land provided for in the bill which are chiefly valuable for grazing and for the purposes of raising forage crops, and which do not contain much of the timber and are not susceptible to irrigation from any known source, and we believe that 640 acres are reasonably required for the support of a family.

It is a fact that with a great deal of this land, of which there are millions of acres, that to plow it and destroy the native sod to a great extent ruins the value of the land for the farmer; and the purpose of the department, and that has been acted upon by the committee, is to give a man a sufficient quantity of land remaining which will permit him to go upon the land and live without cultivation, unless he can cultivate a small tract of 10 acres or 5 acres for the purpose of raising garden stuff and other things close at home, where he has a well or a spring, in order that he might raise stock, a few cattle, a few horses, and in some instances, in connection with cattle and horses, a few sheep. He will thereby become a permanent settler. He will add to the beef supply of the country, because it has been demonstrated by statistics which were thoroughly presented to the committee that in the settled communities and in the western public-land States there has been a large increase in cattle, in horses, and in many instances in sheep as the community settled and as the land became under private ownership, and that a better grade of cattle has been raised, for which the farmer received a better price. It is unquestionable and it is without doubt that the day of the great cattle king, horseman, and sheepman, so far as using the control of the great areas of the public domain is concerned, has passed.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Does the gentleman not think that he is now affording some opportunity to the stock owners, the big stock owners, to gather to themselves a large measure of the public domain by the passage of this act?

Mr. RAKER. No. In answer to that question I believe that the public-land States from the time of the 160-acre tracts to the 320-acre tracts and also the Kinkaid Act, which applied to western Nebraska, of 640 acres, the report will show that practically only 10 per cent—I believe it is less—of these homesteaders, of men living in that country, who own more than 640 acres, or whose tracts have been disposed of, and from one or two millions the increase in productiveness and value has grown up to millions, and the department shows it is settled by good citizens, who live there, who have built up schools and churches and towns as well as they have in other parts of the United States, and that the large cattlemen have not been able to obtain the tracts that were possible to obtain at one time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How much land can a homesteader now own under existing law?

Mr. RAKER. He can obtain 160 acres as homestead land and 160 acres of timber and stone land or 160 acres of desert land, or 320 acres of desert land. Except from the Kinkaid Act and the enlarged homestead law, a man to-day can only get 320 acres, when years before—I just want to enumerate—you permitted him to get a preemption tract of 160 acres; you permitted him to get a homestead of 160 acres; you permitted him to get a stone and timber claim of 160 acres; you permitted him to get a desert claim of 640 acres, and in some locations you permitted him to get 640 acres of desert claim besides the 640 acres under the general desert-land law. In addition to that, you permitted him to get a timber-culture entry.

Now, notwithstanding all these many entries and the large amount that was involved, and when all the best land had been obtained, we ask now simply that you recognize the home-building people of the West and that a man may go there and receive a sufficiently large tract of land for him to make a home upon and from which he may support himself and family.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from California may have five minutes additional. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the settler has acquired 640 acres, is he now at his maximum which he can acquire?

Mr. RAKER. It is 320 acres now.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the maximum amount now that he can obtain—640 acres?

Mr. RAKER. No; 320 acres.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If he had 320 acres now, under the gentleman's bill can he obtain more?

Mr. RAKER. He can obtain 320 acres more, making 640 acres, provided the 320 acres he acquires is of the same class and character as that designated in this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Did not we have a bill passed in the last session that provided for a 640-acre tract?

Mr. RAKER. This is the same bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is this the same bill?

Mr. RAKER. Yes. If a man acquires, under subdivision 2, 640 acres, his right is exhausted.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What does this paragraph 9 bestow upon a man who has 640 acres; the right to purchase?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; the right to purchase where he has less than 640 acres.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not where he has 640 acres?

Mr. RAKER. No. In other words, if a man has 160 acres, and there is a tract of land adjoining him of this character, he may buy enough of it to make 640 acres. No; he can only buy 320 acres of this kind of land, and add to what he already has.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If this bill passes, a man could not acquire a maximum of more than 640 acres?

Mr. RAKER. Not at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Under existing law and this additional law?

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And this pertains only to arid or semiarid lands?

Mr. RAKER. That is all.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Under this, is one who takes up 640 acres required to live upon it?

Mr. RAKER. He is; he can not commute it, the same as a 160-acre homestead; but the only thing he does not have to do is he does not have to cultivate it, because much of this land ought not to be cultivated; but he must put in $1.25 of improvements to the acre.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. What kind of improvements?

Mr. RAKER. Fences, houses, wells, barns, and things that are permanent for the purpose of developing and adding to his home.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. In building a fence around 640 acres, is that accepted as doing all that is necessary?

Mr. RAKER. If he adds the value of $1.25 an acre, because that brings it to the very highest state of use and——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. But would not that lead to the very thing the gentleman spoke of first——

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Now, wait a moment—of acquiring this land for the purpose of disposing of it to the very large owners of land there and stock raisers?

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. And ultimately result in getting it into one big block of great areas of land under this law?

Mr. RAKER. From my observation and experience up to date, and the information which we get that has been presented by the department, and particularly under the Kinkaid 640-acre Act, from actual experience of 30 years I would say no; that these men would take them for homes, for the purpose of using it and occupying it and build up and become part of the community in which the land was situated.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Would the gentleman in charge of the bill consent to an amendment that improvements to the value of $1.25 an acre, exclusive of fences, should be required?

Mr. RAKER. Well, I think no; for this reason: Now, gentlemen know that this is for the purpose of a stock-raising homestead. Gentlemen, the use of the land, the value of the land, is the fact that a man by dint of hard work and skimping in the things he needs and his wife needs, so that he may be able to get enough money to put up a good, substantial fence under the State law around this 640 acres, so that he, and he alone, may get the benefit of it and add to the value of his holdings——

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma to answer the question, too.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] and the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. McCRACKEN] have both raised a question that ought to be raised here and ought to be debated and looked into, and that is, Will the granting of a large unit to anybody result in it getting into the hands of a few people?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. I merely wanted, if the gentleman will yield——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized in my own right.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. I merely wanted to state in connection with that that the State I have the honor to represent in part has perhaps more public lands by a good deal than any State in the Union. In fact, we have one-fifth of the unappropriated public land in the United States, something over 50,000,000 acres. Now, I think there is nothing that the large cattle owner and sheep owner would get from this bill to the detriment of any citizen of this country, and nothing they want to get, for this reason: That they have absolute right now to run their herds over the public domain, and they can get it cheaper than they could by buying somebody's homestead right. I merely state that as a reason. Why should it be to their benefit to buy something when they do not have to pay anything at all now? The cattlemen and sheepmen do not favor this bill.

Mr. FERRIS. I thank the gentleman. The Department of the Interior had in contemplation the passage of this bill this year because it passed the House last year. I reintroduced it again this year on the first day of the session.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Was that bill called a bill to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes?

Mr. FERRIS. The bill is the same as last year. We did not cross a "t" or dot an "i."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The title is the same?

Mr. FERRIS. That is my recollection. I dropped it in the basket just as it passed the House last year.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I should like to inquire whether there is any provision in this bill for the granting of these homesteads to anyone under 21 years of age?

Mr. FERRIS. No; there is not. I think there is a separate bill pending, introduced by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], to grant homesteads to boys and girls of 18 years of age or over. That is not dealt with in this bill at all. As to the question raised by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] and the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. McCRACKEN], as I said, the bill passed the House last year, and the Department of the Interior knew it was going to be introduced and pressed again this year. So they made an investigation by sending men out to western Nebraska to determine what had been done under the only 640-acre law that had ever been passed, the Kinkaid Act. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID] is still a Member of the House, and an honored one, and is entitled to great credit for having blazed the way for this 640-acre legislation. He got this legislation as applying to 37 counties in the sand hills of western Nebraska. At that time they could not get anybody to live there except cattlemen and sheepmen. They argued that if we passed a law giving them 640 acres of land, in a few years a few men would own it all and drive the cattle all out of the country. Now, as I have said, the Department of the Interior sent special agents out to investigate that very thing, first to ascertain if they would buy it all up, and if it really worked that way; and, second, if it really did drive the cattle out of the country.

Now, here is what they say on the subject of large holdings:

Of the land entered in Nebraska under the section law there is an average of one settler for every 571 acres.

Now, that is less than the unit originally granted.

In the 37 counties affected by this law it appears that there are 4,589,870 acres in the hands of the original entrymen, 6,411,963 acres in the hands of small holders—

These cases, I assume, are where the first entryman started out and sold to a second man who had a little more money and was able to stick a little tighter and remain a little longer, because it is still in the hands of the small owner. They say further:

And only 316,453 acres in the hands of what might be termed large holders; that is, those possessing areas in excess of 2,000 acres.

Now, the Kinkaid Act, passed 11 years ago, in 1904—pretty nearly 12 years ago—and you can see that a very small amount has crept into the hands of big holders, and you can see what a large amount has remained in the original entryman's hands, and you can see there is a family in that community for every 571 acres, which is less than the present size of unit. They say further:

The department is informed that the practically unanimous sentiment of the people in western Nebraska is that the law has been a benefit to them and to the country, causing a large increase in the population, promoting the development of the lands, and advancing generally the public welfare.

Let me go back and show you the figures as to whether or not it actually drives cattle out of the country. I have no doubt the Members of the House feel that because we pass a large unit, that runs the cattlemen out. Not at all. The small farmer has more cattle and produces more cattle on a given area than they do where the range is not protected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed further. I will not burn up much more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. The big objection to this legislation always is that it drives the cattlemen out of business and drives the sheepmen out of business and all that kind of argument. Let me give you the facts. The Kinkaid Act passed in 1904. The value of the cattle in 1904, when the Kinkaid Act was passed, was $3,176,109. Let us get this, because here is a point the committee ought to know:

In 1914—

That was last summer a year ago, when this investigation was made—

$4,267,055; increase, 34 per cent.

Now, listen to the rest of this showing:

In 1904—

That was the year when the Kinkead Act was passed—

30 counties produced 69,962 bushels of potatoes; in 1914, 2,671,924 bushels; increase, 3,719 per cent.

Now, gentlemen, in raising the unit a little——

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. I want to know from the gentleman if the figures there give an increase in the number of head of cattle? The gentleman gave the value.

Mr. FERRIS. I believe it does. I will see if I can turn to it. I did not report this bill and have not given much attention to it. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] reported the bill. I think it does give the number of head.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FERRIS. I do.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is familiar with the public-land laws. I would like to call his attention to section 10 of the bill, which provides—

That all entries made and patents issued under the provisions of this act shall be subject to and contain a reservation to the United States of all the coal and other minerals in the lands so entered and patented——

And so forth.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would that cover the Government's interest in oil lands?

Mr. FERRIS. It would. We believe it would cover every kind of mineral. All kinds of minerals are reserved; and, more than that, it does not apply to timberlands or to lands susceptible of irrigation or any land that can get water from any known source. It merely gives the settler who is possessed of any pluck an opportunity to go out and take 640 acres and make a home there. The gentleman from Pennsylvania and I rode over it last summer, and if a man can stick on that land and convert it into a prosperous community, as was done under the Kinkaid Act, I say, "God speed him on."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If any oil should be discovered on these lands later on, the Government's right to that oil would be preserved under this mineral clause, would it?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; and further, this act authorizes the reentry upon these lands to extract oil and coal and anything else in the way of minerals that may be on it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman does not think it is necessary to specify oil?

Mr. FERRIS. No. That is a mineral. But I have no objection to it being mentioned specifically if it is at all thought necessary. I feel doubly sure, however, it is not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has been called to my attention that the word "mineral" would not include oil.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think it is necessary; but if the gentleman thinks there is any conceivable doubt about it we will put it in, because not a single gentleman from the West who has been urging this legislation wants anybody to be allowed to homestead mineral land. This does not apply to a single acre of land in my own State, and therefore I have no selfish interest in it. But these gentlemen who are interested in it do not want to homestead mineral land or ordinary homestead land or oil land.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. There is a provision here that permits a man who has taken up and homesteaded one of these tracts, and wants to give it up and take up 640 acres under this law, to do that?

Mr. FERRIS. That is true.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. In case he does that and takes up 640 acres, is he required to live on it?

Mr. FERRIS. He is; and he is required to comply with every other requirement of this bill.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I did not understand that it was necessary for him to live on it at all.

Mr. FERRIS. Let me give the gentleman a practical example. Suppose under the existing law the gentleman from Michigan and myself resided in Colorado. Suppose we had made a 320-acre homestead of arid land, or 160 acres, which is as much as we can get, of better land. Suppose the gentleman and myself were just in the act of failing to stay there by reason of the smallness of our holdings. This bill says we can relinquish our holdings and turn them back to the Government and start over anew.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I would call the gentleman's attention to section 9, on page 7. That answers the gentleman's question.

Mr. FERRIS. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, I am not presumptuous enough to estimate that my humble vouching for the successful operation of the Nebraska act will add anything to the excathedra report of the honorable Secretary of the Interior in reporting on the provisions of the pending bill, inasmuch as the report gives such a hearty and unqualified indorsement of the Nebraska act, of which I was the author.

Right here, Mr. Chairman, I must thank the Members who have given such generous indorsement of the virtues of the Nebraska act, incidentally complimenting the Nebraska Member, its author. I will at once admit the act to be fully deserving of the indorsement given it by the membership of this House, but I shall not admit myself to be fully entitled to the complimentary expressions bestowed upon me. However, I am very grateful both for justice done the act and the consideration given me by the Members of the House. I wish to again thank the Members who helped to pass the act in this House February, 1904. I wish also to thank, on this floor, the honorable Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and their able and painstaking assistants, both in the departments here in Washington and in the field service, for the careful, fair, painstaking, and thorough investigation made and report of the operation of the Nebraska act. This official finding, from which later I shall briefly quote, justly closes the question whether the act of April 28, 1904, was in the interest of the public welfare.

Mr. Chairman, it was a burning question in western Nebraska when I was first nominated for the House what was to be done with the public-land question. On the one hand, was it to be a leasing bill whereby the lands would remain public domain and nontaxable in the hands and under control of large ranchmen lessees indefinitely, or, on the other hand, should it be an enlarged homestead act whereby the many would be afforded an opportunity to acquire homes. I did not hesitate to choose the latter alternative, and I introduced a bill for a 640-acre homestead. It was regarded as rather a novelty here, and precedents were demanded. My answer was that we had better make a precedent, and that this case would be an experiment.

Very strong opposition did exist in my district to the bill, and this very naturally by those who had so long enjoyed the benefits of free range for their herds. Had it been deemed likely that the bill would receive favorable consideration by the Congress, I feel confident that opposition would have become organized and determined in an effort to defeat it. But no opposition came up from western Nebraska or other localities in the grazing West to protest to the Congress against the measure, and the bill became law.

Paradoxically as it would now seem in the light of the report of the present able Secretary of the Interior, the then honorable Secretary of the Interior refused the bill his sanction on the ground that the bill was being sought in the interests of the large ranchmen, who were, in fact, generally opposed to it. While the law was applauded by the mass of the people, its enactment evoked for a time strong opposition among large ranchmen both in Nebraska and in other parts of the grazing West to which it was feared its provisions might be extended.

Mr. Chairman, it is very gratifying to me to be warranted in stating the fact that practically all opposition in Nebraska which at first arose to the Nebraska act has gradually turned to hearty approval.

But while the operation of the act continued to gain for it popularity at home, organized influences outside of Nebraska, by newspaper and magazine publications, tried hard to write it down. In fact, it was only a year ago when delegates coming from the far West appeared before the Public Lands Committee of the House and charged that the operation of the Nebraska act had been a failure. But they were seeking the passage of a leasing bill in opposition to a homestead bill like the one now pending.

Mr. Chairman, I acknowledge that uncalled-for assaults made upon the measure by opposition organized in States west of Nebraska at times have caused me some annoyance, but I never deemed them of sufficient importance to require refutation on the floor of this House, but by analogy I found justification as well as consolation in the rule of evidence that the reputation of an individual is legitimately determined by what the people in his own vicinity may think of him, knowing full well that the Nebraska act was constantly being vindicated by the people in the territory included in its provisions.

Mr. Chairman, the effect of the change from a 160-acre to a 640-acre unit for a homestead in Nebraska soon wrought a great transformation. For a few years preceding its enactment the population in the territory covered by the act had actually been decreasing, contrary to the ordinary rule in a new and undeveloped country. The effect was to change this order to a rapidly increasing population. Hitherto in the small towns the lumberyards and the hotels had been abandoned. Now these businesses were restored and made prosperous, and all other branches of business were likewise favorably affected by the change. New paint was applied to the neglected buildings of these partially depopulated towns and a new atmosphere of activity, upgrowth, and prosperity was realized.

In keeping with the increase of population the number of school districts and schoolhouses was increased. The high standard of the Nebraska common school, second to that of no State in the Union, became extended more and more to the newly formed settlements. In passing it is proper to state all that is necessary to be done in Nebraska to secure funds for a good school is to perform the condition precedent of securing a sufficient number of children of school age to patronize it and profit by it, for a large school fund is permanently provided for. This insures the best quality of instruction, generally by young women in the country districts, graduates of high schools, State normal schools, and many of them graduates of our own Nebraska State University or other Nebraska universities, of which we are proud, as well as such educational institutions in other States.

Mr. Chairman, and the Sunday-school missionaries have also contributed bountifully to the general uplift. They have promoted so much for the good of these new communities that I find myself too much limited in time to accord them due credit. Let it suffice to say there has been employed to work with the new population of children a number of men—talented, most enterprising, faithful, energetic, up-to-date, and most efficient Sunday-school missionaries I have every known anywhere. Thus in the area in question creditable school buildings and churches in due proportion to the area partially reflect the rapid progress of the inhabitants. But I should add the pulpits are here filled as ably as anywhere in the Union.

Mr. Chairman, my time being too limited to longer dilate on the favorable change produced by the operation of the act, I shall here read from the report of the honorable Secretary of the Interior, made December 15, 1915, on the pending bill, to the House Committee on the Public Lands, beginning with the last paragraph on page 3 thereof and reading to the commencement of the last paragraph on page 4.

It reads:

Since the last session of Congress the department has been seeking information as to the advisability of the passage of such a law as is now proposed by this bill. Attention has been especially directed to the operation of the act of April 28, 1904 (33 Stat., 547), which authorized the entry of not exceeding 640 acres of land in a considerable area of western Nebraska. The provisions of that act, as applying to that limited area, were in the main designed to meet the same conditions which the present bill proposes to meet as to other areas of the public lands. Eleven years have elapsed since the passage of the law relating to western Nebraska, and the investigations of the department as to the results of that legislation are both important and significant. Prior to the passage of the act of 1904 considerable land in western Nebraska had been entered under other laws, but the marvelous development since the passage of the act of 1904 is so marked that it must in great measure at least be attributed to that law. It has been found that some of the valleys and lower lands which intersperse the larger area have been made to produce through intensive cultivation varied crops of large value, and that the production of live stock has largely increased rather than diminished. The improvements placed by the settlers upon their claims indicate both prosperity and permanency of occupation, as dwellings of stone, cement, or frame construction, plastered and provided with conveniences, have generally supplanted the original sod houses, and the farmer who has not built barns, silos, or other structures for storing crops and protecting live stock is a rare exception. The live stock raised upon the small ranches is of a higher grade than that which was produced by grazing upon the vacant public lands.

It appears from statistics collected, covering 31 counties within the area to which said law is applicable, that the population was 124,508 in 1890, 107,434 in 1900, and 162,217 in 1910, an increase of nearly 50 per cent in population during said 10-year period, during 6 years of which the 640-acre homestead law was in force.

The value of household furniture increased from $174,779 in 1904 to $342,312 in 1914, an increase of 95 per cent.

The value of agricultural implements in 1904 was $139,609; in 1914, $243,304; increase, 74 per cent.

The value of cattle in 1904 was $3,176,109; in 1914, $4,267,055; increase, 34 per cent.

In 1904, 30 counties produced 69,962 bushels of potatoes; in 1914, 2,671,924 bushels; increase, 3,719 per cent.

Number of acres planted to rye in 27 counties in 1904, 47,451; in 1914, 91,336; increase, 92 per cent.

Number of acres planted to oats in 28 counties in 1904, 47,451; in 1914, 91,336; increase, 92 per cent.

Number of acres planted to corn in 28 counties in 1904, 564,554; in 1914, 1,143,916; increase, 102 per cent.

Number of acres planted to wheat in 27 counties in 1904, 122,799; in 1914, 297,900; increase, 142 per cent.

Number of horses in 31 counties in 1892, 107,295; in 1904, 168,556; increase, 57 per cent; in 1914, 282,624; increase, 67 per cent.

Number of hogs in 29 counties in 1904, 171,849; in 1914, 225,480; increase, 31 per cent.

The acreage of improved land in 27 counties increased 68 per cent in 12 years, 1892 to 1904; increased 77 per cent in 10 years, 1904 to 1914. The value of the improved land decreased 18 per cent the first period and increased 143 per cent the second.

The total assessed valuation of all property in 31 counties in 1892 was $23,468,899.69; in 1904, $27,480,836.57; increase, 17 per cent; in 1914, $57,278,766; increase, 108 per cent.

Of the land entered in Nebraska under the section law there is an average of one settler for every 571 acres. In the 37 counties affected by this law, it appears that there are 4,589,870 acres in the hands of the original entrymen, 6,411,963 acres in the hands of small holders, and only 316,453 acres in the hands of what might be termed large holders; that is, those possessing areas in excess of 2,000 acres. The department is informed that the practically unanimous sentiment of the people in western Nebraska is that the law has been a benefit to them and to the country, causing a large increase in the population, promoting the development of the lands, and advancing generally the public welfare.

Mr. Chairman, there are few unacquainted with the territory covered by the act who can adequately conceive of the splendid picture—which is a reality—which this report presents; it shows plainly that an abundant harvest is being reaped from the operation of the law our Congress was wise enough to pass nearly 12 years ago. Is not 12 years a sufficient test and when successful a sufficient vindication of the merits of a law?

Mr. Chairman, no other public-land law has ever attained greater popularity than the Nebraska act is accorded by the people in the community where the lands lie.

Mr. Chairman, as I told my constituents at the time, the reason for providing for an enlarged homestead instead of for a leasing law was based upon the rule of legislation, "the greatest good to the greatest number," and this has abundantly proven to be the character of the act in this case.

Mr. Chairman, the pending Ferris bill fundamentally is the same as the Nebraska act, and its purpose is the same. And I am confident that if duly enacted into a law its operation will prove beneficent and inure to the great good of the people generally and to the States wherever the act may be applied. I am therefore most heartily in favor of the Ferris bill. [Applause.]

Mr. BORLAND. I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent that at the close of the gentleman's remarks debate on this paragraph may close.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no; there are several gentlemen over here who wish to discuss it.

Mr. MANN. We would like to have 25 minutes on this side.

Mr. FERRIS. Then I think we can get along faster by not asking for any limitation.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that he make his request.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of 35 minutes the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. MANN. Of which I am to have control of 25 minutes?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of 35 minutes debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. FERRIS. Twenty-five minutes to be yielded to the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri, and 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in listening to the explanation of the gentleman on the committee who reported this bill as to its effect on the stock-raising industry of the West. If the bill has the effect of increasing the production of live stock in the West, as the gentleman anticipates, it will not only be of great benefit to the public-land States but to the entire country. Everyone familiar with the live-stock industry in this country has noted with alarm that in the last decade the supply of live stock has steadily decreased as the population and consuming power of the American people have increased. The explanation of that is very simple. As the land in the Missouri and Mississippi Valleys and in the older sections of our country becomes more thickly settled it becomes increasingly difficult for the farmer to raise the young stock necessary to keep up the supply. If he had an ample supply of stockers and feeders he could employ them profitably on his blue grass, with his corn, and fatten them for the market; but the difficulty has been in raising the supply of stockers and feeders; and frequently it is to be noticed that in the great live-stock markets of Kansas City, Omaha, St. Louis, and Chicago the stockers and feeders bring a price almost as high as that brought by cattle on the market.

I take it, this land will not be confined to raising stockers and feeders, because in the great alfalfa belt, in which the land is located, a large amount of the cattle—or a fair percentage of them—will be fattened for actual slaughter; but, as I understand, this will provide an increasing area for the raising of young stock, for stockers and feeders, for the more thickly settled portions of the country, and to my mind that is the solution of the American cattle business. We have ample blue grass in the Missouri Valley, ample pasturage and water, and ample corn. If the Department of Agriculture adopts standard grades of corn to be shipped in interstate commerce, there will be a certain amount of corn that must be fed on the farm and that can not be shipped profitably. Therefore the farmer must have some stock to eat the corn and other feed which remains on his farm.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes. I have not a great deal of time.

Mr. RAKER. In confirmation of what the gentleman has stated I want to read one sentence, if the gentleman will permit me.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. This comes from Montana:

> I believe that the enactment of the law providing for 640-acre homesteads will result in the production of a greater number of cattle than were found on those ranges during the most prosperous days of the cattle range.

Mr. BORLAND. I hope that will prove true. In the old days, when I was a boy in the live-stock business, we had an open range covering all the territory of the gentleman from Oklahoma and large parts of other States. To-day most of that range is either in private ownership or in forest reserves or otherwise withdrawn. The live-stock business has suffered in consequence, and we are going to Argentina and elsewhere to find beef for slaughtering in this country. In fact, some of our American packing houses are now located in the South American countries. If this bill does have a tendency to increase the live-stock production of this country, it will be a valuable thing for every section of the country, including the great consuming centers of the East.

In addition to that not only is the cattle industry affected but the sheep industry. In our section of the country sheep are used by the farmers principally to clear up pasturage and brushwood and stuff of that kind. It is difficult for our farmers to get sheep; sheep are selling high in Missouri to-day under the blessings of Providence and a Democratic administration. The farmers can not pick up bunches of sheep, as they would like to, for the purpose of clearing up old pastures and clearing up old woodland; but here is another outlet for enterprise and industry for our friends on the public-land States. They can raise sheep for the Mississippi and Missouri Valleys, and every bunch of young sheep would be readily taken up by the farmers in my section. I am glad to support the bill that will not only produce more population for the Western States but will tend to increase the live-stock industry in the whole country.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I have procured this time simply to ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a brief extract from an address by Prof. Charles H. Herty, of North Carolina, to the American Chemical Society, of which he is president.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an address of Prof. Charles H. Herty. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, on page 1, line 4, the word "qualified" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "entitled."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Page 1, line 4, strike out the word "qualified" and insert in lieu thereof the word "entitled."

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, according to my reading of this section, the language is ambiguous as to whether the present phraseology would not grant to those who have already exercised the privilege of homestead an additional right to take 640 acres under this bill. I have read the section of the Revised Statutes applicable that gives the right to a homestead entry, and certainly there is nothing there that would forbid the person from exercising again the right under this law if he has heretofore exercised it. The word "entitled" clears that ambiguity, and certainly it was not the intention of the committee to grant to those who have already exercised the right an additional homestead.

Mr. FERRIS. That is right.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am in sympathy with the purpose of trying to increase the acreage for stock-raising purposes. There is no question but that the supporters of this bill will attain great popularity in those States where these lands are situated. We know the rare popularity and deserved popularity of the gentleman from Nebraska who gave to his people the additional privilege of locating on some 480 acres. Of course, every farmer in the western country who has already taken a homestead entry of 160 acres will be most thankful for the additional grant of 480 acres. That goes without saying.

But, Mr. Chairman, it can not escape my thought that some of these lands will fall into the hands of large stock raisers because there is no condition of tenure whatever placed upon those who take the additional amount and commute; as soon as he pays the $1.25 an acre he may, as soon as he gets the patent, sell to some large stock-raising concerns of whom we know so much by reputation, who have preempted the lands in great stock-raising estates in Montana and other Western States.

All through the bill runs the idea that you want to give additional land to the local person. As I view the question of the vacant public lands, I favor their retention for the benefit of those who have not to-day any public land. We all know that there are thousands living in the Middle West who wish to find some little spot where they may have land enough to call home. But this bill I hardly think will result in getting those people to go into the far West. It is said that the available public lands are of poor quality. I must confess that I do not know. And yet I have inquiries from constituents as to lands available to take up a home. If it were not for the fact that I believe that much of this land is suitable for a homestead under the present 320-acre law, I would be more inclined to support this bill very strongly. Every session bills are coming in here conferring additional grants to those who have already entered a homestead, and thereby taking away the land from those who are entitled by right to preempt it—those living in distant parts of the country, who have not availed themselves of that right. With the remaining public land, our policy should be to retain it for the benefit of those without a home, and there are many thousands who wish to locate on the public land, even though the best has already been taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MONDELL) there were—ayes 14, noes 16.

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to assure the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], now that his amendment is defeated, that under the decisions of the Interior Department for the last two or three years, decisions rendered time after time, no one who has made and perfected a homestead entry for any area, even as small as 40 acres, would be allowed to take a homestead under this language.

Mr. STAFFORD. But this is a new law.

Mr. MONDELL. The decisions that have been rendered are under the 320-acre enlarged homestead law containing identical language.

Mr. STAFFORD. Those decisions are not written into this law.

Mr. MONDELL. Unless the department changes its decisions there would be no question about it, and the word the gentleman proposes is one that never has been passed upon, and no one can know what it would be interpreted to mean, whereas the term used is one that has been used in the law for years.

Mr. STAFFORD. The word I did suggest is one with a clear meaning, whereas the language here has not a clear meaning.

Mr. MONDELL. The word "qualified" has been passed upon frequently since we had homestead laws. At one time under the decision of the Interior Department the words "qualified entryman" were held to embrace all otherwise qualified who had not perfected entry to a full 160 acres, but several years ago they were held to include only those who had never perfected an entry.

As to the suggestion of our friend from Wisconsin that we are proposing to open up a lot of land to homestead entries for the benefit of those in the States where the lands lie rather than for those who may come from other States, it is true that there are some sections of this bill which would give benefits to those already on the ground, but the general provisions of the bill will be utilized in nine cases out of ten by people who come from other States rather than the States in which the lands are located. Under the enlarged-homestead bill which we passed several years ago, and which has been very useful, I am of opinion that nine out of ten of the entries made in my State were made by men from States east of the Missouri River, certainly by those not residents of what are known commonly as the public-land States.

Mr. Chairman, it is about 30 years ago that Maj. Powell, then at the head of the Geological Survey, suggested what he thought should be the orderly evolution of the homestead theory. He suggested that in the course of time we would pass from the 160-acre homestead to a larger homestead, as the lands to be taken were poorer in character—less productive—and that finally we would pass to a homestead of 640 or 1,280 acres, or even larger, for the very poor and desert lands of the country.

The first day of the last Congress I introduced what I think was the first general grazing-homestead bill introduced in the House, providing for a homestead of from 640 to 1,280 acres. I am of opinion that it would have been better to have this latitude as to area in a homestead bill of this character rather than confine the entries to 640 acres or less. The Secretary of the Interior, in discussing the matter, suggested the thought that it would be at this time difficult for them to make such an examination of the public lands as would enable them to intelligently judge as to what lands might be properly entered in 640-acre areas, and what lands might be properly entered in larger areas, expressing the opinion held by all who are familiar with the situation, however, that as to some of our lands we will probably go to a still larger homestead entry some time in the future. We passed the enlarged homestead bill, which I had the honor to introduce and report to the House as the first step in the evolution from the 160-acre homestead. In passing that bill we adhered to the farm-homestead idea, to the idea that the homesteader should be a farmer, and our thought was to make it possible to farm on the semiarid lands where farming is carried on under what are known as dry-farming methods. Under that law requiring specific and definite areas of cultivation, and the first homestead law to so require, we have settled very large areas in the West which otherwise would be and which, up to the time of their settlement, were retained in the possession of the great flocks and herds run under grange conditions. I said that was the first step in the evolution. I had forgotten for the time being the step taken some years ago which has been referred to here, applying the grazing-homestead idea to western Nebraska.

We had, as the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID] has stated, a considerable discussion, and there was in Nebraska and elsewhere a long controversy as to what we should do. It was finally determined to try the grazing-homestead idea in western Nebraska. We were able to pass a law and to apply it to a certain definite territory, because in that particular territory there was neither timber nor mineral, and very little land left that was fit for cultivation. It was an area where the remaining public lands were practically all of them available or useful for grazing purposes only, and incidentally for a certain class of tillage for forage crops. The law has worked splendidly, even better than we hoped it would at the time we passed it. Some have suggested that under this 640-acre law, generally applied under the terms of this bill, there may be and there is danger of the gradual bringing together of these areas in very large ownerships. I think there is little danger of that in a harmful way. It is true that as you reach the lands that have a very small productive capacity—and undoubtedly some lands of that character will be taken under this law—there will be a tendency to the consolidation of those entries, and it is possible that in some localities where this law is utilized we shall finally reach a situation where instead of the economic conditions bringing about an average ownership of about 500 acres, as in western Nebraska, we may have an average ownership of considerable more and ownerships in some instances of as high as several thousand acres, but in my opinion as that tendency toward large areas in single ownerships will not go on to any great extent on lands that have any considerable productive capacity. It is common experience that the small stockman can in many cases make better use of these lands than the large stockman. Therefore the tendency is not toward very large areas, but to the reasonable areas used as a home, cared for in such a way as to produce the very largest return. There will, of course, be some localities where the best economy will be found in the consolidation of considerable areas in a single ownership or control.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. MCCRACKEN].

Mr. MCCRACKEN. Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with the purpose of this bill. As the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] stated awhile ago, the purpose of this bill is to increase the number of live stock in this country, but I doubt very much if it will serve that purpose in my State. I am inclined to think it will have the opposite effect in many localities, for it will afford an opportunity to some entrymen to make an entry of large tracts of land without any intention of cultivating or improving it, but who merely intend to obstruct the free use of the open range by stockmen. I have known some instances where men have made homestead entries on lands that were adapted for no other purpose than grazing and who would take the first opportunity to exact tribute from the first flockmasters who came along before he would permit stock to be driven over his land to the summer ranges. Even under the enlarged-homestead act entrymen have been known to deliberately enter lands with but one purpose in view, and that was to fix an arbitrary price for the little grazing privilege which his entry might afford. I do not intend to convey the idea that the enlarged-homestead act has not helped our State, for the fact is that thousands of entrymen have in good faith availed themselves of the privilege which that act affords, and they have increased the wheat yield in Idaho enormously. The little town of American Falls, in the southeastern part of Idaho, has become the second largest primary wheat-shipping point in the world. Rexburg, another town in southeastern Idaho, ranks close this year to American Falls as a wheat-shipping point. For miles around these two towns the farmers are successfully engaged in dry farming, and the larger number of them have made their entries under the enlarged-homestead act. If these people could be served by this act, I should be much in favor of it, but I do not see how it can be of advantage to any large number of people in the arid portion of the State of Idaho; but I can see where the act can be employed to harass and annoy both large and small live-stock owners who are trying to carry on their business in a legitimate way.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCRACKEN. I will.

Mr. NORTON. Why can not these men do the same kind of thing under the 320-acre enlarged-homestead act?

Mr. McCRACKEN. It has been done in some localities.

Mr. NORTON. This will not change conditions, then?

Mr. McCRACKEN. I think the act now proposed will give a larger advantage to the man who does not make his entry in good faith; I am sure it will.

Mr. GANDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCRACKEN. Yes.

Mr. GANDY. Did I understand the gentleman to say that a 320-acre entry was sufficient for his State; that a man can make a living on that land?

Mr. McCRACKEN. Yes; I believe that in most cases 320 acres of land suitable for agricultural purposes will afford the entryman an opportunity to make a living.

Mr. GANDY. If that is true, this will not hurt you a bit, because the 320-acre entry will continue, and a man will only take up those tracts of land where he must necessarily have 640 acres on which to support a family.

Mr. McCRACKEN. The bill proposes to allow the Secretary of the Interior to determine whether or not a given tract of land is sufficient to support a family. I doubt if there is anyone in the office of the Secretary who will be able to promulgate rules and regulations which will make this bill operative and which will distinguish the bona fide entrymen from the man who desires to acquire large tracts of the public domain in order that he might get control of a vast area of grazing land.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCRACKEN. I will.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. How many sheep are there in the State of Idaho?

Mr. McCRACKEN. I am unable to give the gentleman the number as shown by the assessment rolls of 1915, but I am informed that the value of the flocks in Idaho represent nearly $15,000,000.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. In my State they represent as much as 50 per cent of the money taken in, and we have the same trouble there. I am a sheep and cattle man both——

Mr. McCRACKEN. I want to say this, gentlemen, that I have been told by small owners of sheep and other live stock that if this bill becomes a law it will in large part destroy the live-stock industry in my State. Now, I do not think you want to do that, and certainly I do not want to do it. I am not the owner of any kind of live stock, but I want to plead for that which I think is for the best interest of the honest stock owner, who is obliged by the very nature of his business to range his stock upon the public domain during the grazing season.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD certain portions of an address delivered by the president of the Wool Growers' Association which relate to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Mr. Chairman, in connection with this discussion, I will say that at a recent meeting of the Wool Growers' Association, which was held last December in Boise City, the president of that organization, in his annual address, spoke in part as follows:

> The range situation is steadily growing worse from the viewpoint of the woolgrower. Every plan for the disposal of the public lands is an increased area for the settler, whether he can make use of the same or not; a grazing homestead of 640 acres is now the proposal advanced by Congress. This bill passed the House of Representatives during the last session, but failed in the Senate by reason of the adjournment of that body. There is no question but that such a bill will be again introduced. Should it pass, it will mean the end of the range business as we now know it. With the 2-mile limit law in the statute books, the priority-rights case decided against our industry, and the privilege of entering on 640 acres of land extended to all and sundry without any residence requirements or any proof to show they can put such an area to beneficial use, we can readily see our finish.
> But this is essentially a grazing country, and such land will eventually revert to be used for grazing purposes, but it will be in the hands of large corporations, who, owning the land, will enjoy privileges undreamed of by the woolgrower of to-day.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS].

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I am in accord with the purpose of this bill, but I do not believe it will have the tendency to increase cattle raising in this country. On the contrary, I think the tendency would be to restrict the raising of cattle. I am thoroughly familiar with the territory comprised in the Kinkaid Act, and I know of my own knowledge that previous to the enactment of that act many more cattle were raised upon the territory comprehended therein than have been raised since.

I notice in the report of the Secretary of the Interior, which is before this body, that in stating the increase in cattle he places it in value instead of number.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. REAVIS. I do.

Mr. RAKER. Has the gentleman looked over the statistics in regard to the increase in the number of cattle in Nebraska and in the Western States for the last 10 years as population advanced and as the land has been built up?

Mr. REAVIS. I have not; but I take it for granted, from observation, that the production of cattle upon the range in the West, and especially in western Nebraska, is less to-day than it was 10 years ago.

I argue from the report of the Secretary of the Interior which accompanies this bill, that when he states the increase in volume of the potatoes produced, the increase in acreage of rye, oats, corn, and wheat, on the territory comprehended in the Kinkaid bill, when he further states the increase in the number of horses and the number of hogs, and states only the increase in the value of cattle without stating whether there was an increase in number, that there has been a reduction in the number of cattle, otherwise his report would not have been restricted to value alone. It has been the observation of every man within the sound of my voice that live stock, cattle especially, to-day and in 1914 are worth approximately double what they were in 1904, and the increase in value of the cattle upon the territory comprehended in the Kinkaid Act, from $3,176,000 in 1904 to $4,267,000 in 1914, would argue a decrease in the number of cattle rather than an increase. When this vast territory is divided up into farms of a section each it is no longer devoted exclusively to the raising of cattle as it is when the whole range is open to the great cattle firms. This is shown——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Nebraska yield to the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. REAVIS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Would it have been possible for the Secretary of the Interior to have told anything about cattle from the taxation books of those counties? What proportion of those cattle that ranged that country at the time you speak of would have shown on the tax rolls of the counties which they range?

Mr. REAVIS. I have no means of knowing, Mr. Chairman, but he had sufficient information to enable him to show the number of horses that ranged on that territory, and the value of the cattle within its limits.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not better to raise one steer that is worth $100 than to raise three long-horned Texas cattle worth only $33.50 each?

Mr. REAVIS. The steer that you raise to-day was worth only $33.25 in 1904. But the reason for the decrease in the number of cattle is that the section taken up by the individual farmer is no longer devoted entirely to cattle raising. In the territory comprehended in the Kinkaid Act I find from 1904 to 1914 the increase in the production of potatoes in that territory was 3,719 per cent.

The increase in the acreage of rye was 92 per cent. The increase in the acreage of oats was 80 per cent, and I might follow the list on down. And the reason, Mr. Chairman, that the cattle produced in that territory, divided as this bill provides, are less in number than formerly, is that the acreage no longer is devoted exclusively to cattle raising, but is now devoted in part to the raising of grain. And yet I favor this bill, because I believe any bill that will offer a home to satisfy the land hunger of the homeless, that will permit individuals to make homes as they have made them in the district of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID], is a good bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Would the gentleman like one or two minutes more?

Mr. REAVIS. I would.

Mr. FERRIS. I yield to the gentleman a couple of minutes.

Mr. REAVIS. I can remember the day, 15 years ago, when I traveled over the territory that was comprehended by the Kinkaid bill, and it was as bleak and as barren a waste as one would ever expect to see in this Nation of ours. You may go to that same locality to-day—opened up to settlement by an act that granted to the settler a section of land; that granted to him sufficient territory to support his family, to rear his children in comparative comfort—and you will see a schoolhouse on nearly every hillside and a church in approximately every valley.

The only reason, Mr. Chairman, that they were constructed there is that this Government enlarged the homestead to an extent sufficient to permit those people to support their families in that locality. And this act will have the same effect. It will open up homes to many to-day who have no homes. I am in favor of it for that reason, but I insist upon the proposition that if you are expecting this act to increase the number of feeder cattle in America you are going to be disappointed in its purpose. It will not do so. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, on application or otherwise, to designate as stock-raising lands subject to entry under this act lands the surface of which is, in his opinion, chiefly valuable for grazing and raising forage crops, do not contain merchantable timber, are not susceptible of irrigation from any known source of water supply, and are of such character that 640 acres are reasonably required for the support of a family: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall not designate for entry under this act land of which, owing to its general character or general conditions, in his opinion, 640 acres clearly will not support a family.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Page 2, line 7, strike out the following proviso: "Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall not designate for entry under this act land of which, owing to its general character or general conditions, in his opinion, 640 acres clearly will not support a family," and insert the following: "Provided, That where any person qualified to make entry under the provisions of this act shall make application to enter any unappropriated public land which has not been designated as subject to entry (provided said application is accompanied and supported by properly corroborated affidavit of the applicant, in duplicate, showing prima facie that the land applied for is of the character contemplated by this act), such application, together with the regular fees and commissions, shall be received by the register and receiver of the land district in which said land is located and suspended until it shall have been determined by the Secretary of the Interior whether said land is actually of that character. That during such suspension the land described in the application shall not be disposed of; and if the said land shall be designated under this act, then such application shall be allowed; otherwise it shall be rejected, subject to appeal. The provisions of this section shall also apply to the application of a qualified entryman to make additional entry of unappropriated public land, the area of which, together with his original entry, shall not exceed 640 acres."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, if I may have the attention of the chairman of the committee, this should not be treated as a motion to strike out and insert; but it has two separate purposes—a motion to strike out, and then a separate amendment to insert. Am I correct in that?

Mr. FERRIS. I think the gentleman is right about that.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to address myself first to the amendment proposing to strike out the original proviso as found in the bill, as follows:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall not designate for entry under this act land of which, owing to its general character or general conditions, in his opinion, 640 acres clearly will not support a family.

Before speaking of that, my colleague on the committee, Mr. KENT, of California, requested me to say that, with this language stricken out of the bill, if present he would vote against the bill. He is absent on account of illness to-day.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with reference to this proviso that the committee seeks to have stricken out of the bill, I recognize, of course, that upon its face it would place the discretion of the Secretary within very narrow limits, requiring him upon the one hand to designate land which, in his opinion, 640 acres was sufficient to support a family, and upon the other side requiring him to exclude from such designation land which, in his opinion, 640 acres clearly would not support a family.

But, Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is to afford homes for those who desire them. It ought not to be the purpose of anybody—and if it is the purpose of anybody it ought to be prevented, if possible—that any provision of this bill or of any other enlarged-homestead law should be used for purposes of speculation or a hold-up for anybody.

Now, I believe that the Secretary should make express designations of lands that should be subject to entry under this enlarged-homestead law. But, Mr. Chairman, lands—of which there are millions of acres in the West—that can not possibly support a family in tracts of 640 acres ought not to be subject to entry under this law, because, in the first place, the man who does enter is sure to fail. After he has made his improvements and after he has spent his time and his money he will sell out to a stockman for a song, and he would be glad to get the song in that case.

In addition to that the gentleman from Idaho, who addressed the committee a few moments ago, has informed me that the State of Idaho has upon its statute books a law providing that a sheep herder shall not drive his sheep within 2 miles of a homestead. Am I correct in that?

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. What does that mean? That means if a man goes out here on this public land, 640 acres of which can not support a family, he will be compelled to abandon it sooner or later and sell out to a stockman, and in the meantime the land within 2 miles of the homestead that he has made can not be used for any purpose by a sheep raiser or otherwise.

Mr. Chairman, it ought to be sufficient in extending the liberality of this Government in a 640-acre homestead law first to exhaust the designations made by the Secretary of the Interior. It is not advisable on any account to allow railroad companies having lines out there to advertise all over the country that there are millions of acres of land open to entry, and have people go out and find that by no possibility the entryman can support himself or his family upon it; and for that reason I believe that provision should be retained in the bill, so that the Secretary, in making his designations, will not guarantee the support of a family, but will give some encouragement at least that the lands under this new law will afford some hope to the entryman that he will be able to make it succeed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] in what he has just stated. There are very considerable areas in the State which I have the honor to represent in this House, and I know that there are very considerable areas in a number of other States, where it would be utterly impossible for anyone to support a family upon 640 acres of land. It was for that reason that in the bill which I introduced I proposed a larger homestead for lands of that character. But the committee has seen fit to confine its bill to a 640-acre homestead, and I think perhaps, under all the circumstances and conditions, wisely. But in so doing I think the Secretary should be confined definitely in his designations to lands to which this bill will properly and reasonably apply.

In the first place, the Secretary should not designate lands which may be advantageously utilized under the 320-acre homestead law. There are still considerable areas of lands of that character elsewhere, and lands should be cultivated where they may be advantageously. We want lands farmed wherever they may be profitably farmed. This law, which does not require cultivation, should apply only to lands where cultivation is not ordinarily profitable or possible. It should not, however, offer temptation to men to go onto desert winter ranges and by taking up homesteads here and there very largely reduce the value of those lands for range purposes. There might be a case here and there where that would be done in perfect good faith, here and there a case where a home would be established and where the intent of the law would be fulfilled. But there would be many more cases where the homesteader would not benefit and where the benefit to the public generally for the use of the land for range purposes would be very largely reduced. I think the provision is a wise one and should remain in the bill. Under the terms of this bill the agents of the Secretary of the Interior must make careful examination before designation, for that designation, unlike that provided under the enlarged homestead law, is final and conclusive in bringing these lands within the purview of the act.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of 10 minutes the debate close on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that at the expiration of 10 minutes debate close on this amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands on question. Does the chairman maintain that the provision in the beginning of line 7, page 2, of the bill, which is stricken out there, is inconsistent in any way with the provision in italics? Does he maintain that the two provisions are inconsistent?

Mr. FERRIS. No. They are entirely different matters. They are not the same thing at all.

Mr. NORTON. Those two things could be permitted to remain in the bill without inconsistency?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; but I really think they ought not to be.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope I am not responsible in any way whatever for this committee amendment striking out the language which it is proposed shall be stricken out, although last year I remember, when the bill was up, I poked considerable fun at the committee and at the bill on account of the two provisions in the bill which, if literally construed, would prevent any land from being designated. I see now that they have separated the two propositions. I thought they were to be treated as one amendment. I prefer myself to keep in the bill the language that is proposed to be stricken out, and to keep out of the bill the language that is proposed to be inserted. I do not see any reason, under the second amendment as it is now separated, why anybody should be allowed to go on to these lands until they are designated.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman will recall that some years ago we passed the 320-acre amendment?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. Then the gentleman will also recall, I know, because he keeps up with things, that on March 4, 1915—last spring—we passed a provision making this same thing applicable to the 320-acre homesteads.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. And we are only putting it in here to make this bill in conformity with the law as to the 320 acres. That is the object.

Mr. MANN. I understand, but I do not believe in it at all.

Mr. FERRIS. Of course, this language stricken out is another matter altogether.

Mr. MANN. I appreciate that fact. The tendency will be for people to go on these lands where they hope there will be a designation. If the land shall not be subsequently designated, then it is a great injustice to the man who has taken the chance on it. If the land shall thereafter be designated, it is a great injustice to those who have not taken the chance on it, who would have taken the chance if the land had been designated. I do not believe in giving a preference where a preference is not required.

I have no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that legislation of this sort will be enacted, and possibly it ought to be, though I do not question at all that sooner or later it will be found that most of this land will be consolidated in large holdings. A man can not make a living by raising stock on 640 acres of land which is not tillable. No man can make a living by grazing stock on 640 acres where he can not raise anything else. You can try it if you want to, but you can not succeed in doing that, because it is contrary to nature, and the result will be that when men try to make a living by raising stock on 640 acres which may raise a little grazing grass but will not raise anything else, they will lose their efforts, their time, some little money, and will sell out to some one who will graze on large tracts of land; and in the end it will pass out of the hands of the Government and go into the hands either of large corporations or individual large holders, where it will be profitable to graze stock upon thousands of acres combined.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, before lands can be designated at all under this act, the department must first find that it is chiefly valuable for grazing and the raising of forage crops, such as silo corn, broom corn, kafir corn, fodder, and so forth. They must next find that the land does not contain any merchantable timber. They must next find that it is not susceptible of irrigation from any known source of supply, and they must then find that 640 acres of land of this character is reasonably necessary to support a family.

Now, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]—whom I pause at this moment to say is one of the most clear-headed and helpful Members that ever served on any committee or in any House at any time, and to whom I am indebted now and every day for great services rendered me—would further provide that the Secretary of the Interior shall designate for entry under this act land which, owing to its general character or general condition in his opinion, 640 acres will clearly be needed to support a family.

Now, that forces the Federal Government to do a thing that it can not do. That forces the Federal Government to be an insurer of the thrift, ability, earnestness, and intelligence of men, a thing that no Government and no person can do. Two men enter homesteads side by side. One man is plucky, gingery, determined, industrious, thrifty, and faithful. Another man takes up a homestead on the adjoining section under precisely similar school conditions, water conditions, and soil conditions, everything being identical. Still one fails and the other succeeds. I am afraid if this amendment is agreed to, it will make the Government an insurer that both men will achieve the same result. A thing, in my opinion, totally wanting in practicability and feasibility.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that in the Reclamation Service they are determining the quantity that will be sufficient to support a family in making their allotments?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is entirely correct, but in reclamation work the area is small. They have to journey over only a small area, and they can tell from the water conditions and the quality of the water and the quality of the soil more nearly what can be done. But in journeying all over creation, in that wild, unsettled, and barren waste of land which they have out there, I think it would be impossible to do what the gentleman hopes.

Mr. LENROOT. If 1,000,000 acres or 10,000,000 acres are designated under this amendment, does the gentleman think it more likely that the land so designated will offer a better hope to the man who enters upon it than if all the land is thrown open to entry?

Mr. FERRIS. As a westerner who has gone through the thick and the thin, the fat and the lean, of building up a new country, I do not believe in it. I believe the moment the Government says, "This 640 acres will support a family," every real-estate grafter in that community or that State will seize the opportunity to bamboozle the public and will use the Federal Government as a catspaw to accomplish that purpose. I fear that is what will happen.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, if ten times as much is opened to entry, as will be opened with this amendment stricken out of the bill, does it not offer just tenfold opportunity to the real-estate grafters?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think so, although I do not want to be tenacious about it. This bill was sent to the department, as it is proper that all such bills should be sent there, to get the opinion of the department upon it. Our committee has been criticized good-naturedly and not good-naturedly for having the department draft these bills. That is true. We call in the Geological Survey, the Bureau of Mines, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office and we get their opinion. We need their help. We appreciate their help and will continue to seek their help. Let us see what the Interior Department think of this. I quote from a letter written December 15, 1915, by First Assistant Secretary Jones, of the Interior Department:

> As suggested in my report of April 24, 1914, it is believed that it would be advisable to omit the proviso to section 2—

That is the proviso under consideration—

> found in lines 6 to 10, page 2 of the bill, thus leaving to the settler the responsibility of determining whether or not a specific 640 acres of land, designated under this act, would be sufficient for his purposes. Such has been the law and practice under the original and enlarged homestead acts, as well as the act of April 28, 1904, hereinbefore described. If, however, the committee believes some limitation to be essential, the proviso as it now stands is as far as the limitation should proceed.

I really hope that the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman means that he hopes the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. Well, leave it out of the bill. I was technically stating it wrong, but I think the House understands it. To make it clear, I want the committee's action to stand.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on striking out the proviso.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. LENROOT and Mr. MONDELL) there were 38 ayes and 6 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the committee amendment, as follows:

At the end of section 2 insert the following:

"Provided, That where any person qualified to make entry under the provisions of this act shall make application to enter any unappropriated public land which has not been designated as subject to entry (provided said application is accompanied and supported by properly corroborated affidavit of the applicant, in duplicate, showing prima facie that the land applied for is of the character contemplated by this act), such application, together with the regular fees and commissions, shall be received by the register and receiver of the land district in which said land is located and suspended until it shall have been determined by the Secretary of the Interior whether said land is actually of that character. That during such suspension the land described in the application shall not be disposed of; and if the said land shall be designated under this act, then such application shall be allowed; otherwise it shall be rejected, subject to appeal. The provisions of this section shall also apply to the application of a qualified entryman to make additional entry of unappropriated public land, the area of which, together with his original entry, shall not exceed 640 acres."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 2, after the word "appeal," strike out the remainder of the section.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, the language proposed to be stricken out by the amendment reads as follows:

The provisions of this section shall also apply to the application of a qualified entryman to make additional entry of unappropriated public land, the area of which, together with his original entry, shall not exceed 640 acres.

As that language now stands it is open to the construction that it is the purpose of the bill to grant to anyone who has made a former homestead entry the right to make an entry under this act to an amount of land, together with the original entry, that would make 640 acres. That was not the purpose of the committee in this amendment, the purpose being only to provide for a preference right to have designation made for those who shall be entitled to make an additional entry.

If this amendment is adopted, I will offer another making it clear that the right of preference shall be given to the original entryman, the one to be entitled under the bill to make additional entries.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, if this language was subject to the interpretation which the gentleman from Wisconsin places upon it, I should be opposed to having it stricken out, but I do not think it is subject to that interpretation. It is as a matter of fact an altogether ineffective proposition as it stands, and therefore should go out. Under the decisions of the Land Office for a number of years no one is a qualified homestead entryman under a provision such as this bill contains who has perfected a homestead entry of any size, and up to this time in this bill we have made no provision which would in any way tend to modify the ruling of the department. Therefore, a provision at this point to the effect that the application of a qualified entryman shall be received to make an additional entry would be of no effect, because under the rulings of the department anyone who has heretofore made an entry is not a qualified entryman.

Mr. BORLAND. Would it not accomplish the purpose if the word "qualified," in line 3, was stricken out?

Mr. MONDELL. It would. I am in favor of having such a provision and I intended to offer an amendment later.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman is in favor of a man who has taken a homestead in a public-land State of less than 640 acres being permitted to take the balance up to 640 acres under this law?

Mr. MONDELL. I am very much in favor of it.

Mr. BORLAND. Would not that be accomplished by striking out the word "qualified"?

Mr. MONDELL. It would be an indirect way, but not a very certain way of accomplishing it. I think it ought to be accomplished directly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It seems to me that if the gentleman considers the other amendment which is to be offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin it would obviate any objection he may have.

Mr. MONDELL. I have no objection. I think the language proposed to be stricken out would not be operative either to accomplish what was intended or what I would like to have accomplished, therefore I think it ought to go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 12, after the word "make," insert the words "original or additional," so that the line will read:

"Provided, That where any person qualified to make original or additional entry under the provisions of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I had supposed that somebody would, and perhaps somebody has, given us a statement about the amount of land entered as homestead in the last few years. I used very often to hear on the floor of the House a statement from gentlemen, sometimes from the West, complaining that all the land that people could cultivate was taken up, and that there was nothing left except land that you had to give away in large quantities in order to get people on it. I have not examined this year the report for last year showing the amount of land patented or entered as homestead.

Mr. LENROOT. I can give the gentleman the figures.

Mr. MANN. For a great many years I have noticed that notwithstanding the statements made to us every year that all of the good lands are gone each year there was more land entered under homestead entries than had been the year before, and since I have been a Member of the House I think more land has been taken under the homestead entry than had been taken altogether in the history of the Government prior to that time, and I am not sure but that in the last 10 years of my service in the House that statement would be true if limited to the 10-year period. I now yield to the gentleman to give me the figures.

Mr. LENROOT. Last year there were 37,343 homestead entries, covering an acreage of 7,180,981.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, that is a good deal more than was taken under homestead entries the first year, or the first years, that I came here. How much of that is taken under the 320-acre law I do not know, but all of the land which can be cultivated and support a family, with a reasonable acreage, is not yet gone, any more than have all of the fish yet been taken out of the sea. We are sometimes led to believe that there is no more good land left. Mr. Chairman, as a rule, there never was any good land left. When the people settled in the State of Illinois, even when I was a boy, long after a good many people had settled there, it was said the land was not worth anything. Most of the people thought that you could not raise much crop upon it; and they thought right, for you could not at that time, but they have made it over since. They were not troubled, as a rule, in my part of the country by any lack of water, I will say to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think something ought to be said at some point during the consideration of this bill along the lines of the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. It has been made to appear whenever this question is brought up that there is no available land left for homestead entry under present laws. I hold in my hand the last report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and on page 67 of that report he gives the number of homestead entries made and the acreage year by year since the homestead law was passed in 1868. I will put into the RECORD merely the 10-year periods, so that we may see whether or not, so far as we can gather from entries being made, there is any necessity for the passage of this bill at all. In 1870 there were 4,041 entries, covering 519,727 acres. In 1880 the number increased to 15,441, covering 1,938,234 acres. In 1890 the number of entrymen increased to 28,080, and the acreage to 4,060,592. In 1900 there were 25,286 entrymen and 3,477,842 acres taken. In 1910 the number was 23,253 and the acreage 3,795,862, while in 1915, the figures I gave a moment ago, there were 37,343 entrymen with an acreage of 7,180,981.

So, Mr. Chairman, it does not appear from these statistics that there is any dearth of lands or entrymen as yet calling for the passage of this bill, at least to the extent of saying that there is no land left open for entry under the 320-acre homestead law and that they must be given 640. In the last three years there have been more homestead entries made and allowed by the Land Office and more acres have gone into private ownership under the homestead laws than there were in any five-year period since the homestead law was passed. That merely furnishes a reason why the provisions of this bill ought to be scrutinized pretty carefully and why we ought not to act upon the assumption that we have to indulge in the utmost liberality in order to secure homestead entries upon what is left of the public domain.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Since I have been a Member of this House I have frequently heard the assertion made that western Members are continually saying that all of the public lands are taken up that are suitable for homestead entry under existing laws. I have been a Member for five years, and I have never heard any western Member make any assertion of that kind. It has not been made since I have been a Member of the House.

I have heard frequently the western Members say that the good land, that which was irrigable and arable, in a large section of the country was taken up, and that is the fact. I will admit all that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has just said. But that does not prove anything, because he does not tell in what localities that land was taken nor in what sections of the country. There are yet large areas of public land that can be taken under existing law. There are a few States that practically have all that land, and there are other States that have thousands and hundreds of thousands of acres such as is covered by this homestead bill that is before the House to-day.

Now, in my own State we are not so greatly interested in this measure, although we have on river bluffs and in certain localities a lot of this character of land; but I do know from my knowledge of the West that there are in some States thousands of acres, hundreds of thousands of acres, and millions of acres of this kind of land that will make homes for people in time, and that will enable large areas that are now of no benefit to anybody, except a few nomadic stockmen, to come on the tax rolls and becoming taxpaying property and also add to the population of those States. I do not understand that this land is of a character that there can not be an acre of it farmed. I do not think that anyone contemplates that there could not be any of it farmed, but it must be chiefly valuable for stock raising and not for the raising of crops to enable a man to make a living for his family. I think the bill is a wise one. There may be in some cases mistakes made under the law. There has never yet been a homestead law but what there have been some mistakes made; but going on the principle of trying to benefit the greatest number of people, I think that this bill should pass, and that in time, as the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has said, we should enlarge the area. I am not one of those who believe that the nomadic stockman, the man who is getting the benefit of public property for nothing and who has had it that way for 30 or 40 years, should be continued in that privilege in perpetuity or during the rest of the existence of the United States.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the gentleman from Michigan moves to strike out the last word.

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I am going to offer a substantial amendment. Some of us agree here that we might not know much about different characters of land, but we wondered a little about the language in the first sentence of this paragraph.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. What page?

Mr. MAPES. Page 2, section 2. Section 2 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to designate certain lands, "the surface of which is chiefly valuable for grazing and raising forage crops," and then continues "do not contain merchantable timber," and so forth. What is the subject of "do not contain"?

Mr. FERRIS. "Lands" is the subject.

Mr. MAPES. "Lands" is in the objective case, the object of "to designate."

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. "Lands" is the subject.

Mr. MAPES. Then the words "and which" should be inserted after the word "crops" in line 3, page 2.

Mr. MANN. "Which" is there.

Mr. MAPES. But it refers to the word "surface."

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. MAPES. "The surface of which is." If that is the subject, then the verb should be in the singular, "does contain."

Mr. FERRIS. I think we are all right.

Mr. MAPES. I do not know which the committee desired to have the subject. If I can find out, I will offer an amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I always hesitate to get into any argument in reference to grammar, and I do so with a great deal of trepidation now. My opinion is that "land" is the subject, and "surface" there relates back to land.

Mr. MAPES. "Lands" is in the objective case, the object of "to designate."

Mr. BORLAND. It is an objective phrase. If the gentleman will yield, it is an objective sentence, an objective phrase, as it is sometimes called.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert, in line 3, on page 2, after the word "crops," the words "and which," so that the sentence will read: "That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to designate lands the surface of which is valuable and which do not contain," and so forth. Some such amendment is necessary in order to make the sentence read correctly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "crops," insert the words "and which."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we close debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto. Of course, I mean after we vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that debate close on this paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. MONDELL. What is the gentleman's request? I have an amendment pending which I wish to discuss.

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman wish five minutes?

Mr. MONDELL. I think there may be some discussion on it. It is an entirely new division.

Mr. MANN. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] that we would not like to enter upon a long discussion to-night, and I think, under the circumstances, there may be something in the House to be taken care of.

Mr. FERRIS. Let us get rid of this section.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Let me suggest——

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to close debate on this amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MONDELL. What is the request?

Mr. FERRIS. On this amendment only.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FERRIS. Can not we adopt this section?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division on the amendment that I offered.

Mr. MONDELL. I have an amendment to that section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] asks for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 28.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the subject discussed to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on this bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. BORLAND having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. COX, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 407) to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be included in the same request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to address the House on Friday immediately after the reading of the Journal, unless it should interfere with the business in hand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman withhold his request for a moment for the gentlemen who are asking to extend remarks on the pending bill? Are there any more requests from gentlemen to extend their remarks on the pending bill?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to address the House for 40 minutes on Friday immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. FERRIS. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman does not desire to interfere with this or any other regularly reported bill?

Mr. BAILEY. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks, subject to the regular business of the House, that he be permitted to address the House on Friday next for 40 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, it is very convenient for a Member to make a request so that he knows the very minute when he is going to address the House. As a rule he is lucky if he knows within a week when he is going to do so. I am constantly asked by Members of the House on this side for time, and I have told them they would have to take chances on the general debate which is coming along on various bills. And unless there is special reason for it I will have to say the same thing to my friend from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object. I have no doubt that he can get in on Friday.

Mr. FERRIS. May I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he might get in on the road bill to-morrow?

Mr. MANN. Or on Wednesday, Thursday, or Friday, if he is on the job.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 320. An act to authorize the county of Bonner, Idaho, to construct a bridge across Pend Oreille River;

H. R. 775. An act granting the consent of Congress to J. P. Jones and others to construct one or more bridges across the Chattahoochee River between the counties of Coweta and Carroll, in the State of Georgia; and

H. R. 7611. An act authorizing the Seaboard Air Line Railway Co., a corporation, to construct and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across what is known as Back River, a part of the Savannah River, at a point between Jasper County, S. C., and Chatham County, Ga.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 1 minute p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday, January 18, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Labor, transmitting a detailed statement of the number of documents received and the number distributed by this department during the calendar year 1915 (H. Doc. No. 587); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Labor and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a detailed statement of receipts from rentals, extension of Capitol Grounds, for the period beginning January 20, 1915, and ending November 30, 1915 (S. Doc. No. 25); to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on reexamination of harbor of refuge at Portage Lake, Manistee County, Mich. (H. Doc. No. 588); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

4. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Wickford Harbor, R. I. (H. Doc. No. 589); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

5. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Hendricks Harbor, Me. (H. Doc. No. 590); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

6. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and plan and estimate of cost of improvement of Pagan River and Jones Creek, Va. (H. Doc. No. 591); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

7. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting a change in the estimates of this department on page 58 of the Annual Book of Estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, under the title "Salaries, office of assistant treasurer at Cincinnati, Ohio" (H. Doc. No. 592); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. KEATING, from the Committee on Labor, to which was referred the bill (H. Mr. CURRY, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 449) to provide for the appointment of 11 supervising inspectors, Steamboat-Inspection Service, in lieu of 10, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 47), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SMITH of Texas, from the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6057) to amend section 14 of the reclamation-extension act approved August 13, 1914, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 48), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. OGLESBY, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3042) to ratify, approve, and confirm sections 1, 2, and 3 of an act duly enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, relating to the board of harbor commissioners of the Territory, and amending the laws relating thereto, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 54), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7502) for the relief of Ellis P. Garton, administrator of the estate of H. B. Garton, deceased, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 49), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1584) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Louis Landram, administrator of William J. Landram, deceased, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 50), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. POU, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2180) for the relief of Albert Greenlaw, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 51), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2288) for the relief of Thomas R. Mason, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 52), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. CAPSTICK, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4587) for the relief of C. C. Graham, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 53), which said bill and report were laid on the table.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 18, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou hast enabled us out of various kindred peoples and tongues to erect a great empire dedicated to exact and equal justice and to the freedom of all. We bless Thee for the privileges of freedom. We come to Thee continually that we may be taught that higher liberty wherewith Thou dost make men free. Give to us the Divine inspiration that a conscience quickened by Divine wisdom may rightly decide all the issues of life. Give us the power by that spiritual appropriation that we may not be bound in the prison house of a merely sensuous intellect. God grant to lead us in the realm of the higher and eternal, that we may perform our functions not only as citizens of this state but of the higher kingdom. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SENATOR FROM IDAHO.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, my colleague, the Senator elect from Idaho, is in the Chamber and desires to take the oath of office.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho will present his colleague at the Vice President's desk that the oath may be administered to him.

Mr. BRADY was escorted to the Vice President's desk by Mr. BORAH, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to him.

SAN FRANCISCO WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, at yesterday's session of the Senate my colleague [Mr. PHELAN] had printed in the RECORD some matter relating to the Hetch Hetchy grant. I was very earnestly opposed to the grant at the time the bill was before the Senate, because, in my judgment, the city of San Francisco did not need the water and it was needed by the owners of land in San Joaquin Valley, as it would irrigate hundreds of thousands of acres, and also because it would impose upon the city of San Francisco an enormous unnecessary debt.

As the matter has again been brought before the Senate, I desire to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the San Francisco Chronicle bearing upon the whole matter.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the San Francisco Chronicle, Jan. 11, 1916.]

SPRING VALLEY AND HETCH HETCHY—THE MAYOR AGAIN FAILS TO GIVE A CLEAR STATEMENT OF POLICY.

In his annual address the mayor advocates the uninterrupted development of the Hetch Hetchy water source and also calls upon the railroad commission to appraise such parts of the Spring Valley system as we desire with the view of again submitting to the people a proposal for purchase.

What the mayor fails to do is to give such an analysis of the city's financial condition as will demonstrate our ability to finance both enterprises.

And such a failure is inexcusable. It is suggestive of blind going ahead in the hope of muddling through somehow, which is the direct road to bankruptcy in private business.

The Chronicle does not know and can not see how the city can finance both enterprises at once. The city and county attorney, when advocating the purchase of Spring Valley, declared the double financing to be impossible, and that the Hetch Hetchy water must be "left to the next generation." Nobody has ever suggested a way by which, under our debt limit, we could buy Spring Valley and develop Hetch Hetchy.

Therefore, if the mayor sees a way, it is his official duty to explain it to the people. He does not do so. The conclusion must therefore be that he can not, and that he has no intention of developing the Hetch Hetchy water supply, but agrees with the city and county attorney that if we buy Spring Valley the Hetch Hetchy supply must be left to the next generation.

That being apparently the inevitable conclusion, the assumption must be that the mayor's policy is to acquire the Spring Valley property and construct a power plant on the Tuolumne River.

We suppose, in fact, that to be the mayor's policy.

The question then arises by what right money voted for a water supply can be used to construct a power plant.

And, if it is held that the power-plant reservoir will be useful for the next generation as a source of water supply, the question still arises by what right, legal or moral, money voted to procure a water supply for those now living can be used to construct a power plant on the chance that posterity will desire to bring the impounded water to this city.

There is another aspect to the case. Assuming that money voted for a water supply can be used to build a power plant, that certainly ought not to be done unless the power plant when built will be profitable.

It can only be profitable by the use of the power generated, for the city is forbidden to sell current at a profit. It can not be profitable unless the cost of the power delivered is enough less than the price at which it can be bought to make the profit.

And if the saving is so large, it can and should be demonstrated. And whether it will be profitable or not, the people are entitled to have the figures. Why does not the mayor give them?

REPORT ON LITIGATION OVER WITHDRAWN OIL LANDS (H. DOC. NO. 593).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney General, transmitting a supplement to his annual report for the fiscal year 1915, embodying a report upon the litigation over withdrawn oil lands of the United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1773) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Kermit, W. Va., with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 403. An act granting to the State of Oklahoma permission to occupy a certain portion of the Fort Sill Military Reservation, Okla., and to maintain and operate thereon a fish hatchery;

H. R. 3636. An act to amend section 3646 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as reenacted and amended by act of February 23, 1909;

H. R. 4716. An act to authorize Dunklin County, Mo., and Clay County, Ark., to construct a bridge across St. Francis River;

H. R. 4954. An act directing the Secretary of War to reconvey a parcel of land to the Anshe Chesed Congregation, Vicksburg, Miss.; and

H. R. 6448. An act to authorize Butler and Dunklin Counties, Mo., to construct a bridge across St. Francis River.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MYERS. I present a petition signed by the commissioners of Polson, Mont., in favor of an appropriation of $1,000,000 for Flathead reclamation project in that State. The petition is short, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD with the signatures, there being only three of them, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

POLSON, MONT., January 1, 1916.

To the President and Congress of the United States:

We the undersigned commissioners of Polson, Mont., do most urgently request of Congress that they pass an appropriation of not less than $1,000,000 for work on the Flathead project for the ensuing year.

If this project is to be completed in an efficient, businesslike, and economical manner, it is necessary that the appropriations for construction work on the project be very materially increased.

It means much to the citizens and taxpayers of this city whether or not this project is to be completed within a reasonable length of time.

We trust you will give this matter the consideration it deserves and grant the very largest possible amount for this most worthy purpose.

Respectfully submitted.

J. W. CLARK, Mayor.
E. N. STOUGHTON, Councilman.
H. W. DOUGLAS, Councilman.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I present a telegram and ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Telegram.]

NEW YORK, N. Y.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Censorship of motion pictures is the most dangerous attack on American liberties since the foundation of the Republic. The motion picture is a process of recording thought on yellow parchment without the use of printer's ink, and is as great an advance on printings as Guttenberg's invention was over the quill pen. The printing press revolutionized the world by bringing knowledge within the reach of thousands. The motion picture brings knowledge within the reach of hundreds of millions. To strangle this great art in its infancy will be a crime against humanity. Free speech is the foundation of our Republic. There is no reason for censorship. The motion picture is now cleaner than the spoken drama or the press. The police powers of the State are already ample. Any citizen can close any theater within an hour if the laws of morality are violated. A censorship of opinion is the aim of our enemies. Our fathers fled the Old World to escape this and founded the Republic to free the human mind from such shackles. Shall we go back to the dark ages? I first preached the Clansman as a sermon. No censor dared to silence my pulpit. I turned my sermon into a lecture and delivered it from Maine to California without license. I turned the lecture into a novel, and no censor has yet stopped the press of Doubleday, Page & Co. I turned the novel into a spoken play, and no censor has dared to interfere. I turned the play into a motion picture, and it has cost me $75,000 in lawyers' fees to fight the local censors the first 10 months. This condition of affairs is infamous. It is the immediate duty of Congress to reaffirm the principles of free speech in America and abolish all censors.

THOMAS DIXON.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of sundry citizens of Grand Rapids, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CLAPP presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Minnesota, remonstrating against any alliance by the United States with European countries, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Minnesota, remonstrating against an increase in armaments, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the National Federation Implement and Vehicle Dealers' Associations, of Abilene, Kans., praying for the creation of a nonpartisan tariff commission, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Minnesota, praying for the enactment of legislation to relieve the congested condition of freight on the eastern seaboard, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Minnesota, praying for the imposition of a prohibitive tax on intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina presented memorials of sundry citizens of South Carolina, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. BRADY presented a petition of the Trades and Labor Council of Boise, Idaho, and a petition of the Socialist Party of Local View, Idaho, praying for the printing of the report of the Commission on Industrial Relations as a public document, which were referred to the Committee on Printing.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Homedale and Cambridge, in the State of Idaho, praying for the imposition of a prohibitive tax on intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the State Highway Commission of Idaho, praying for an appropriation for the construction of a highway from Ashton, Idaho, through Targhee National Forest to Yellowstone Park, Wyo., which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WADSWORTH presented a petition of the congregation of the Christ Congregational Church, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and a petition of sundry citizens of Albany, N. Y., praying for Federal censorship of motion pictures, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented petitions of the Bronx Co. and of Titus Blatter & Co., of New York City, N. Y., praying for the imposition of a duty on dyestuffs, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. THOMAS. I have a copy of a series of resolutions against war preparations, adopted by the Larimer County Farmers' Union, at Loveland, Colo., at a meeting held on December 3, 1915, and also against a large standing Army or any change in a military system tending to compulsory military service. I ask that the resolutions may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions against war preparations adopted by the Larimer County Farmers' Union at Loveland, Colo., at a meeting held on December 3, 1915.

Whereas the President of the United States has announced that the coming session of Congress will be asked to make greatly increased appropriations for the Army, the Navy, and the National Guard, and for other purposes, included in a program to prepare this Republic for war; and

Whereas more than 60 per cent of all Federal revenues are now used for war expenses, a burden that is already too heavy to be borne by producers without protest; and

Whereas the National Farmers' Union in convention at Lincoln, Nebr., representing the organized farmers of 31 States, adopted the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That we demand economy in all appropriations made by Congress and that we are especially opposed to any great increase in expenditures for the Army and Navy, but approve a reasonable outlay for coast defense by submarines or other weapons proved by recent experience to be effective for that purpose; and be it further

"Resolved, That we are unalterably opposed to a large standing Army and to any change in our military system tending to compulsory military service."

Therefore we, the members of the Larimer County Farmers' Union, in regular meeting, declare and order:

First. That we are opposed to the proposed plan for making appropriations amounting within the next five years to more than $2,000,000,000 for the Army and Navy and other war preparedness.

Second. That we reaffirm and indorse the resolutions of the National Farmers' Union against huge appropriations for war preparedness and particularly against a great standing Army and a change in our military system that we believe, if adopted, would ultimately result in universal compulsory military service.

Third. We demand that our Senators and Congressmen vote against the proposed program for military preparedness and use all their influence to prevent any such measure from being enacted into law.

Fourth. We indorse the position of our official organ, The National Field, in opposing unnecessary appropriations for war preparedness and Army and Navy increases.

Fifth. That copies of these resolutions bearing the signature of the president and attested by the secretary be sent to the Senators from Colorado and to our Representative in Congress from the second district, the Hon. CHARLES B. TIMBERLAKE, and to the local papers of this county for publication.

Sixth. We demand that the Congress redeem all pledges made to the farmers and proceed at once to enact a rural credit law, a law against gambling in produce, options on boards of trade, a law providing for national standards for grain grading and inspection, and a law creating a national bureau of markets, all of which were indorsed by the national convention of the Farmers' Union at Lincoln on September 8, 1915.

[SEAL.] LARIMER COUNTY FARMERS' UNION,
P. H. BOOTHROYD, President.
L. H. FAGAN, Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 136. A bill for the relief of Eva M. Bowman (Rept. No. 46); and

S. 137. A bill for the relief of Omer D. Lewis (Rept. No. 47).

Mr. KENYON, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 43) authorizing and directing the Department of Labor to make an inquiry into the cost of living in the District of Columbia and to report thereon to Congress as early as practicable, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 45) thereon.

Mr. NELSON. On yesterday the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] submitted an amendment to the bill (S. 3331) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce. Through inadvertence the amendment was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It should have gone to the Committee on Commerce. I move that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

FISCAL AFFAIRS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA (S. DOC. NO. 247).

Mr. FLETCHER. From the Committee on Printing, I report back favorably with an amendment the resolution submitted by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] on January 14, being Senate Resolution No. 68 to print the manuscript entitled "Report of the joint select committee appointed under the act of March 3, 1915," as a Senate document. There is considerable demand for it. The matter is in type, and these copies can be run off without any trouble. The committee propose to increase the number from 850 to 1,600 copies. I ask unanimous consent to have it considered at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was, in line 8, before the words "additional copies," to strike out "eight hundred and fifty" and insert "one thousand six hundred," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the report of the joint select committee appointed under the act approved March 3, 1915, to determine the fiscal relations between the United States and the District of Columbia (H. Doc. No. 495), together with the hearings held thereon, be printed, with accompanying illustrations, as a Senate document, and that 1,600 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE.

Mr. BORAH. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 60), creating a joint subcommittee from the membership of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce and the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to investigate the conditions relating to interstate and foreign commerce, and the necessity of further legislation relating thereto, and defining the powers and duties of such subcommittee, which was reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and is now on the calendar. I ask that the amendment be printed and lie on the table and that the joint resolution and amendment be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to lie on the table and be printed, and the joint resolution and amendment were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution creating a joint subcommittee from the membership of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce and the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to investigate the conditions relating to interstate and foreign commerce, and the necessity of further legislation relating thereto, and defining the powers and duties of such subcommittee.

Resolved, etc., That the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate and the Committee of the House of Representatives on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, through a joint subcommittee to consist of five Senators and five Representatives, who shall be selected by said committees, respectively, be, and they hereby are, appointed to investigate the subject of the Government control and regulation of interstate and foreign transportation, the efficiency of the existing system in protecting the rights of shippers and carriers and in promoting the public interest, the incorporation or control of the incorporation of carriers, and all proposed changes in the organization of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the act to regulate commerce, with authority to sit during the recess of Congress and with power to summon witnesses, to appoint necessary experts, clerks, and stenographers, and to do whatever is necessary for a full and comprehensive examination and study of the subject and report to Congress as expeditiously as may be; that the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as is necessary to carry out the purposes of this resolution and to pay the necessary expenses of the subcommittee and its members, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. Said appropriation shall be immediately available and shall be paid out on the audit and order of the chairman or acting chairman of said subcommittee, which audit and order shall be conclusive and binding upon all departments as to the correctness of the accounts of such subcommittee.

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. BORAH to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 60) creating a joint subcommittee from the membership of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce and the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to investigate the conditions relating to interstate and foreign commerce, and the necessity of further legislation relating thereto, and defining the powers and duties of such subcommittee.

On page 3, line 13, after the word commerce," insert the following: "also the subject of Government ownership of all public utilities, such as telegraph, telephone, express companies, and railroads engaged in interstate and foreign commerce, and report as to the wisdom or feasibility of Government ownership of such utilities and as to the comparative worth and efficiency of Government regulation and control as compared with Government ownership and regulation."

WILLIAM SCHULDT.

Mr. BRADY submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $101 to credit to the account of William Schuldt, of Lewiston, Idaho, for traveling expenses on official business, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

COST OF ARMOR PLATE AND ARMOR PLANT.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from South Carolina will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That 500 additional copies of House Document No. 193, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, entitled "Letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting report of the Board of Naval Officers appointed under the act of March 3, 1905, as to cost of armor plate and armor plant," be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

Mr. SMOOT. Has that report already been printed as a Senate document?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been printed as a House document.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have been told by the printing clerk of the Senate that it will cost about $125.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not a question of cost; the House which has ordered the printing of a document should also order its reprinting when necessary.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, however, happens to want this document, and the supply is exhausted in both document rooms.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs desires the document, they should have it. I am not saying that they should not; but, as I said, if the House in the first instance ordered the printing of the document, it thereby became a House document, and if an increased number is desired that increase should be ordered by the House which ordered it printed in the first instance.

Mr. PENROSE. I did not hear what the document was, and I ask the Senator from South Carolina to inform me.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is Niles's report on armor plate.

Mr. PENROSE. That document ought to be printed.

Mr. TILLMAN. I repeat, the supply of this document is exhausted in both document rooms.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina, however, that the chairman of the Committee on Printing can order $200 worth of printing without any action on the part of the Senate; and I suggest to him that he withdraw the resolution and request the chairman of the Committee on Printing to give the order to the Public Printer for the printing of 500 copies of the document for the use of the committee.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am willing that the Senator from Utah shall proceed in his own way, so that I get the document printed. That is all I want.

Mr. SMOOT. The way I suggest would be best.

Mr. TILLMAN. Under the assurance of the Senator from Utah that he will take care of the printing of the document, I withdraw the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution is withdrawn.

RIGHTS OF FOREIGN TRADE.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, for several days past the papers have had a good deal to say about the probable extension of the order of blockade by Great Britain, and the implication has been in these publications that by such an order some additional power would be given to the allies to restrict the trade of neutrals through neutral ports in neutral goods. In point of fact, there is nothing upon which to base such a claim. No such additional power would be given.

I hold in my hand a portion of the letter of the State Department to Great Britain of date March 30, 1915, which really covers this question. In discussing the orders of March 1 and March 11 the rights under a blockade to interfere with neutral trade to neutral ports in neutral goods by opposing belligerents is considered. I ask that this page and a half be printed in the RECORD, and in connection with doing so I will read just one paragraph from it:

It is confidently assumed that His Majesty's Government will not deny that it is a rule sanctioned by general practice that, even though a blockade should exist and the doctrine of contraband as to un-blockaded territory be rigidly enforced, innocent shipments may be freely transported to and from the United States through neutral countries to belligerent territory without being subject to the penalties of contraband traffic or breach of blockade, much less to detention, requisition, or confiscation.

I ask that this page and a half from this letter of the State Department be printed in the RECORD. I think just at this time it is very interesting.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Telegram.]

(The Secretary of State to Ambassador W. H. Page.)

No. 1343.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 30, 1915.

You are instructed to deliver the following to His Majesty's Government, in reply to your Nos. 1795 and 1798, of March 15:

The Government of the United States has given careful consideration to the subjects treated in the British notes of March 13 and March 15 and to the British order in council of the latter date.

These communications contain matters of grave importance to neutral nations. They appear to menace their rights of trade and intercourse, not only with belligerents but also with one another. They call for frank comment in order that misunderstandings may be avoided. The Government of the United States deems it its duty, therefore, speaking in the sincerest spirit of friendship, to make its own view and position with regard to them unmistakably clear.

The order in council of the 15th of March would constitute, were its provisions to be actually carried into effect as they stand, a practical assertion of unlimited belligerent rights over neutral commerce within the whole European area, and an almost unqualified denial of the sovereign rights of the nations now at peace.

This Government takes it for granted that there can be no question what those rights are. A nation's sovereignty over its own ships and citizens under its own flag on the high seas in time of peace is, of course, unlimited; and that sovereignty suffers no diminution in time of war, except in so far as the practice and consent of civilized nations has limited it by the recognition of certain now clearly determined rights, which it is conceded may be exercised by nations which are at war.

A belligerent nation has been conceded the right of visit and search, and the right of capture and condemnation, if upon examination a neutral vessel is found to be engaged in unneutral service or to be carrying contraband of war intended for the enemy's government or armed forces. It has been conceded the right to establish and maintain a blockade of an enemy's ports and coasts and to capture and condemn any vessel taken in trying to break the blockade. It is even conceded the right to detain and take to its own ports for judicial examination all vessels which it suspects for substantial reasons to be engaged in unneutral or contraband service and to condemn them if the suspicion is sustained. But such rights, long clearly defined both in doctrine and practice, have hitherto been held to be the only permissible exceptions to the principle of universal equality of sovereignty on the high seas as between belligerents and nations not engaged in war.

It is confidently assumed that His Majesty's Government will not deny that it is a rule sanctioned by general practice that, even though a blockade should exist and the doctrine of contraband as to unblockaded territory be rigidly enforced, innocent shipments may be freely transported to and from the United States through neutral countries to belligerent territory without being subject to the penalties of contraband traffic or breach of blockade, much less to detention, requisition, or confiscation.

Moreover, the rules of the declaration of Paris of 1856—among them that free ships make free goods—will hardly at this day be disputed by the signatories of that solemn agreement.

His Majesty's Government, like the Government of the United States, have often and explicitly held that these rights represent the best usage of warfare in the dealings of belligerents with neutrals at sea. In this connection I desire to direct attention to the opinion of the Chief Justice of the United States in the case of the Peterhof, which arose out of the Civil War, and to the fact that that opinion was unanimously sustained in the award of the Arbitration Commission of 1871, to which the case was presented at the request of Great Britain. From that time to the declaration of London of 1909, adopted with modifications by the order in council of the 23d of October last, these rights have not been seriously questioned by the British Government. And no claim on the part of Great Britain of any justification for interfering with these clear rights of the United States and its citizens as neutrals could be admitted. To admit it would be to assume an attitude of unneutrality toward the present enemies of Great Britain, which would be obviously inconsistent with the solemn obligations of this Government in the present circumstances; and for Great Britain to make such a claim would be for her to abandon and set at naught the principles for which she has consistently and earnestly contended in other times and circumstances.

The note of His Majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs which accompanies the order in council, and which bears the same date, notifies the Government of the United States of the establishment of a blockade which is, if defined by the terms of the order in council, to include all the coasts and ports of Germany and every port of possible access to enemy territory. But the novel and quite unprecedented feature of that blockade, if we are to assume it to be properly so defined, is that it embraces many neutral ports and coasts, bars access to them, and subjects all neutral ships seeking to approach them to the same suspicion that would attach to them were they bound for the ports of the enemies of Great Britain, and to unusual risks and penalties.

It is manifest that such limitations, risks, and liabilities placed upon the ships of a neutral power on the high seas, beyond the right of visit and search and the right to prevent the shipment of contraband already referred to, are a distinct invasion of the sovereign rights of the nation whose ships, trade, or commerce is interfered with.

The Government of the United States is, of course, not oblivious to the great changes which have occurred in the conditions and means of naval warfare since the rules hitherto governing legal blockade were formulated. It might be ready to admit that the old form of "close" blockade, with its cordon of ships in the immediate offing of the blockaded ports, is no longer practicable in face of an enemy possessing the means and opportunity to make an effective defense by the use of submarines, mines, and air craft; but it can hardly be maintained that, whatever form of effective blockade may be made use of, it is impossible to conform at least to the spirit and principles of the established rules of war. If the necessities of the case should seem to render it imperative that the cordon of blockading vessels be extended across the approaches to any neighboring neutral port or country, it would seem clear that it would still be easily practicable to comply with the well-recognized and reasonable prohibition of international law against the blockading of neutral ports by according free admission and exit to all lawful traffic with neutral ports through the blockading cordon. This traffic would, of course, include all outward-bound traffic from the neutral country and all inward-bound traffic to the neutral country except contraband in transit to the enemy. Such procedure need not conflict in any respect with the rights of the belligerent maintaining the blockade, since the right would remain with the blockading vessels to visit and search all ships either entering or leaving the neutral territory which they were in fact, but not of right, investing.

The Government of the United States notes that in the order in council His Majesty's Government give as their reason for entering upon a course of action, which they are aware is without precedent in modern warfare, the necessity they conceive themselves to have been placed under to retaliate upon their enemies for measures of a similar nature which the latter have announced it their intention to adopt and which they have to some extent adopted; but the Government of the United States, recalling the principles upon which His Majesty's Government have hitherto been scrupulous to act, interprets this as merely a reason for certain extraordinary activities on the part of His Majesty's naval forces and not as an excuse for or prelude to any unlawful action. If the course pursued by the present enemies of Great Britain should prove to be in fact tainted by illegality and disregard of the principles of war sanctioned by enlightened nations, it can not be supposed, and this Government does not for a moment suppose, that His Majesty's Government would wish the same taint to attach to their own actions or would cite such illegal acts as in any sense or degree a justification for similar practices on their part in so far as they affect neutral rights.

It is thus that the Government of the United States interprets the language of the note of His Majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs which accompanies the copy of the order in council which was handed to the ambassador of the United States near the Government in London and by him transmitted to Washington.

LECTURE BY HENRY J. PIERCE ON NECESSITY FOR WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, there is an invitation that I should like to extend to Senators, but after conference with some of those who know about such things it is thought that probably it might create a precedent that we might not like. So I will not extend it, but I will content myself with asking Senators to note the invitation on page 1161 of the RECORD of this morning, in the second column.

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I have an editorial here from the Evening Times, of Pawtucket, R. I., one of the most considerable papers in that State. I should like to have it read and printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary proceeded to read the editorial.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I object to the further reading of that paper. I do not believe it is proper for the Senate to put itself in the attitude of assailing the President of our own country in behalf of or in comparison with a man who is reputed to have been a murderer, cutthroat, and usurper.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Shall the document be read?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Montana was right in objecting.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the document be read?

Mr. STONE. Wait a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not debatable.

Mr. STONE. I ask permission to make a single observation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has indicated more than once his intention to object in such cases. I merely wish to say, if I may, that it seems to me while it is probably true that some newspaper writer can state the attitude of some Senators better than they can state it themselves, I hope in the future—and I intended to say this at the conclusion of the reading of this article—we will not have any more of this sort of thing attempted or done in the Senate. If the Senator from Utah will not carry out his frequently declared purpose to object, I shall do so myself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now, the question is, Shall the matter be read. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it. The noes have it. The matter is stricken from the RECORD.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his clerks, announced that the President had, on January 18, 1916, approved and signed the following act:

S. 1230. An act to authorize the construction of bridges across the Fox River, at Aurora, Ill.

JUVENILE COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA (H. DOC. NO. 594).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the reports of the clerk and chief probation officer of the Juvenile Court of the District of Columbia for the two years ending June 30, 1915, together with a letter of transmittal from the judge of said court.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 18, 1916.

NOTE.—Report accompanied similar message to the House of Representatives.

BRIDGE ACROSS TUG FORK, BIG SANDY RIVER.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1773) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Kermit, W. Va., which were, in line 9, after "near," to insert "Warfield, Ky., and" and to amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Warfield, Ky., and Kermit, W. Va."

Mr. BECKHAM. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 403. An act granting to the State of Oklahoma permission to occupy a certain portion of the Fort Sill Military Reservation, Okla., and to maintain and operate thereon a fish hatchery, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 4954. An act directing the Secretary of War to reconvey a parcel of land to the Anshe Chesed Congregation, Vicksburg, Miss., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 4716. An act to authorize Dunklin County, Mo., and Clay County, Ark., to construct a bridge across St. Francis River; and

H. R. 6448. An act to authorize Butler and Dunklin Counties, Mo., to construct a bridge across St. Francis River.

H. R. 3636. An act to amend section 3646 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as reenacted and amended by act of February 23, 1909, was read twice by its title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, what reference was made of that bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If I am not mistaken in regard to the bill, it ought to go to the Committee on Finance. I understand it was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads at the last session of Congress and re-referred to the Committee on Finance. It is a House bill which has been called to my attention.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

During the transaction of routine business,

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, if it is appropriate at this time, I desire to move that Senate concurrent resolution No. 9 be immediately committed to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. By unanimous consent, that may be done.

Mr. BORAH. Is that the resolution which we have had under discussion?

Mr. LEWIS. It is the resolution, I will answer the Senator from Idaho, introduced by myself touching the question of conferring upon the President authority to cooperate with any other Government in his judgment appropriate in sending such armed force as may be necessary for the protection of American citizens in Mexico. It is the one the Senator from Idaho, I believe, heard me discuss the other day in the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I had the pleasure of listening to the Senator. The suggestion I was going to make is this. I am ready, so far as I am concerned, to shape and dispose of that resolution here upon the floor now.

And, Mr. President, I make this single suggestion, that the resolution had just as well be withdrawn for any good it will do the American citizens who are being murdered in Mexico day by day, as to send it to the committee. In saying that I do not mean to reflect upon the committee, but this very hour is the time when those people need protection and need decisive action. The Senate ought to take a decided step this morning to notify the Mexican people that so far as the Congress are concerned we are ready to use the armed force of the United States to protect our people. What we need at this time is prompt and decided and unmistakable action.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the resolution going to the Committee on Foreign Relations?

Mr. LEWIS. May I be permitted an observation? I will say to the Senator from Idaho——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The whole thing is out of order. It can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BORAH. I ask, then, that the resolution may go over until we get through with the morning business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being an objection, it is not now in order to move to send it to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

After the transaction of further routine business, which appears under its appropriate heading,

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to recur to the subject which was under consideration a short time ago, and I move that Senate concurrent resolution No. 9 at once be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I will state that my reason for so doing is because the committee meets to-morrow, and I have reason to believe that they will act promptly upon the resolution, and to-morrow make such disposition of the matter as will comport with the view of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] by giving immediate hearing. For that reason, I move that the resolution be now sent to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HUGHES. Will not the Senator from Illinois withhold that request until morning business is concluded?

Mr. BORAH. May I say a word, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has already once ruled upon the question, that until the conclusion of the morning hour, except by unanimous consent, the calendar or anything upon the calendar can not be taken up.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I misunderstood the Chair. As I now understand it, I think the ruling of the Chair is unquestionably in accordance with the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Nothing can be taken up during the morning hour, prior to 1 o'clock, except by unanimous consent. That has been the uniform ruling of all presiding officers.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois misunderstood the Chair's application.

After the transaction of further routine business, which appears under its appropriate heading,

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk to be read, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 71), as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and instructed to use the Army and Navy of the United States for the protection of American lives and property in Mexico.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I notice in the morning papers of to-day an intimation that the President of the United States has——

Mr. STONE. I object. Of course, my motion is an objection to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. LIPPITT. There is a motion before the Senate, and I was going to say a few words upon it.

Mr. STONE. I ask for the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LEWIS. Under the rules, if objection were made the resolution would lie over one day, would it not?

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I rise to a point of order. Under objection it lies over a day, and can not be discussed at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If objection is made it goes over a day, but objection has not yet been raised.

Mr. LIPPITT. I hope the Senator will not raise that objection hastily, and I should like to say just a word or two in regard to this matter. First, I think it is a very important matter, and I think the situation is such at the present time that the Senate ought to give immediate consideration to this question. American lives are being lost and American property is being destroyed every day in Mexico, and we ought not to sit here idly without expressing our opinion and considering such a situation as that.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LIPPITT. Not for a moment, Mr. President. I was about to ask the Senator from Missouri a question, if he will allow me.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator will permit me to say a word, if the resolution goes over under a mere objection until to-morrow morning and then comes up for consideration the motion which I have made to refer it to the Committee on Foreign Relations would then be in order. Under that motion, being debatable, the Senator from Rhode Island or any other Senator could proceed to debate it. So far as I am concerned, I see no reason why the Senator should not express himself, so far as he wishes, this morning as well as to-morrow morning; but I renew the motion which I have made to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to have the resolution read for information.

Mr. LEWIS. I object to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I think I have the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just one second.

Mr. STONE. But I have made a motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; but the Senator from Illinois, as the Chair understands, has objected to the present consideration of the resolution, which will carry it over, together with the motion in connection with it.

Mr. LEWIS. Under that objection it lies over a day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It certainly does, under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, there are some of us who do not know what the resolution is, and we should like to have information concerning that point.

Mr. STONE. I will inquire of the Senator from Illinois what is the object of having it go over until to-morrow morning, when the same situation will be here then that we have now?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, if he feels that he would rather not have the objection made to carry the resolution over, and out of deference to him as head of the committee I withdraw my objection.

Mr. STONE. Then let the motion which I have made to refer be the pending motion.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair begs pardon of Senators; the Chair's attention was distracted. Does the Senator from Illinois withdraw his objection?

Mr. LEWIS. I withdraw the objection in deference to the views of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the pending motion is to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I did not understand what the Chair said.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending motion is to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the Senator from Rhode Island has the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Rhode Island permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LIPPITT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. Is this a Senate, a concurrent, or a joint resolution?

Mr. LIPPITT. It is a Senate resolution.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator think that the Senate of the United States alone can give the authority to the President which the resolution seeks to give?

Mr. LIPPITT. It can be made a joint resolution. I am not particular about the exact form in which it is done. It is the substance of the matter which concerns me.

Mr. THOMAS. It seems to me my suggestion is a very substantial one.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, in the press this morning I saw a statement that the President of the United States has made an agreement with certain Republics of South America under which it is impossible for him to take any action in Mexico without their consent. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri, who is in special touch with the administration on account of his position as chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of this body, if he has any idea how long it is going to take for the United States to get the permission of Peru, Guatemala, and Argentina to protect the lives of its own citizens and the property of its own citizens in Mexico? I presume that some arrangement of the kind has been made, and before I proceed further to the discussion of the resolution which I have offered I should like to know if the Senator can give us any information as to how long it is going to be before this great American Republic will be allowed to act in the protection of its own people.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the question the Senator propounds is so puerile and inconsequential that it scarcely deserves an answer. To ask whether the Government of the United States is bound to consult any other Government in the world as to what it may or may not do, I repeat, is so—I wish I could find just the word; I wish to be parliamentary—so far beneath the dignity of a Senator of the United States that I decline to answer. It is a question based, as suggested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], on some newspaper report.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I am very glad to hear the Senator from Missouri characterize this statement in the very strong language which he has used. I would not have referred to it at this time, coming from the source it does, as the Senator says—a mere newspaper declaration—if it were not for the fact that for more than two years negotiations have been carried on with various parties in Mexico without any information being given to this body as to their intention or their character.

There has been recently passed by this body a request for full information in regard to the Mexican situation. It is information that, in my opinion, ought to have been given to this body long since, and without any special request. That request, however, unanimously passed by this body, has now been in the hands of the President for nearly two weeks without any response as yet being made to it, without any statement that there is going to be any response made to it; and I, for one, am in the dark as to what the situation is in regard to Mexican matters. As is the case with every other Senator in this body, I have been obliged to rely upon newspaper reports for information as to what is going on in connection with Mexico. The information which I now have, reading from the Washington Post, is that—

> Congress will be fully informed of the agreement entered into between the United States and the Republics of Brazil, Argentina, Chile, Bolivia, Uruguay, and Guatemala.
> The chief provision of this agreement is that any step taken by the United States of a more aggressive character will be at the instigation of the Central and South American countries. The President and Secretary Lansing have in effect pledged this country to be guided by the views of their associates in the undertaking.

The Senator from Missouri may characterize that as puerile. He may say it is impossible that such an agreement can be made, and I sincerely hope it is impossible; but until we have information from some higher source I am obliged to rely upon reports of this character. Therefore I do not think it was improper for me to ask the Senator from Missouri about the accuracy of such a report as that, which is of such vital importance at this time, when American lives are being destroyed.

The Senator from Missouri also, in a few remarks which he made here last week, asked the Senators on this side of the Chamber to be fair, because he said there would be other American lives lost, and that we had to expect that incidents such as occurred last week, the destruction of the lives of 18 Americans, would be repeated. It seems to me, in the light of such a declaration as that and in the light of such a declaration as this in the paper, that it is not improper that information should be asked about it.

On August 27, 1913, in discussing the Mexican situation, the President of the United States used this language:

> We should let everyone who assumes to exercise authority in any part of Mexico know in the most unequivocal way that we shall vigilantly watch the fortunes of those Americans who can not get away, and shall hold those responsible for their sufferings and losses to a definite reckoning. That can be and will be made plain beyond the possibility of a misunderstanding.

Sir, the doctrine of "I can" is one that is very congenial to the spirit of the American people. The American people have been a people of accomplishment. They have been in the habit of doing things; and when anybody makes that declaration, it meets a very responsive note in the heart of every American citizen. Hand in hand with that doctrine goes the statement "I will," for America expects that its citizens will do what they can do. So, sir, the doctrine of "I can" and "I will" is one that epitomizes the spirit of the American people for more than 250 years. If that statement and that doctrine had been carried out in connection with this Mexican matter, I think, sir, we would not have been in our present situation.

Unfortunately, however, the President of the United States has also made another declaration in connection with Mexican matters. At Indianapolis, about a year ago, he made the remarkable statement that "it was the right of the Mexicans to spill as much blood as they pleased and as long as they pleased."

Sir, with that cruel and brutal and pusillanimous doctrine I have no sympathy. There are different kinds of blood. There is Mexican blood, and with that we have no particular concern in this body; but there is also American blood, and with the spilling of that we have great duties and responsibilities. Those duties and responsibilities can not be evaded until such time as their consideration will be of no effect if we are to act as we ought to in such circumstances.

Further than that, the administration has been very solicitous about the foreign trade of this country. It has been urging American citizens to engage in it. The President, in his tariff message, said that we must encourage trade, especially foreign trade. Now, sir, foreign trade means foreign complications. If a man sends his merchandise to the other countries of the world, it means that he must sometimes go there himself to watch over it and guard it. We are now confronted with the situation that the President of the United States, and recently the Secretary of State, have said that all of our people in Mexico should be compelled to leave that country and to abandon their property.

Sir, we can not be a great trading Nation in the foreign countries of the world if in time of trouble we are going to say to our people that their property there will not be protected. If we encourage our people to engage in foreign commerce, it is our manifest duty to protect them in the difficulties that may arise in connection with such transactions.

The Senator from Missouri a day or two ago asked one or two Senators on this floor what they would do in connection with the Mexican matter, and they gave such answers as seemed to them suitable. In view of the considerations I have stated I will say for myself, in answer to the question of what I would do, that if I had been President of the United States last week, when the report of these Mexican murders arrived in Washington, and had been Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, another sun would not have set over the Sierra Madre Mountains before American soldiers would be hot on the trail of those murderers. The first scrap of paper that I would have used in connection with that affair would have been a telegram instructing those soldiers to use every possible effort to secure those murderers, dead or alive; and I would have had in it a strong intimation that they need not object to including in those provisions some of their accomplices and sympathizers. And, sir, I would have kept up that policy until the life of every American ranchman in Mexico was as safe as though he had been in the streets of Washington, until every head of cattle upon his ranch was as safe from robbers and bandits as the children in his house.

Such a doctrine as that, I believe, will meet a responsive note to-day in the hearts of the American people. It is not war on Mexico or her people. It is maintaining order and protecting Americans. Sir, the time has come when we can not sit idly by and see our people murdered and their property lost on the excuse that we are not capable of effective action.

It is with those feelings, sir, that I have introduced this resolution, and I hope it may have the action of the Senate.

Mr. STONE obtained the floor.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, before the Senator begins, will he yield to me to offer a simple resolution on another subject? It is a matter of importance.

Mr. STONE. Does it relate to international affairs?

Mr. MYERS. No; it relates to another subject entirely. It is a routine matter.

Mr. STONE. Can not the Senator withhold it? Is it very urgent at this particular moment?

Mr. MYERS. Well, no; but I should like to offer it at some time before 2 o'clock. I will wait, then.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would be a violation of the rule. The Chair is going to assume the responsibility from now on, until the Chair changes his mind, of enforcing the rule of the Senate that no Senator shall be interrupted for the purpose of making a report or introducing a bill or memorial or any other document. The Senator from Missouri is entitled to the floor.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I shall occupy the attention of the Senate for only a brief while. It may be that you could find a Senator, possibly two or three, on the other side who may be really anxious for war with Mexico and who would like forthwith to unleash the dogs of war; I am not sure as to that, but I seriously doubt whether there is a genuine sentiment among the level-headed and sensible, the conservative and patriotic Senators on that side for any proceeding of that kind. I hardly believe, Mr. President, that if that sentiment represented the consensus of opinion on that side the Senators over there would select their most indiscreet, intemperate, and impulsive associates instead of their more level-headed men to give expression to their attitude. I can not but think that these wild ones speak only for themselves.

Mr. President, I do not believe that Senators on that side are really desirous of war or that they have an impatient thirst or appetite to lick their tongues in Mexican gore. I do not believe that. On the contrary, I think that a declaration of war by the Congress would be the last thing the sensible men on that side would desire. It would be the last thing any sensible man would desire, but they above all others. A declaration of war would break their hearts. There are a few Senators on that side who for party reasons, as they see it, talk about war because seemingly some of them have not anything else to talk about, and because they think they must make fuss and feathers and create what may at least approach a sensation. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] suggests sotto voce that all of them are past military age. Still, a man may be beyond military age and his capacity for voluble exploitation remain unimpaired, or, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] suggests aside to me, that such a man in other ways may be just as valuable as ever, whatever that may mean.

Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island, who is striving in these grave emergencies to leap into the leadership of his party, in an apparent effort to force it into an attitude of desiring and insisting upon war, refers to something I said a few days ago about the possibility—aye, the probability—of a repetition in some place or in one way or another of the murderous incident that occurred at San Ysabel some days ago. As to that, I wish to say that, however regrettable it would be if such incidents should in future occur, it would probably be due to foolhardiness and adventure on the part of those who suffer, whether Americans or the nationals of other countries. If knowingly and deliberately men go into a nest of bandits, or go among wild Indians, who have a wholly different code of morals and ethics from ours; if they deliberately go right into such dangers, they are apt to get into trouble. It has not been very long ago since men took their lives in their hands when they went out among the Apaches or Comanches on our own plains and in our own mountains; and they knew it when they went, and they took the hazard like men. Men do those things. They have done it all through history here and there. It may have been, and still may be, foolhardy, but men do such things. More than that, I will say at this juncture that I think it is a foolhardy thing for men or women to go aboard a ship and ride recklessly into a zone of danger, where they know that behind every wave lifting the ship death is lurking. But they do it. This Government no doubt is under some measure of obligation to do what it can to protect even the people who do these foolish things, but that does not lessen the foolishness of the act. When men do things of this kind their recklessness is in a way a crime against the American Government they look to for protection, since it tends to involve the Government and our people in most dangerous controversies.

No doubt men will do these things in the future as they have done them in the past, and if they do them the same old result will probably follow. If Americans or other foreigners go into a nest of Villa bandits, who openly declare their bloody purposes, we know they take their lives in their hands; or if they go out into the Sierra Madre Mountains, among the Yaqui Indians, we also know that they take their lives in their hands. But I have not any doubt that men will continue to do just such things. Even in the very incipiency of the Carranza de facto government, before a half-fair opportunity has been given that government to restore and maintain order in that country, I suppose such people as I speak of will continue to do such foolish things as I deprecate. Hence I have said that such bloody and regrettable incidents as the one recorded a few days ago are likely to occur again.

Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] said that if he had been President, immediately upon receiving word that 18 American citizens had been killed, he would have directed our military forces along the Mexican border to invade Mexico to pursue the bandit murderers—and as my friend from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] says, on the side, without even consulting Congress. Perhaps the Senator from Rhode Island does not know, but he should know, that the President of the United States is without constitutional authority to order our Army to invade Mexico for such purpose as he outlines—that is, to follow these bandits into the heart of Mexico and pursue them over the country for an indefinite period.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. That would be war, and the President——

Mr. LIPPITT. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me for one minute?

Mr. STONE. I will.

Mr. LIPPITT. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if the President of the United States did not, without any authority other than that which he now has, land marines in Vera Cruz?

Mr. STONE. The President came to Congress with respect to that subject, and Congress authorized him to take that action.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me one minute——

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. LIPPITT. Is it not true that in the middle of the night, while Congress was discussing the question whether they would or would not authorize that action, word was received in this Chamber that marines had been landed in Vera Cruz by order of the President of the United States? It is within the memory of every man in this Chamber who was here at that time that the President took that action without any authority other than he now has at this minute. It would seem to me that if he had the authority to land marines he has authority to send American troops over the border.

If the Senator will excuse me, I am not for a minute talking about war with Mexico in this resolution.

Mr. STONE. Then what is the Senator talking about?

Mr. LIPPITT. I am talking about defending American lives and property, which is quite another proposition.

Mr. STONE. But the Senator has been talking about war. He said he thought the President ought to have ordered the American Army to invade Mexico and that if he had been President he would have done that very thing.

Mr. President, whatever may have been done at any time by anybody, without stopping to discuss the incidents of a particular event, and without stopping to criticize or justify any particular event, I undertake to say that the President of the United States has no constitutional right to order an invasion of Mexico in the circumstances we have before us. He would subject himself to impeachment if he should do so. If American citizens should be killed in southern Mexico by the Zapata band, would any Senator contend that, without consulting the Congress, the President, on his own motion could constitutionally order 20,000 or 100,000 or more men to invade and overrun the whole Republic of Mexico? If that be true, then the constitutional power vested in Congress to declare war is a meaningless thing.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. STONE. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have not before me at present the message which the President sent to Congress at the time he asked us to justify his intervention with the Army and Navy in Mexico, but it is my strong recollection that the President stated in his message that while he himself entertained no doubt whatever of his constitutional authority to use the Army and the Navy in Mexico, still the consequence of its use would probably be so grave that he hesitated to do it without securing the consent of Congress. As I said, I have not the message before me.

Mr. STONE. Nor have I.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But I think I recollect that very clearly.

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut, who is a lawyer of ability and eminence, whether he believes that the President, without consulting Congress, in the case before us, where American citizens were murdered 100 or 150 miles south of our border in Chihuahua, could have ordered the American Army to invade Mexico, as stated by the Senator from Rhode Island? Does the Senator believe that?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator couples his question with a good many conditions.

Mr. STONE. Well, without conditions.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I would have to be allowed to answer in my own way, if I were to answer at all, because it depends, in my opinion, entirely upon the extent to which it is done. I think, of course, it goes without saying that the President has no authority to make war against a foreign nation without the consent of Congress. It is exclusively in the control of Congress to declare war and to make peace. But it has been repeatedly held, and the Senator will so find—he knows it himself without my telling him so—that a mere intrusion to rescue citizens or to protect the property of citizens is not an act of war, and the President has repeatedly and unquestionably exercised such authority by the landing of marines and then retiring after the object has been accomplished. I do not think there is any question about that.

Mr. STONE. That has been done.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. When the Senator asks if they can go 100 or 150 miles, and so forth, there the Senator is entering upon another field, and I am not prepared to answer him.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the President of the United States has, acting, I think, within his authority, in some instances intervened where the lives of American citizens were imperiled, and even on occasions naval officers of the United States, acting largely on their own authority, have intervened to protect the imperiled lives of American citizens, and their course was sustained by the Government. That is one thing, but a different thing from the case wherein the Senator from Rhode Island declares that he, if President, would have ordered the Army into Mexico to run down rioters or bandits who had killed American citizens, and to pursue them as he pleased anywhere over that Republic. To do that would unquestionably have brought our Army into conflict with the Army of the Mexican government. It would have done that with any government anywhere in the world that might have dared to resist such an invasion. Such an invasion would have been war pure and simple.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MYERS in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. STONE. The present President of the United States would not do such a thing as that. I was about to say no President would do that, but perhaps that statement would require modification.

Mr. LIPPITT. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. STONE. It may be possible that we have had, or might yet have, a President who would do that—a President who would recognize no restraint upon himself. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. LIPPITT. If the Senator will allow me, he certainly can recognize the fact that the President of the United States, as has been brought out here upon the floor within the last few minutes, did invade Mexico with the armed men of the United for the purpose of preventing a cargo of ammunition from being landed there from Germany. This is a question of the deepest importance. It involves the lives of American citizens.

I see no reason why such action as I have described in the present disordered state of Mexico might not be done with the full authority and permission of the so-called government of Mexico. I presume and hope that when we receive information about the Mexican situation it will be found that the President of the United States has not entered into a partnership with Mr. Carranza without having some agreement and understanding with him about what shall happen there, what rights the American Government shall have there, in case Mr. Carranza himself is not able to establish order.

But the proposition that I have made is far from war. It goes no further than to announce to the Mexican people and to all the world that the United States proposes, to the ultimate limit of its ability, to protect the lives and the property of its people wherever they are; and if there is any question of authority now, the purpose of the resolution is to remove that doubt by distinctly authorizing the President to do these things.

Mr. STONE. If the resolution merely means what the Senator says it means, that the Government of the United States and the people of the United States will protect American citizens throughout the world, then it is a useless resolution. It states what everybody subscribes to.

I ask that the resolution may be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, we are on the eve of a presidential campaign. It has been the custom of each party to present its indictment against the party in power during the session immediately preceding such a campaign. During such session it has been the custom to engage in crimination and recrimination, and to exhaust the time in partisan attacks rather than to spend it usefully in correctional or constructive legislation.

This has been the custom of both parties. I do not present a charge against the Republican Party to-day that could not have been made with equal correctness against my own party in past times.

I deplore, however, that the fact that in a crisis of this kind, when the President of the United States is engaged in negotiations that relate to two wars—a civil war on our borders in Mexico and an international war abroad—and when the questions of the highest delicacy are being considered by the man charged by the Constitution with responsibility regarding the conduct of our foreign relations, we should allow a question of our foreign relations to enter into these controversies of crimination and recrimination.

Just before the Cuban war I happened to be a Member of the House of Representatives and a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. At that time the country was excited with reference to the condition of Cuba. An election was approaching and the party of which I was a member was then engaged in somewhat the same form of attack upon Mr. McKinley as is now being indulged in by the Republican Party upon Mr. Wilson. I recall that during that time the President was embarrassed by the consideration of numerous resolutions presented by the leaders of the adversary party in the House of Representatives regarding the recognition of belligerent rights and other matters of that kind. I recall that at a conference of the Democrats of the House the question came up as to whether this mode of attack was proper and would be fruitful of results. I ventured to inquire at that time whether the Democratic Party wished to get into war, and I was assured it did not; that it was a mere question of party tactics; that the commencement and the maintenance of a war pending a national campaign would insure the retention in power of the dominant party. My reply was, then this resolution will drive this administration into war. An answer came back from a prominent Democrat that the Republican Party could not be kicked into war. That mode of attack went on. Disaffection increased in the Republican Party; in the Northwest, particularly, the sentiment was intense and Republicans felt that their seats were in danger at the approaching election. They formed an organization called the "Insurgents," and called upon the President with reference to the pending situation and insisted that the administration should take decisive action.

Finding himself gradually losing the support of his own party in his deliberate methods, the President finally announced that he would deliver a message to Congress upon the Cuban situation on a particular day, the following Friday. The House of Representatives met in expectancy of that message. Business was suspended; the atmosphere was surcharged with electricity. Contention arose on the floor in one or two cases leading almost to physical violence while they were awaiting the presidential message. Whilst I stood there philosophically viewing the scene and wondering at the turbulence of a so-called deliberative body the Sergeant at Arms informed me that the President desired to see me at the White House. I went there and in the anteroom found two other Democrats, minority members of the Foreign Affairs Committee. We were immediately ushered into the President's office. He sat there at a table upon which lay a document bound in red ribbon, evidently the message which he was about to send to Congress. I could not but contrast the calm and the dignity of that room and of the President himself with the scene of turbulence which I had just left. The President informed us that he had just received a telegram from Consul General Lee at Habana advising him that Habana was in a high state of excitement with reference to his anticipated message; that there were 500 Americans in Habana whom he wished to send back to this country before that message was announced and asking him to postpone its delivery.

Mr. McKinley stated that the country expected this message upon that day and that Congress expected it; that he could not announce to the country the cause of postponement, for if the telegram were published it might produce in Habana the same effect that might be produced by the presidential message. He said that he had, therefore, called us as members of the minority and adversary party to ask our judgment regarding the situation. We told him that we thought the message ought to be postponed. He replied that he thought so, too; that he would rather lose his right arm, as he expressed it, than run the risk of losing a single American life, but that he was unable to make any public statement regarding the matter, and he requested us to pass around, without publicity, among our associates on the floor of the House and state that the President of the United States had taken us into his confidence and had presented to us good reasons for the postponement of the message. We assured him that we would do so, and we thought the undertaking an easy one, but when we arrived at the House we found the turbulence of that body increased, not diminished. Word had been passed around that we had been sent for and the purpose was suspected. The result was a flood of denunciation, particularly from the so-called "insurgent members" of the Republican Party, some of whom in my hearing, upon our return to that body, when we were passing around in a rather ineffective way stating the result of our communication with Mr. McKinley, denounced him as a man without a backbone or with a rubber backbone. I have often since then thought of that contrast between the quiet and the calm of the President and the excitement of a so-called deliberative and representative body.

Mr. President, Mr. McKinley was driven into that war both by the adversary party and by the insurgents in his own party. He was always confident that he could have secured the freedom of Cuba without war, but the war sentiment of the country was so aroused that he found it impossible to resist it. What was the result? A war which cost the American people thousands of lives and $600,000,000 in treasure, which put into our possession as the result of the spirit of conquest aroused by that war 3,000 isles 7,000 miles away from our base, involving an annual military expense since that time for their defense of at least $25,000,000, nearly $600,000,000 more up to the present time, and we are now seeking methods of withdrawing from those islands to whose abandonment we have become reconciled, not so much as a matter of altruism as because the retention of the islands does not pay.

During the period of that war we neglected our domestic affairs, and whilst we were conquering other countries the trusts conquered our own, and we have been 10 years in freeing ourselves from the subjection which they imposed upon the American people whilst our attention was diverted in other directions.

It will be easy for this country to get into war with Mexico; it will be easy for this country to get into the European war if the war spirit of the country is aroused; and the war spirit of the country will be aroused if the leading men of the Nation constantly add fuel to the flames. So I appeal to members of the adversary party not to push these conditions of war into this political campaign. You may in search of a partisan advantage push the country too far. If you do, and we get into war, the country will stand by the existing administration and you will imperil your chances of party success at the next election, and beyond that you will open a Pandora's box of trouble for the United States for the next 20 years.

Mr. President, I have no very harsh judgment regarding these matters. It is a very natural instinct to prod the adversary party; it is an instinct that exists in both parties; it is an instinct which has dominated both parties in the past and will in the future, but I do beg of the Members of this body, the highest deliberative body in the world, a body that ought to move with deliberation, caution, and judgment, not to lend itself to the kindling of a flame that may mean universal conflagration; and I appeal to them to let these matters rest with the executive department of the Government, charged with responsibility under the Constitution, without undue criticism, without making the way of the President of the United States hard and difficult, reserving until his task is complete that judgment which the American people will always pronounce upon either success or failure.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I believe this resolution, together with the resolution offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and all other resolutions upon this subject, should go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I believe that committee should be given a reasonable time to consider these resolutions, and I think within a reasonable time it ought to make a report.

I intend only to take a minute or two of the time of the Senate, and in that time I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate a message or telegram I received from a leading Democrat in the State of Kansas on the 15th of December, which I that day brought to the attention of the State Department. The sender of this message says he does not care for publicity. He predicted what would happen, just as it did happen, and a few days later I asked the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations this question:

Does not the Senator think that if the State Department would refuse to permit Mexican troops to cross the territory of the United States in going from one part of Mexico to another, and if the State Department would prevent Mexican generals representing the Carranza government from having headquarters in the United States, perhaps some of this trouble would be stopped?

To that the chairman of the committee replied:

Mr. President, that may be or may not be true; I do not know. The Senator's question implies a criticism of the act allowing Carranza troops to pass through our territory. I do not wish to be diverted into that kind of a discussion.

It was not my intention to criticize, but it was my intention to point out, if I could, an error that the department has made. To show that it had full information, and in order that this committee may fully consider this question, I am going to now, with the permission of the sender of this telegram, to ask the Secretary to read it for me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

TOPEKA, KANS., December 15, 1915.

Hon. CHARLES CURTIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

By private code my advices from Mexico for two days by wire from sources I consider absolutely reliable is to the effect that the continued permission of our State Department for Carranza to transport his troops over American territory and American railroads to where he needed them most to fight Gen. Villa has so infuriated the Mexican people of the interior, a large majority of whom are opposed to Carranza, that there is very great danger. I think it probable that there will be a massacre of Americans not in the north alone, but probably in all Mexico, of whom there are hundreds in the north and thousands in the whole country yet and to a great extent unable to get out.

I myself saw the 5,000 Carranza troops go through El Paso from Laredo to Douglass, October 31, and saw the battle of Agua Prieta a day or two later, and met Gen. Villa at Naco, after the battle, and talked with him at length. I see that they have shifted Carranza troops over American territory back and forth from Nogales to Agua Prieta by permission of the State Department, and right now they are starting a Carranza troop movement eastward over American territory and American railroads to border points several hundred miles east, probably opposite Ojiniga. While the recognition of Carranza was a colossal blunder, our right to do so probably could not be questioned nor our right to place an embargo on the shipment of arms and ammunition, provided we applied it to both Carranza's and Villa's armies; but when we apply the embargo to Villa only, and allow Carranza to transport his troops over our territory, convoyed by American soldiers, and otherwise aid and assist Carranza, why is not our action an act of war, and are we not an ally of Carranza? We have gone beyond recognition. We are an active ally, and our action, if in Europe, would bring a declaration of war in 24 hours.

Is it the desire of our administration to precipitate a war with Mexico and her 16,000,000 people? If so, we can readily understand our participation. I was told in Mexico a year ago that if we made war on Mexico we would have not Mexico alone to whip. You can readily understand that this transporting of Carranza troops over our territory is infuriating the masses in Mexico; they are a quick-tempered, hot-blooded people, and regard the action of our Government in aiding Carranza as an effort to saddle a president on them by a foreign power, and they hate and resent foreign interference in their internal affairs.

If the transportation of Carranza troops over American territory is not stopped at once and immediately by the President and Secretary Lansing I sincerely believe that these justly infuriated people will retaliate in a frightful way; and if they do, the blood of several hundred, perhaps a thousand, murdered Americans will be on the heads of Wilson and Lansing on account of their ill-advised and reckless action. Is Carranza or the desire to aid him more important than the lives of innumerable Americans? My information is that the feeling is so great that Villa will not be able to control his people, or, to use their words, "He will not be able to hold them down." It is possible that if these troop trains now loading were stopped at once and where they are and further transportation over American territory denied, and those en route returned, that a possible massacre can be avoided, but if these troops are transported as now arranged the President and Secretary Lansing will have to answer and be responsible for such consequences as result. Our troops can not save our helpless people in the interior of Mexico from the consequences of ill-advised and impractical action at Washington. Carranza is impossible, and stands no more show of being President of Mexico than the man in the moon.

Will you be so kind as to read this message from your Democratic friend and constituent at once to Secretary Lansing and to the President, if he will condescend to hear it, because if the worst comes the odium will fall on them. I would greatly prefer that no publicity be given this communication at this time.

Mr. CURTIS. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. Who signs it?

Mr. CURTIS. I will ask the Secretary to read the name.

The Secretary read as follows:

Signed, Frank S. Thomas.

Mr. STONE. Ah! Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes, sir; for a question. I want to finish my remarks.

Mr. STONE. The Senator knows Mr. Thomas?

Mr. CURTIS. I have known Mr. Thomas all his life.

Mr. STONE. I know Mr. Thomas also. I have known him a number of years. Within the last two years he has come to see me at Washington and other places to confer with me. I heard what he had to say. He came to me as the agent and employee of Gen. Villa, working for Villa, in a sense his representative to this country to confer with American officials in the Villa interest. What there was in it for him I do not know.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. If my friend will pardon me further——

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. This telegram—which I assume the Senator indorses, or else he would not have presented it—complains that this Government permits Carranza soldiers to pass over American territory in pursuit of bandits, or of those opposing the government there, while other Senators arise here and insist that we should ourselves throw our troops into Mexico because the Carranza forces can not suppress outlawry. One objects to our allowing Mexican troops to pass even across the borders of our country in pursuit of criminals, while another Senator on that side urges us to send in our own troops.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I yielded for a question.

Mr. STONE. I am through.

Mr. CURTIS. I want to state that I did not have this telegram read with a view of criticizing. I had it read so that the Senate might know, and so that the Senate committee might consider, the objections that were being raised by members of the majority party and the errors that were being pointed out by the members of their own party. Before I conclude my remarks I want to ask to have printed an editorial from the El Paso Times of December 17 or 18 on the same subject, criticizing the action of permitting Mexican troops to be taken across our territory in going from one point in Mexico to another; and that is a question that the committee should consider. If the taking of Carranza troops over the territory of the United States has caused the death of American citizens, then the order permitting such action should be revoked.

I am not here to say that I am for war. I want the Committee on Foreign Relations to take what action is necessary to protect the lives and the property of American citizens in Mexico; and, so far as I am concerned, I would want them to take every step necessary to avoid war as long as it can be avoided with honor. But it is the duty of this Government to protect the lives of American citizens; and if, by permitting Mexican troops to come across our border, they are endangering the lives of American citizens, then they should stop it.

Mr. President, another thing. The Senator from Missouri criticized and said that these Americans who crossed the border the other day had committed a crime. Far from it. If the newspapers are to be believed, those men went across the border with the assurance of protection; and it was said in the newspapers that a troop of Carranza's men had been taken in a train ahead of them. If so, why were they not given protection by Carranza?

In old times it was said, and it ought to be said now, that an American citizen's protection was in the Stars and Stripes; but that can not be said of the last two years in Mexico. Not only according to newspaper reports, but according to information that comes from Americans who were there, at Tampico American citizens had to depend for protection upon a foreign flag, and our ships sailed away and left them helpless and at the mercy of the men who were shooting them down.

A few weeks ago there came to my office a citizen of Oklahoma, who was in Tampico at that time, and he told me it was shameful the way American citizens were left there, and that if it had not been for a German officer he does not know how many of them would have been killed at Tampico.

I want to say to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations that I will join with him and the other Senators in this body in passing a resolution that will protect the lives of American citizens, but there should not be too much delay. Let us give consideration to every side of this question. I do not know whether Frank Thomas represents Villa or not. I have known him since he was a boy. He is an insurance agent and a money loaner in the city of Topeka. But even if he is Villa's representative, would it not be better for this administration to send a man like Frank Thomas to consult with Villa, rather than to send down there some man who wants to give them only the information they want, and not give them the truth?

I venture to say that if the President of the United States would send for Frank S. Thomas and consult with him Frank Thomas would tell him the truth about the situation; and I think the difficulty has been that this Government has not been given the truth about the situation in Mexico.

I ask that the editorial from the El Paso paper to which I have referred may be printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, that will be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Editorial from the El Paso Morning Times.]

ANOTHER NUISANCE HEREABOUTS.

More Carranzista troops are to be transported through the United States. This time we learn that a portion of Obregon's army is to be transferred from Agua Prieta, Sonora, to Ojinaga, Chihuahua. These ragged ruffians will necessarily have to pass through El Paso. They will probably be delayed here several hours, as they were while en route to Agua Prieta from Mexican border towns to the east of El Paso. There are thousands and thousands of Mexicans in El Paso, and while these Carranza troops are here much uneasiness is felt by El Pasoans. It is true that these Mexican soldiers are guarded by American troops while here, but there is ever the possibility of an outbreak among the Mexicans opposed to the newly recognized de facto government of Mexico. Unless we are mistaken—and we don't think we are—the majority of El Paso's present Mexican population is antagonistic to the Carranzistas. At any rate, the appearance here of these Carranzista troops is not calculated to encourage peace and quiet among the Mexicans, for the Mexicans who are opposed to the cause of the Carranzistas deeply resent the action of the American Government in granting permission to them for the transportation of the troops through American territory.

As a matter of fact, the Carranzistas are already abusing the privilege of moving their troops through American territory, and the Morning Times for one is going to protest against the American Government granting any further permits for troop transportation through American territory to the de facto government in Mexico. Absolutely nothing was accomplished by the original movement of troops to Agua Prieta. The Villistas really made only a half-hearted attack on that town, and the troops which were already there could as easily have defended it. And Obregon, instead of mustering his army and going out in the open in pursuit of the Villistas, commenced transferring his troops back and forth from one Sonora border town to another through the United States, while he hung around the border. He was outgeneraled at every turn, the Villistas having either accomplished their purpose in invading Sonora or, having failed to accomplish it, returned to Chihuahua. But the opportunity of the Carranzistas to engage them in a decisive battle was not taken advantage of, and as a consequence the situation in northern Mexico is as bad, if not worse, than before the first consignment of Carranzista troops were permitted to pass through American territory.

Now, Obregon proposes transferring his troops to Ojinaga. And when he finds that he can accomplish nothing by occupying that town he will perhaps seek permission to transfer them to some other border town, the passage, of course, to be made through the United States. Where will it end? Nobody knows. We do know, however, that these frequent excursions through American territory are becoming a nuisance, to say nothing of their menace to the peace and quiet of the American borderland. The sooner the practice is discontinued, through the refusal of the American Government to grant permission for these transfers of troops through American territory, the better it will be.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate only a minute on the matter to which I called the attention of the Senator from Missouri, in relation to the question whether the President had authority, without consulting Congress, to order the Army and Navy into a foreign country.

I read from the President's message of April 20, 1914. He had been discussing the question of sending the Army and Navy into Mexico to exact amends from Mr. Huerta. He says:

No doubt I could do what is necessary in the circumstances to enforce respect for our Government without recourse to the Congress and yet not exceed my constitutional powers as President, but I do not wish to act in a matter possibly of so grave consequence except in close conference and cooperation with both the Senate and House. I therefore come to ask your approval that I should use the armed forces of the United States in such ways and to such an extent as may be necessary to obtain from Gen. Huerta and his adherents the fullest recognition of the rights and dignity of the United States, even amidst the distressing conditions now unhappily obtaining in Mexico.

So that whatever may be the fact about the right of the President to do that, there is no doubt that the President thought he had the right at that time, and so stated to Congress.

In order that there may be no misconception about the matter, and that I may not be thought by anybody to be taking a particular paragraph from the context or distorting its meaning, I will ask that the entire message, which is only two or three short pages, be printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Gentlemen of the Congress, it is my duty to call your attention to a situation which has arisen in our dealings with Gen. Victoriano Huerta at Mexico City which calls for action, and to ask your advice and cooperation in acting upon it. On the 9th of April a paymaster of the U. S. S. Dolphin landed at the Iturbide Bridge landing at Tampico with a whaleboat and boat's crew to take off certain supplies needed by his ship, and while engaged in loading the boat was arrested by an officer and squad of men of the army of Gen. Huerta. Neither the paymaster nor anyone of the boat's crew was armed. Two of the men were in the boat when the arrest took place, and were obliged to leave it and submit to be taken into custody, notwithstanding the fact that the boat carried, both at her bow and at her stern, the flag of the United States. The officer who made the arrest was proceeding up one of the streets of the town with his prisoners when met by an officer of higher authority, who ordered him to return to the landing and await orders; and within an hour and a half from the time of the arrest orders were received from the commander of the Huertista forces at Tampico for the release of the paymaster and his men. The release was followed by apologies from the commander and later by an expression of regret by Gen. Huerta himself. Gen. Huerta urged that martial law obtained at the time at Tampico; that orders had been issued that no one should be allowed to land at the Iturbide Bridge; and that our sailors had no right to land there. Our naval commanders at the port had not been notified of any such prohibition; and, even if they had been, the only justifiable course open to the local authorities would have been to request the paymaster and his crew to withdraw and to lodge a protest with the commanding officer of the fleet. Admiral Mayo regarded the arrest as so serious an affront that he was not satisfied with the apologies offered, but demanded that the flag of the United States be saluted with special ceremony by the military commander of the port.

The incident can not be regarded as a trivial one, especially as two of the men arrested were taken from the boat itself—that is to say, from the territory of the United States—but had it stood by itself it might have been attributed to the ignorance or arrogance of a single officer. Unfortunately, it was not an isolated case. A series of incidents have recently occurred which can not but create the impression that the representatives of Gen. Huerta were willing to go out of their way to show disregard for the dignity and rights of this Government and felt perfectly safe in doing what they pleased, making free to show in many ways their irritation and contempt. A few days after the incident at Tampico an orderly from the U. S. S. Minnesota was arrested at Vera Cruz while ashore in uniform to obtain the ship's mail and was for a time thrown into jail. An official dispatch from this Government to its embassy at Mexico City was withheld by the authorities of the telegraphic service until peremptorily demanded by our chargé d'affaires in person. So far as I can learn, such wrongs and annoyances have been suffered to occur only against representatives of the United States. I have heard of no complaints from other Governments of similar treatment. Subsequent explanations and formal apologies did not and could not alter the popular impression, which it is possible it had been the object of the Huertista authorities to create, that the Government of the United States was being singled out, and might be singled out with impunity, for slights and affronts in retaliation for its refusal to recognize the pretensions of Gen. Huerta to be regarded as the constitutional provisional President of the Republic of Mexico.

The manifest danger of such a situation was that such offenses might grow from bad to worse, until something happened of so gross and intolerable a sort as to lead directly and inevitably to armed conflict. It was necessary that the apologies of Gen. Huerta and his representatives should go much further; that they should be such as to attract the attention of the whole population to their significance and such as to impress upon Gen. Huerta himself the necessity of seeing to it that no further occasion for explanations and professed regrets should arise. I therefore felt it my duty to sustain Admiral Mayo in the whole of his demand and to insist that the flag of the United States should be saluted in such a way as to indicate a new spirit and attitude on the part of the Huertistas.

Such a salute Gen. Huerta has refused, and I have come to ask your approval and support in the course I now purpose to pursue.

This Government can, I earnestly hope, in no circumstances be forced into war with the people of Mexico. Mexico is torn by civil strife. If we are to accept the tests of its own constitution, it has no government. Gen. Huerta has set his power up in the City of Mexico, such as it is, without right and by methods for which there can be no justification. Only part of the country is under his control. If armed conflict should unhappily come as a result of his attitude of personal resentment toward this Government, we should be fighting only Gen. Huerta and those who adhere to him and give him their support, and our object would be only to restore to the people of the distracted Republic the opportunity to set up again their own laws and their own Government.

But I earnestly hope that war is not now in question. I believe that I speak for the American people when I say that we do not desire to control in any degree the affairs of our sister Republic. Our feeling for the people of Mexico is one of deep and genuine friendship, and everything that we have so far done or refrained from doing has proceeded from our desire to help them, not to hinder or embarrass them. We would not wish even to exercise the good offices of friendship without their welcome and consent. The people of Mexico are entitled to settle their own domestic affairs in their own way, and we sincerely desire to respect their right. The present situation need have none of the grave implications of interference if we deal with it promptly, firmly, and wisely.

No doubt I could do what is necessary in the circumstances to enforce respect for our Government without recourse to the Congress and yet not exceed my constitutional powers as President, but I do not wish to act in a matter possibly of so grave consequence except in close conference and cooperation with both the Senate and House. I therefore come to ask your approval that I should use the armed forces of the United States in such ways and to such an extent as may be necessary to obtain from Gen. Huerta and his adherents the fullest recognition of the rights and dignity of the United States, even amidst the distressing conditions now unhappily obtaining in Mexico.

There can in what we do be no thought of aggression or of selfish aggrandizement. We seek to maintain the dignity and authority of the United States only because we wish always to keep our great influence unimpaired for the uses of liberty, both in the United States and wherever else it may be employed for the benefit of mankind.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator whether the resolution passed in pursuance of that message giving the President authority to obtain a salute from Huerta was actually passed before or after the Americans were landed at Vera Cruz and engaged in that battle?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. My strong impression is that when the resolution which was finally passed in response to the President's message, and which was a substitute for a resolution that had already been adopted by the House, was being considered by the Senate at an evening session the marines had already been landed from the ships which the President had sent to Vera Cruz, and several of our men had lost their lives in the street fight which ensued.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. There is no question whatever about that. It had not occurred when the resolution passed the House; but the morning when the substitute resolution passed the Senate our marines were on the streets of Vera Cruz, actually engaged in the struggle, and being killed. I think at that moment nine had already been killed. There is no question but that when we passed the resolution we were engaged in actual combat in Mexico.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. If the floor is yielded by the Senator from Connecticut, I wish to inform the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that I now renew my motion, and move that Senate concurrent resolution No. 9, submitted by myself, be now referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LIPPITT. I should like to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that there is a resolution now before the Senate, and the pending question is the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] to refer my resolution to the committee.

Mr. STONE. The motion I made was the same the Senator from Illinois had previously made, but which was afterwards lost in the shuffle, as mine seems to have been.

Mr. LEWIS. If I may be pardoned, my motion related to my own resolution and the motion of the Senator from Missouri, as I understood it, related to the resolution of the Senator from Rhode Island. Am I correct?

Mr. STONE. Yes; my resolution related to the resolution of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. LIPPITT. As there seems to be some confusion about it, I request that my resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from Illinois yield, if at all?

Mr. LEWIS. I had the floor.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. STONE. The Senator can not make the motion. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order will be stated.

Mr. STONE. My motion to refer the resolution of the Senator from Rhode Island to the Committee on Foreign Relations is the pending question, and upon that this debate has been proceeding. I thought the Senator from Illinois had reference to the same matter. The point of order is that until the motion that I made is disposed of the other motion is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] has the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations has informed us that there is pending a motion that has not yet been disposed of. I recognize the fact that another motion could not be made unless by way of amendment to or substitute for it. My motion being an independent one, I ask for a disposition of the pending motion.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SMOOT. The hour of 2 o'clock has arrived, and the unfinished business has been laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business has been laid before the Senate, and the Senator from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho for an interrogatory or an observation.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Illinois has stated that he has reason to believe that if his resolution goes before the Committee on Foreign Relations, it will be considered to-morrow. That being true, I do not desire to interpose any delay and I am quite willing that it shall go without further contest to the Foreign Relations Committee. I will ask the Senator from Nebraska, having the Philippine government bill in charge, if he will not consent to laying his bill aside temporarily until that question can be disposed of.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That would depend on how long it would take.

Mr. BORAH. I say I do not propose to oppose it, and I do not think anyone else does.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I still am in a dilemma, if the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee insists there is pending a motion which precedes my own. If it does not, I now move that Senate concurrent resolution 9 be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. STONE. Of course, that motion can not be made while the unfinished business is pending, but if the Senator from Nebraska will accede to the request of the Senator from Idaho and agree to lay aside the unfinished business temporarily, I would be very glad, if it can be done without debate, to have both these resolutions referred.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would be very glad to pursue that course, if it can be done without debate.

Mr. LEWIS. As far as I am concerned, I have no observations to make upon the resolution I submitted.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside in order that these resolutions may be referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to that course?

Mr. LIPPITT. Will the Senator from Nebraska also include the resolution which I have offered upon identically the same subject?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will, under the same conditions, without debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. STONE. Except, Mr. President, I want to say, after the remark of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that he consents to the reference of the resolution at this time and in this way to the Committee on Foreign Relations under the impression or expectation that it is to be taken up and disposed of to-morrow morning by the Foreign Relations Committee, that may or may not be correct. I would not like to have the Senator give consent, as he says he does, under any misapprehension.

Mr. BORAH. Permit me to ask a question of the Senator from Missouri, who is chairman of the committee. Will he concede that we shall take it up to-morrow and dispose of it when we may?

Mr. STONE. I concede that to-morrow is the day of meeting of the Foreign Relations Committee. There is a mass of matter before the committee. The Senator from Idaho being a member of the committee can call it up if he wishes, but what disposition the committee will make of it I am not authorized or prepared to assert, nor do I think the Senator from Illinois or the Senator from Idaho can do that. It will be for the committee.

Mr. BORAH. Very well, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Permit me to say that the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Idaho may call it up if the Senator from Missouri does not lay it before the committee, but there is another remedy in case that is not done. So I will not object to the request of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have asked the unanimous consent of the Senate that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to laying aside the Philippine government bill temporarily? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. LIPPITT. That has been done, has it not?

Mr. STONE. It is done now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is now temporarily laid aside. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. I now move that Senate concurrent resolution No. 9 be committed to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so referred.

Mr. STONE. Let us see. Wait a moment. Did the Senator move that the Senate concur in the resolution?

Mr. LEWIS. The resolution submitted by myself is a concurrent one. I now am moving to have the resolution introduced by myself sent to the Committee on Foreign Relations, but it is a concurrent resolution, as distinguished from the resolution offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT], which is a Senate resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the concurrent resolution being referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations? If not, it will be so referred.

Mr. STONE. Now, I ask that the resolution offered by the Senator from Rhode Island, which has been the subject of consideration this morning, be likewise referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, I ask that the Philippine government bill be again laid before the Senate.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I believe the time has now come when the Senate can consider the committee amendments. I ask that the first one be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the first amendment of the Committee on the Philippines.

The SECRETARY. On Page 5, line 10, strike out the words "polygamous or plural marriages are forever prohibited" and insert:

Contracting of polygamous or plural marriages hereafter is prohibited.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be adopted.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 15, strike out the words:

That the rule of taxation in said islands shall be uniform.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection——

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; I want to ask the Senator having the bill in charge why that provision is stricken out?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It was done for the reason that the provision would possibly invalidate certain lines of taxation which have been in force in the Philippine Islands for some time. It is also in line with the policy of a number of States which recently have withdrawn that prohibition from their constitutions. It will make no change in the policy of the Philippine Islands, because heretofore that limitation has not restrained the lawmaking power.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course I am in favor of any legislation that will enhance the interests of the Filipinos or of the islands. I wish that this bill referred only to legislation. I could heartily support nearly all the provisions in it, and in fact I might say I would even go further and grant them a still greater degree of self-government; but in doing so, Mr. President, I do not believe we ought by an act of Congress to lay it down as a rule "that the rule of taxation in said island shall be uniform" or "shall not be uniform." I think any legislation that we pass here affecting taxation in the islands ought to follow the line of our own laws and Constitution.

I believe we ought to announce to the Philippine people that taxation should be uniform, and I thought when I read the bill first before it was acted upon by the committee that that was one of the good provisions of the bill. I am doubtful of the wisdom of striking this provision from the bill. I believe, Mr. President, it ought to be in the bill, because I believe that no matter what country it is, whether the Filipinos or any other people, it ought to be taxed uniformly. There must be some reason other than that which has been stated by the chairman, and, if the chairman really has that information at hand, I would for one like to have him give it to the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, of course it should not be understood that the striking out of this line will be an instruction to the legislative power in the Philippine Islands to make taxation without any regard to uniformity. But it is a new provision. The legislative power of the Philippine Islands heretofore under the authority of Congress has not been restricted by such a limitation. For instance, they have exempted from taxation the property of very poor people there. That would not be possible under a limitation of this sort. There are some forms of taxation which in their nature are not uniform. I thought I could put my hand upon it; I have not been able at the moment to do so, but to put this provision in the act would compel the repeal of taxation laws which have been in effect in the Philippine Islands for many years. They have been inherited in part I suppose from the Spanish régime. So the striking out of this provision creates no new condition in the Philippine Islands, but permits them to run along as they have in the past with a gentle and very mild form of taxation.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. I will ask if the provision of taxation in the islands in regard to uniformity is not a part of the organic act.

Mr. SMOOT. I myself was going to ask whether it was in the organic act. If so, of course then it would not be necessary to put it in the bill. But if it is not a part of the organic act it should be here of course, if that should be the future policy of our Government in passing laws for those people.

Mr. STERLING. I hold in my hand the act "temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," and one provision is "that the rule of taxation in said islands shall be uniform."

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President, if it is in the organic act, I have no objection whatever to having it stricken out. That is the very question I was going to propound to the chairman of the committee when the Senator from South Dakota interrupted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The next amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, line 22, strike out the word "city" and insert "cities."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, line 22, strike out the word "Manila," insert the words "Cebu, Iloilo, and Zamboanga."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, lines 7 to 10, strike out the words "prior to the 13th day of August, 1898, held the office of captain municipal, gobernadorcillo, alcalde, tenientes, cabeza de barangay, or member of any ayuntamiento" and insert "under existing law are legal voters and have exercised the right of suffrage."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to make an inquiry in regard to the amendment in italics, "under existing law are legal voters and have exercised the right of suffrage." I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska whether that means that they must possess both qualifications—those of legal voters and that they have exercised already the right of suffrage—before they are entitled to vote?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The clause in question as it was originally placed in the bill was merely a repetition of existing law, which gives to any man the right to vote provided he has held one of the unpronounceable offices named in the paragraph. Instead of repeating that, it was thought wise to insert a provision which in substance is that a man should be allowed to vote who heretofore has exercised the right of suffrage. It is merely to simplify the provision.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the chairman of the committee state to the Senate just what offices these are that are being stricken out? It is as clear as mud to me.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They are for the most part merely municipal offices or offices which correspond to justice of the peace or small tribunals in this country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, after line 16, insert:

(d) Those to whom the privilege of suffrage may be granted by the Philippine Legislature.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On the same page, line 26, strike out the word "Bataan" and insert the word "Bulacan."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, line 1, strike out the word "Bulacan" and insert the word "Bataan."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, line 3, strike out the word "Cavite" and insert the word "Laguna."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On the same page, lines 3 and 4, strike out the word "Laguna" and insert the word "Cavite."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, line 20, after the words "nineteen hundred and," strike out the word "fifteen" and insert the word "sixteen," so as to read:

The first election under the provisions of this act shall be held on the first Tuesday of June, 1916, and there shall be chosen at such election one senator from each senate district for a term of two years and one for four years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, line 24, after the word "receive" insert the words "until otherwise provided by the Philippine Legislature."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 17, line 1, after the word "services" insert the words "of $2,000 and $1,500, respectively."

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Nebraska a little further as to the advisability of a provision like this. The section provides for annual sessions of the legislature, and then provides for special sessions which may be called by the Governor General. Does not the Senator think that an annual salary of $2,000 for senators and $1,500 for representatives in the Philippine Legislature is a little excessive, and that a better method of providing compensation for them would be a per diem compensation with a limitation as to the number of days of the session?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the testimony before the committee indicated that the members of the assembly already receive a compensation which approximates the $1,500 named in the bill, and it was not thought wise to make any change in that. On the other hand, the committee did not think it wise to leave in the bill the provision that they should receive a compensation to be ascertained by law, because there might be a disposition to unduly raise their salaries. The salaries of the senators are made slightly higher than those of the lower house, and I think they should be, considering the fact that they represent a larger territory and also because of the fact that they have other duties than legislative duties.

Of course the committee were not well informed as to the cost of living and as to the question whether men of good ability could be secured for this service at a lower salary, but in order not to disturb existing conditions and permit them to receive substantially what they have received in the past the amount was left as stated in the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, it is my impression that the amount which they are receiving now is about $2,000 to $2,500 each. It is a per diem of ₱30—$15—a day while they are in session. The bill as introduced at the last session provided for $2,000 for representatives and $2,500 for senators. My impression is that this session it was introduced for the same amounts and we changed it. I do not see any change indicated in the bill, but evidently the amount is lower than it was in the bill which was in this body in the last Congress. That is not a large amount. They have to come great distances; transportation there is not cheap and is very difficult. A great deal is overland; a great deal is over paths instead of good roads. We thought, all things considered, that $2,000 and $1,500 would not be out of the way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 2, to strike out the words "ascertained by law."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 17, line 22, after the word "who," insert "in case he shall then not approve."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the same is agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, line 16, after the words "nineteen hundred and," strike out "fifteen" and insert "sixteen," so as to read:

SEC. 21. That the qualified electors of the Philippine Islands shall, on the first Tuesday in June, 1916, and at the general elections thereafter provided for the election of senators and representatives to the Philippine Legislature, elect two Resident Commissioners to the United States, who shall hold their office for a term of four years beginning with the first Monday in the month of December following their election, and who shall be entitled to an official recognition as such by all departments upon presentation to the President of a certificate of election by the Governor General of said Islands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. That concludes the committee amendments, the Chair is informed by the clerks at the desk.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I am not certain but it will be necessary to change the language on page 13, lines 10 and 11, and I will take the liberty of reserving an exception there when the bill gets into the Senate for further conference with the chairman.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not understand that the amendments in the preamble of the bill have been agreed to. That comes later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the question of the preamble will come after the passage of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that is the case under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for a question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to ask the Senator about section 30, page 29, of the bill, which covers the matter of jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States in cases of appeal. The language is:

That the Supreme Court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to review, revise, reverse, modify, or affirm the final judgments and decrees of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands in all actions, cases, causes, and proceedings now pending therein or hereafter determined thereby in which the Constitution or any statute, treaty, title, right, or privilege of the United States is involved.

That language is all right so far as it applies to the Constitution or a statute or treaty, but it seems to me that the language is inappropriate as applied to the further expression "title, right, or privilege of the United States." What, I presume, is meant is a title, right, or privilege claimed under the United States.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. I referred to that the other day. It seems to me what was intended is the Constitution or any statute, treaty, right, or privilege under the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; or statute.

Mr. KENYON. There is something evidently missing.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It should be "in which the Constitution or any statute or treaty of the United States is involved or any title, right, or privilege claimed under the Constitution or any statute or any treaty of the United States."

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It certainly does not mean a case where the right of the United States is involved or the privilege of the United States is involved. What does the Senator from Nebraska say about that?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think that is merely a reenactment of the organic act. I was endeavoring to see if that is not correct or whether the language is inaccurate. I think, perhaps, I can turn to it in a moment.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, following the language used in our own legislation, it would be "which the Constitution or any statute treaty or right or title under the Constitution or statute is involved or any right, title, or privilege under the Constitution or statute of the United States." It is undoubtedly an inadvertence.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think so.

Mr. CLAPP. Even if it be in the organic law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Was it in the organic law?

Mr. CLAPP. I do not know; but we should follow the usual language used in our own Constitution.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. For example, I have before me now the language used with reference to appeals from decisions of the highest court of the State. That language is section 237 of the code:

A final judgment or decree in any suit in the highest court of a State in which a decision in the suit could be had, where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of or an authority exercised under the United States, and the decision is against their validity; or where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of or an authority exercised under any State on the ground of their being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision is in favor of their validity; or where any title, right, privilege, or immunity—

The word "immunity" is also omitted—or where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the Constitution, or any treaty or statute of or commission held or authority exercised under the United States.

Mr. CLAPP. I suggest that the matter be passed over until the language can be formulated in accordance with the custom with reference to our own laws. I do not think there is any question about this being an inadvertence.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I find that I am correct—that section 30, to which the Senator calls my attention, is a reenactment of section 10 of the organic act.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Still the language is unfortunate and inappropriate even in the organic act, because what is intended evidently is only to include a case where a title or right or privilege is claimed by somebody under the United States. It is not a title or right or privilege of the United States, but of some person or corporation claimed under the Constitution or the laws or a treaty of the United States. That obviously is what is intended, and the bill ought to be made to conform to it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, it would be a statute of the United States or a treaty of the United States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Or a title.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No.

Mr. CLAPP. It would be a right, privilege, or title claimed under the United States. There is not any question but that the use of this language must have been an inadvertence in the first instance. I suggest that the matter be passed over temporarily until the proper language can be framed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I notice in the bill there has been an inadvertence in the fixing of a certain date; and I desire to move to strike out, on page 20, line 12, the words "first Monday in December, 1915," and to insert in lieu thereof "4th day of March, 1917." This language relates to the time that the two Resident Commissioners to the Congress of the United States shall hold office; that is the time when their commissions expire. These words were placed in the bill two years ago and are entirely inapplicable now, because the year 1915 has passed. It seems to me the date for the expiration of the office of these commissioners should be the end of the term for which they were elected. For that reason I move the amendment which I have suggested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUGHES in the chair). The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, lines 12 and 13, it is proposed to strike out the word "first Monday in December, 1915," and to insert the words "4th day of March, 1917," so as to read:

The present two Resident Commissioners shall hold office until the 4th day of March, 1917.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 12, after the word "prohibited," it is proposed to insert:

That no intoxicating drink or drug shall be manufactured for sale or gift, imported for sale or gift, or sold or offered for sale or gift for use as a beverage.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I am informed that since the Philippine Islands came into the possession of the United States liquor has been sold or is being permitted to be sold there in what we call saloons. I am also informed that in no period prior to the time the United States became the owner of those islands was there any liquor sold in saloons in the islands. I am further informed that the Philippine people can not be considered as a drinking people or as a people who care for intoxicating liquors as a beverage. I think it is now our duty at least to leave the islands in the condition in which we took them. I think that both from a moral and economic standpoint we should say, and say explicitly, that the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors shall be prohibited in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. President, I am glad to be able to say that I come from a State that has never had within its borders, since it became a State, a saloon. We have for more than a quarter of a century had prohibition in the State of North Dakota, and discussing it from an economic standpoint only, it has been a saving to the people of that State of many millions of dollars. We are trying all over the United States to get rid of the saloons. It is a question that is being discussed in every State of this Union; it is a question with which we must deal not only in the individual States but in the entire Nation; and it seems to me that now is a good time to provide in this bill that no liquor shall be sold or manufactured in the Philippine Islands; especially so, when the Filipinos themselves say that they do not care to have the liquor traffic going on in the islands.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. GRONNA. I shall be very glad to yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. The regulation of the question to which the Senator refers, namely, the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Philippine Islands, is now left to the Philippine people themselves and to the Philippine Assembly, is it not?

Mr. GRONNA. I suppose all these regulations, to some extent, are left with the Philippine Assembly.

Mr. HARDWICK. I mean does not the Senator know that under the law as it now stands the Philippine people themselves, through their own assembly, can prohibit the sale of liquor if they so desire?

Mr. GRONNA. To a certain extent that is true, Mr. President; but I simply want to put the islands in the same condition in which they were prior to the time the American people took possession of them.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. GRONNA. I gladly yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should like to suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that the plan of government which the United States is now proposing to give to the Filipino, believing that it will probably be the prototype by which the Filipino will shape his own government when he becomes independent, ought to contain everything that the American Congress thinks will be for the best interests of the Filipino; and, while the Filipino Legislature have the right to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquor in the Philippine Islands, I agree with the Senator from North Dakota that it would be wise for the American Congress to start them out without this handicap of the saloon.

I sincerely hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota will be adopted, because the liquor traffic is a handicap, and the people of the Philippines, who are struggling to establish a government, are entitled to this assistance. The Senator's amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. GRONNA. I thank the distinguished Senator from Mississippi. Mr. President, I do not wish further to delay the proceedings of the Senate. I simply ask for a vote on my amendment, unless some other Senator wishes to discuss it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I was out of the Senate temporarily when the amendment submitted by the Senator from North Dakota was read from the desk, but I want to say that I hope the amendment will be agreed to. I had the pleasure of spending some time in the Philippine Islands, and, in my judgment, there is no better time than now to give them prohibition. There are not many saloons now in the various towns of the islands; there are a few in Manila and perhaps in some of the other cities, and the time to take action is before the saloons are opened and before the people get the drinking habit. The Filipinos are not a drinking people. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA].

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hollis	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Hughes	O'Gorman	Smoot
Beckham	Husting	Overman	Sterling

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am authorized to say in behalf of the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], who is absent, that he is confined to his house through illness.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. MCCUMBER] is absent from the city, but is paired with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. STERLING. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota] is unavoidably detained from the Senate Chamber on account of sickness.

Mr. CATRON. My colleague [Mr. FALL] is detained from the Senate on account of sickness.

Mr. HOLLIS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is absent on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA].

Mr. GRONNA. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I desire to say a word in regard to this amendment, inasmuch as few Senators are here now who were present at the time it was proposed. This is an amendment to the Philippine bill which proposes to prohibit the manufacture, sale, or importation of intoxicating liquors of all sorts. My first objection to it is that this is a bill to authorize the Filipino people to legislate for themselves; but the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota is legislation that Congress heretofore has never attempted to impose upon the Philippine people. In so far from that, Mr. President, the whole course of American Government in the Philippine Islands has been to recognize local customs, to recognize existing conditions, to interfere as little as possible with the habits of the people, and to make them content under the present conditions.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to the organic act under which we are now operating in the Philippine Islands. It provided at the opening:

That the action of the President of the United States in creating the Philippine Commission and authorizing said commission to exercise the powers of government to the extent and in the manner and form and subject to the regulation and control set forth in the instructions of the President to the Philippine Commission, dated April 7, 1900, * * * is hereby approved, ratified, and confirmed, and until otherwise provided by law the said islands shall continue to be governed as thereby and herein provided.

What were the instructions of the President of the United States to the commission which he sent out to the Philippine Islands? Let me quote:

In all the forms of government and administrative provisions which they are authorized to prescribe the commission shall bear in mind that the government which they are establishing is designed not for our satisfaction or for the expression of our theoretical views, but for the happiness, peace, and prosperity of the people of the Philippine Islands; and the measures adopted should be made to conform to their customs, their habits, and even their prejudices to the fullest extent consistent with the accomplishment of the indispensable requisites of just and effective government.

Mr. President, under that instruction of President McKinley, which now has practically the force of law by reason of being included in the organic act, the people of the United States have permitted to continue in the Philippine Islands some 44,000 establishments where the native drinks of the Philippine people are sold as groceries are sold, such drinks as vino, such drinks as basi, tuba, and topuy. This amendment will make it impossible either to manufacture or sell those drinks to which the Philippine people for generations have been accustomed.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. Undoubtedly the Senator from Nebraska is more familiar with the conditions in the Philippines than am I, but I have been informed on very good authority that the Philippine people are not a drinking people; that they do not care for the saloon nor do they care for liquor; that the Filipino people are an abstemious people, a sober class of people; and I thought, Mr. President, that it was only the duty of Congress to enact in this provision in this bill, which, in reality, is only an addition to or a plank in the constitution of the Filipino people. The Senator from Nebraska, I suppose, will not maintain that Congress has no right to adopt such an amendment as this. Is that the view taken by the Senator?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Oh, no; I am not claiming that Congress has no such right; but I say that this provision is entirely inconsistent with this bill, which proposes to give to the Filipino people a larger measure of legislation, while the amendment of the Senator proposes to take away from them some powers they have heretofore possessed.

Mr. President, I may say that the Senator is correct when he declares that the Filipino people are not a drinking people in the sense of becoming drunkards. They drink their native wines, as they eat their fruit and their other foods, in moderation; drunkenness is not an evil in the Philippine Islands among the Philippine people, and the testimony before the Philippines Committee indicated that fact and led the committee to reject the amendment which the Senator from North Dakota proposes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not yield for a speech, only for a question.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am not going to make a speech. I only want to make a suggestion to the Senator from Nebraska: The same objection which he urges against the adoption of this amendment or one similar to it might be urged against the adoption of a prohibition law affecting the States of the Union. Whisky has been sold in some of the States for 100 years or more. There is, however, this further fact to be considered: While the Filipinos may not be a drinking people now, if the saloons are permitted to be opened there under American control and our civilization shall be forced upon them, the appetite will be created as a business enterprise. I think it is a duty of this Congress to protect the people of the Philippine Islands against such an insidious enemy.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I did not yield to the Senator for a speech; I only yielded for a question.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to ask the Senator from Nebraska what is the nature of the drinks which he says are peculiarly Filipino drinks, and what is the nature of the liquor which the Filipinos use? Is it such as is ordinarily sold in American saloons?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is not. There is some sale of American drinks in the Philippine Islands—some sale of beer and some sale of whisky—and some beer is made in the Philippine Islands and was made there for a great many years under the Spanish occupation, but it has not been consumed by the Filipino people to any extent, nor is whisky consumed by the Filipino people. The amendment which the Senator from North Dakota has offered would strike down, as I have said, all of the small retail establishments, such as grocery stores and provision stores, where three or four kinds of native drinks are sold. For instance, it would destroy the trade in tuba, which is a drink taken directly from the coconut palm, I think, a drink which at the time it is extracted is absolutely without any alcoholic effect, but which gradually becomes stronger. It would strike down the trade in basi, which, I believe, is made from rice, and would strike down the trade in tapuy, which, I think, is a provincial drink used only in part of the islands. I think that the amendment which the Senator offers is so sweeping, so destructive, as to strike at the very habits of the Filipino people when there is no evil to be struck at. I think it would cause resentment and cause a great deal of disturbance in the islands.

There is a lesser evil which would grow out of it, to which I may refer. It would destroy one-sixth of the Philippine revenues, and they are not very large, and they are having a hard time, as they are a poor people, in getting on as it is. They derive from customs duties at the present time something like ₱300,000 a year on imports into the islands, chiefly from the United States.

Mr. BORAH. From imports of liquor?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I presume so; from imports of wine and beer, and probably whisky. It would destroy an internal revenue amounting to something over ₱3,000,000, ₱3,832,000 in 1914, which is an internal-revenue tax on the 44,000 retail establishments where these native drinks are sold.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator if he knows how many saloons are in operation in the Philippine Islands at the present time?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, I have heard that the saloons in the Philippine Islands are practically confined to Manila and to two or three other towns. Probably the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], who has recently visited the islands, if not the saloons, may be able to tell us. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will state that my understanding is that in nearly all the large cities and towns—and there are a number of large towns in the islands—where there is an American population there are saloons in limited number, but not to the extent that they are found in this country.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the Philippine people may not be a drinking people now, but, if the American saloon is allowed to prevail there for very long, they will probably become a drinking people.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator made the remark that this was passed on by the committee. I do not understand that it was considered by the committee. It certainly was not while I was present in the committee room.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should say to the Senator from Minnesota that this bill was considered by the committee at the previous session of Congress, before the committee was favored by the addition of the Senator from Minnesota. It is very true that it was not considered at the recent session.

Mr. CLAPP. At this session we did not consider it; but, as I understand the situation out there, the Filipinos themselves are not what might be called a drinking people. The drink that they make is consumed, I understand, very largely by the so-called non-Christian tribes. I should have no hesitation at all, so long as we assume to govern these people, about withholding from the Filipinos the right to traffic in liquor with the less intelligent, less civilized portion of their population.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Nebraska stated a moment ago that to impose this limitation upon the Filipinos would not be consistent with the bill which we are engaged in considering, and which has for its purpose the enlargement of the rights and privileges of that people. The Senator recognizes, of course, that in the bill itself we have denied to the Filipinos the right to legislate upon a great variety of subjects. Here are 14 or 15 paragraphs devoted to one purpose—to limit the power of the Filipino government in legislating respecting themselves.

For instance, the Senator has just had adopted an amendment to this bill which prohibits polygamy, in the future, at least. We are in that way curtailing the right of the Filipino people to determine what is best for themselves. We prohibit the legislature there from making any law respecting the establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise of it. We are prohibiting the legislature there from using any of the public money for the benefit or support of any religious organization. We are prohibiting slavery. We are providing that no law shall be passed that will restrict or abridge the freedom of the press; and so I might proceed almost indefinitely.

I mention this in order to suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that the prohibition of the liquor traffic is entirely consistent with the theory of the bill, if we believe it is not wise for the Filipino Legislature to authorize the liquor traffic; and it seems to me that it is a question for the judgment of the Members of the Senate with regard to the best interests of these people. If we believe in prohibition, we ought to impose it upon the Filipino people. If we do not believe in prohibition, then we ought not, I assume, to impose it.

For myself, I very much favor the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota, for that is the condition that I would have prevail in those islands. In doing it we have pursued exactly the same course that the committee has pursued in regard to all of these important matters which constitute a limitation upon the power of the Filipino Legislature.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am very glad to yield, although I recognize that I have no right to yield.

Mr. LIPPITT. I simply wish to ask the Senator a question, with the permission of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator says he thinks that if we are in favor of prohibition we would have the right to prohibit the sale of liquor in the Philippines, and that if we are not in favor of prohibition we would not have that right.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I did not say that.

Mr. LIPPITT. I so understood the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. I said that if we are in favor of prohibition, those of us who are in favor of prohibition ought to vote to impose that policy on the Philippine Islands. Those of us who are not in favor of prohibition might well hesitate before they would vote to establish there a policy which they refuse to establish at home.

Mr. LIPPITT. I was only going to suggest to the Senator that, inasmuch as this Senate has declined to impose prohibition on our own country, it would seem rather inconsistent to impose prohibition on a foreign country, and one so far off.

Mr. CUMMINS. I supposed we had not declined as yet.

Mr. LIPPITT. This particular Senate, it is true, has not; but its predecessor did so decline.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator mean with regard to the District of Columbia bill?

Mr. LIPPITT. No; I think there was a measure before the Senate providing for national prohibition. I will say that I am corrected. I find that such a proposal was made and was referred to a committee, and the committee never reported it, which is a very strong demonstration of the fact that the Senate was not in favor of it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator refer to the proposed constitutional amendment?

Mr. LIPPITT. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think I can give the Senator from Rhode Island reasonable assurance that the committee to which it is now referred will report it and that the Senator will have an opportunity to vote upon it before very long.

Mr. LIPPITT. That may be, Mr. President; but the fact remains that while the subject has been suggested to this Senate as applicable to our own people we have so far declined to take action upon it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the question which the Senator from Iowa started to ask me has grown into rather a large affair. The gist of his point is that it is inconsistent for us, while imposing certain limitations on the Filipino Legislature, to refuse to impose this limitation. Now, the Senator from Iowa is in error. All of the limitations imposed upon the Filipino Legislature by the bill now before the Senate are in accord with existing limitations in the control of the islands; but the prohibition amendment which is offered by the Senator from North Dakota is a new and stringent limitation, tending to interfere with and uproot their local customs, tending to destroy their revenues, and throw the islands into confusion.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska permit a question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. There is nothing in the organic act which imports or gives it the nature of inerrancy, is there? What is the objection, even though this provision is not in the original draft, to perfecting it by putting this in the proposed act?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. My objection I have stated, Mr. President. It is that it will inevitably result in social confusion in the islands by attempting to enforce upon them something which it will require armies of officers to do. It tends to destroy their innocent habits of life, which involve no evil of drunkenness. It destroys one-sixth of the revenues of the Philippine Islands, and it strikes at an evil which does not exist there.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the Senator think that the saloon business there is as sacred and as highly prized by the Filipino as the right to a multiplicity of wives, or polygamy?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This does not limit itself to the saloon evil. There are saloons existing in only five or six of the leading towns, and only very few in them. This amendment, however, strikes at 46,000 institutions, little provision stores, which are not saloons in the American sense.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will it interrupt the Senator for me to ask him a further question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Not at all.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Are not the drinks sold by these little stores of the same nature and character as the stuff which is sold in the saloons?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It will not disturb the ordinary trade of the little store. It will only prohibit the little store from dealing in this poison. No; it will not hurt the business of the little storekeeper. On the contrary, it will promote the legitimate business of the little store, because the money that would be spent for the poisonous drink would probably be spent for groceries for the family use if the drinks were not on sale.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is this difference: The Filipino comes into one of those 46,000 stores and buys his cigarettes, puts down a cent, gets a drink of vino or tuba, and goes out. He goes there to buy his provisions. It is not a saloon in the American sense at all. If this amendment proposed to strike only at the few saloons that have been brought in by Americans, and that exist there largely by reason of American patronage, that would be a different thing; but the amendment goes entirely too far. It strikes at the very habits and customs of the Philippine people, and it will inevitably breed disorder.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Under the existing law in force in the Philippine Islands, I suppose the Legislature of the Philippine Islands now is perfectly competent to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors if it pleases to do so?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is entirely competent.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will ask the Senator whether or not any sentiment that the Senator knows anything about has developed in the Philippine Islands in favor of prohibition?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not think it has been an issue. I am not prepared to answer, because I have never heard anything on the subject; but such witnesses as we had before the committee indicated that it was not an evil existing there among the Philippine people.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. May I suggest to the Senator that there is a prohibitory law there now as to the non-Christian tribes, passed by the Philippine Assembly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is a law?

Mr. KENYON. There is a law there now. All this is doing is imposing upon the Christians what they have imposed upon the heathen.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator mean by that a law which forbids the sale of liquor to uncivilized tribes; or what does he mean?

Mr. KENYON. To what are termed the non-Christian tribes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The uncivilized tribes?

Mr. KENYON. Well, yes; as we commonly call them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is in line with the legislation which we have always passed in this country to prohibit traffic in intoxicating liquors with the Indians.

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But that law does not apply, as I understand, to the civilized and intelligent people of the islands.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, are we to understand from the statement of the Senator from Iowa that the only way to get a drink in the Philippine Islands is to get religion?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know. The Senator from Iowa can answer that question.

Mr. KENYON. I think I stated before that the only way to get a drink there is to become a Christian.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, before I take my seat I want to say simply a word about the proposed amendment.

I take it that the Congress of the United States does not desire to make itself ridiculous, even upon the subject of prohibition. If we put this provision into the proposed legislation, it will be absolutely meaningless. What penalty is prescribed for its violation?

Suppose we write this provision into the law and somebody in the Philippine Islands continues to sell intoxicating liquor and somebody else buys intoxicating liquor. What is going to happen? We will have simply a moral principle in this law, by way of gentle admonition, that "no intoxicating drink or drug shall be manufactured for sale or gift, imported for sale or gift, or sold or offered for sale or gift for use as a beverage." There is no penalty attached to it and no method of enforcing it. It is an absolutely meaningless thing. It is not even a limitation upon the Legislature of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, what the Senator from Utah says is true. It is simply an expression, I take it, largely of opinion and sentiment. But what he has just said with regard to the effect of this amendment, if it were adopted, is also true of the amendment the committee has proposed, and which has been adopted by the Senate, with regard to polygamy. There is no penalty for it. There is no punishment provided. I take it that it is simply a proclamation that we do not believe in polygamy, ordinarily speaking.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; what the Senator says is probably true, that neither of these provisions amount to anything. But what earthly sense is there in solemnly writing into a law which is supposed to have some meaning and some effect a statement of this kind, which is simply a declaration of our opinion about a moral principle?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senate, as I understand, has already adopted the amendment proposed by the committee prohibiting polygamy without prescribing any penalty for the violation of it. Is that true?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is no reason why we should keep on loading down the law with provisions of that sort.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I will suggest to the Senator from Utah that if he really believes this amendment ought to be adopted, it will take but a very few moments to add a penalty.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let the law be complete, then. Let us not vote upon a proposition of this kind. Let us frame a law that will cover the subject, or let us leave it alone.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] has demanded the yeas and nays on his amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, a moment ago I asked the Senator from Nebraska something about some of the drinks which are peculiarly Filipino drinks. I find in the hearings some evidence which throws some light upon his matter, and I will read it:

> The CHAIRMAN. How about the habit of the people in regard to drinking? Do they drink to excess? I am speaking of the Moros.
> Col. YOUNG. Not at all. They have a drink there called vino, which is a native drink. If a white man drinks it it sets him crazy. The Moro will not drink it at all, but he will sell it to other people. You can buy enough to make everybody drunk for 5 cents. All the Moro wants is to get the 5 cents, but he will not drink it himself.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. What is it made of?
> Col. YOUNG. It is made of the milk of the coconut. They put it out in the sun and let it stand there. Then the Moro will put anything he happens to have into it, a little alcohol, for instance.
>
> Senator LIPPITT. A second time?
> Col. YOUNG. A second time, or tobacco or anything else.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. While you were there did you permit them American drinks, whisky and beer?
>
> Col. YOUNG. No. I never saw a Moro drunk in my life. They do not drink. I have heard that there have been cases of that kind, but they just do not drink—

And so forth.

Mr. President, I only want to say that my interest in the proposed amendment arises out of the fact that I should like to be helpful in preventing what is known as the American saloon from going into the Philippine Islands. If the amendment could be so drawn as to distinguish between those drinks which are peculiarly Filipino drinks and such as come under the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska, I should feel considerably as the Senator does in regard to leaving the matter for their determination, as they seem to have control of it and indulge in drink very little. I do think, however, that as the American saloon is entering that field, it is the business of the American people to keep that singular instrument of evil from among those people. It was not there, as I understand, before we went there. It has gone into the Philippine Islands with American civilization; and I feel quite sure that we would do the right thing if we would prevent its spreading and establishing itself throughout the Philippine Islands.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Idaho a question?

Mr. BORAH. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUMMINS. Has the Senator from Idaho observed—and it is entirely in harmony with what he has just stated—that under this bill it would not be possible for the Filipino Legislature to exclude importations of intoxicating liquor from the United States?

Mr. BORAH. It would not be possible?

Mr. CUMMINS. It would not be possible.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I understand that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Has the Senator noticed that?

Mr. BORAH. I understand that to be true; yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. So that we could flood that country with our liquor, even though they were strongly opposed to the practice.

Mr. BORAH. It might be, Mr. President, that it would be well to leave the Filipino to his habits and to the tastes and appetites which he has heretofore acquired. It might be well not to undertake by law to deal with those things. Perhaps it would be wiser to deal with their peculiar drinks in an educational and moral way. But I do think that we are under every obligation, from a moral and from a religious standpoint, to prohibit what is known as the American saloon from going into the Philippine Islands. It is bad enough here at home; surely it ought not to be permitted to establish itself among a primitive people.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if there is one fact which has been established by the nations of the earth, it is that the traffic and sale of intoxicating liquor increases the consumption of it by the people, and the consumption of it by the people is one of the most insidious and deleterious evils with which society is afflicted.

The fact that the importation of this poison is a source of revenue to the Filipino is no argument whatever in its favor. If it is necessary to raise revenue by direct taxation, it would be very much cheaper for the Filipino to run his government in that way than it would be to pay for it in the form of a revenue from the importation of this drug. It is the same old story over again the world over. Whatever is profitable in dollars and cents is of more concern and importance than that which is best for the human being.

The United States has taken over the Philippine Islands for the purpose of developing those people—not for the good of America, not for the profit to be enjoyed by certain enterprises, but for the benefit of the Filipino. He may not be a drinking man now; but we all know that if he is to be held and controlled by the Americans and the American saloon is to be established there the appetite will be cultivated; it will grow, and the enormous profits which are reaped from the business will cause it to spread rapidly over the islands.

I believe it is the duty of this Congress to start the Filipino on the right road. If this amendment carries with it no penalty for its violation, let it go for the moral effect it will have upon the Filipino. It can not do any harm. Every influence that will flow from it will tend to discourage, if no more, the traffic in liquor. It is a condemnation by the American Congress of that miserable business.

I am in favor of destroying the liquor business in America, and if I can not strike it in the face I will hit in the back. If I can not manifest my disapprobation and condemnation of it in any other way, I will hamstring it. I want to embarrass it, because I regard it as the greatest enemy of the human race on earth to-day. It has blighted more lives, it has frustrated more ambitions, it has caused more scalding tears to fall from the eyes of woman than every other evil among men. I believe it is the duty of this Congress, working in the interest of the Filipino, to bring to bear upon him every influence that tends to uplift and benefit him in the management of his own government.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to offer an amendment to this amendment; after the word "beverage" to add:

But this shall not apply to native wines and beverages commonly known as "vino" and the other three which have been named.

Second. That anyone violating this law shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of $100 or imprisonment for six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

I will add, at the suggestion of Senators, "not more than $100 and imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I was in hopes that the Members of the Senate would have an opportunity to vote directly upon this question. It may be true, Mr. President, that the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Idaho would to a certain extent protect the Filipino people from the saloon, but I have been informed that the liquors described in the Senator's amendment are as intoxicating as any liquors manufactured in the United States. Mr. President, it would not stop the trafficking in intoxicating liquors if the amendment of the Senator from Idaho were adopted.

I sincerely hope that the Senator from Idaho will let us have an opportunity to vote upon this question directly, and if the amendment which I propose shall be defeated, I shall be very glad to see that we at least protect the Filipino people to the extent of prohibiting the shipment of intoxicating liquors into the Philippine Islands.

But I can not accept the Senator's amendment; nor can I vote for it without having first had an opportunity to vote for the amendment which I presented, which I know would ultimately have the effect of making the Philippine Islands the same as some of the States of the Union—a prohibition territory—and that the trafficking in and manufacturing of intoxicating liquors will be done away with.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota offered an amendment here which, so far as it announced the principle, contained a good principle; but the Senator will agree with me that there is nothing quite so futile and so ineffective as a prohibition against the sale of liquor to which there is attached no punishment. There is nothing in the amendment which would cause any man who desired to sell liquor in the Philippines to hesitate for a moment, and if there is anyone who needs to be reminded that there is punishment in the law it is the man who is engaged in the sale of liquor.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Idaho a question. Does not the Senator think that a bill contracted for liquor in the Philippine Islands would be uncollectible if we should pass this amendment? Would not that in itself discourage the operation of saloons in the islands?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it might in a measure discourage it, but now imagine the effect of the discouragement in an open saloon where the business is being carried on from day to day, where the drink is paid for over the counter at the time it is taken, where the man who offers to buy does not have any disposition to impeach the integrity of the contract under which he gets his drink. It might have an effect of disparaging it as between the wholesale dealer and the saloons to some extent, but how utterly futile would that kind of a law be in the United States even when we add the most drastic penalties. The great argument against prohibition in the United States is that by no method or means can you enforce a law, and if you pass a law which has no penalty attached to it at all and put it upon the Philippine people, who have their own peculiar habits and tastes and appetites, of course they will give no consideration to it.

We are doing, in my judgment, as the Senator from Utah suggested, the same thing. We are, to some extent, advertising our ineffective support of prohibition.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The defect the Senator complains of could be cured very well by eliminating from your amendment the exception, those drinks that are excluded from the operation of the law, and impose a penalty for a violation of the law, as in the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. That would meet the Senator's objection.

Mr. BORAH. That should be done, but I think there is much strength in the argument of the Senator from Nebraska, that we ought not to undertake to deal drastically and by punishment without any sentiment being built up in the Philippines in favor of it in the first instance, with those appetites and tastes and habits which have characterized them through years and years.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I rise to ask the Senator from Idaho if he is not willing to divide his amendment? I think the question is divisible anyhow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CUMMINS. That will obviate all the difficulty which has been suggested.

Mr. BORAH. I am quite willing that it should be divided. I mean I am willing to withdraw it until the Senator from North Dakota shall have an opportunity to present his amendment. I do not desire to embarrass it, but I have a great desire to assist in what, I hope, may be effective legislation against introducing into the Philippine Islands the American saloon. I would try in the first instance and until a later day, at least, to confine my legislation to preventing them from acquiring vices not now among them to any marked extent.

Mr. WORKS. I suggest to the Senator from Idaho that his proposed amendment does not reach the saloon at all, to which he very frankly says he is opposed. At least we ought, if possible, to exclude the open saloons from the Philippine Islands. I think in that respect his amendment falls short.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I understand it, these native wines are seldom sold in saloons at all; that is, saloons are not maintained for them, but they are sold in their grocery stores.

Mr. LANE. If the Senator will allow me, I would like to suggest to him that it seems to me the adoption of his amendment would look to the Filipinos as though we were inconsistent. His amendment forbids the importation into the Philippine Islands of wine, beer, and whisky, in behalf of temperance, in behalf of prohibition, as our expression is, to the Filipinos, that we believe it is bad for them, yet at the same time it leaves them to drink vino, which, as can be found by reading an excerpt from somebody's testimony, is a drink of such power that by the expenditure of a nickel you can not only get drunk yourself but you can invite your relatives and friends and get them drunk.

Mr. BORAH. I read that statement. Taking it as an entirety, the writer says that the native was entirely too shrewd to drink the stuff and that he did not drink it.

Mr. LANE. No; he sold it to somebody else.

Mr. BORAH. He sold it to the white man or to Americans.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The testimony quoted from the Army officer who was over there was simply in effect that American soldiers bought about five times as much as the native Filipino would buy. The Filipino who takes a drink there takes a cent's worth. The American soldier takes a nickel's worth. He takes five times as much. It is the old American habit of going to excess. There was no testimony at all to show that Filipinos went to any excess.

Mr. BORAH. If I should withdraw the exception with reference to wine, I sincerely hope that the Senator from North Dakota will add something to his amendment which will make it effective. I have no desire to enact merely a sentiment, because it may be sentimentally popular.

Mr. GRONNA. I was going to say to the Senator from Idaho that I shall be very glad to accept that portion of his amendment which provides for a penalty.

Now, as to why I did not provide for a penalty in the amendment which I offered, it was for the reason that I was told by men who I think ought to know the law that the Filipino Legislature could not prohibit the shipment of intoxicating liquors into the islands. For that reason I offered the provision in accordance with the language used to prohibit polygamy. If the Senator from Idaho will modify his amendment so that it will provide only the penalty, I should be very glad to accept it, and I know that friends who are with me in this movement will also accept it; at least I think they will.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho, I understand, has withdrawn his amendment pending action on the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota. All the Senator from North Dakota has to do is to ask that there be reported as a part of his amendment the language relating to penalties in the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho. Let the Senator just use the penalty without the rest of the language.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that that be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho withdraw his amendment?

Mr. BORAH. For the present I withdraw it, although I will say that I think a little more reflection upon the part of those who are interested would lead to the conclusion that my amendment would make the bill much more acceptable, because it would prohibit and prevent the acquiring of appetites and practices which they have not got. This law will likely be ignored entirely with reference to those habits and appetites which are characteristic of the Filipino people.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss this amendment very much, but it seems to me that the real essence of this question is the fact that in any event we have to trust to the Filipino people and the Philippine government to enforce a law of this kind, if we pass it. It is well known to everybody that the great trouble with the prohibition laws has been the impossibility of enforcing them in communities that are not favorably inclined to them. If we pass this amendment, either with or without the penalty that has been prescribed by the Senator from Idaho, still the ultimate result will have to depend upon the Philippine government to enforce it. You may have a law and you may have a penalty, and if there are not the officers of the law and the various provisions for enforcing it and getting evidence it is a dead letter. We have given to the Philippine people full authority to deal with this question in accordance with their desires. In the organic law now which applies to these islands, in the part of it which was written by President McKinley, he says:

> The measures adopted should be made to conform to their customs, their habits, and even their prejudices, to the fullest extent consistent with the accomplishment of the indispensable requisites of just and effective government.

I quite agree with the Senator from Nebraska that the purpose of this bill is to trust the Filipino people with a larger measure of their self-government. I agree that so far as that is the intention of the bill it carries out the present policy of this Government in the Philippine Islands. It does seem to me that if we are trying to establish the fact whether or not the Filipino people are running their government in a proper method, as near as possible to ideal principles, we can as well trust to them local self-government on the question of the use of liquor as we can in a hundred other points that we are submitting to them for their action and consideration.

I do think it is a little inconsistent for the Senate to impose upon the Filipino people a doctrine that they are not yet ready to impose upon their own people. I do think that to put this law in the statutes and have the Filipino people not in sympathy or the Philippine government not ready to provide the officers and the paraphernalia for carrying it out has a little tendency to bring all the American laws we are making into disrepute. It seems to me, taking those things into consideration, it would be wiser if we did not put this into the law.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should like to ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat. Is the Senator in favor of giving the Filipino the right to govern himself?

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I have occupied some 10 or 12 columns in the RECORD on that subject.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I understand.

Mr. LIPPITT. I would prefer that the Senator should read that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator is complaining that Congress should prescribe for the Filipino in matters of this kind. The Senator says it is inconsistent. I heard the Senator very eloquently and entertainingly on this question, and he took the ground, if I remember correctly, that the Filipino is incapable of self-government and needs the legislative strait-jacket to make him walk in the narrow path.

Mr. LIPPITT. I am sorry that the Senator from Mississippi got that impression of my remarks. What I tried to say, and I hope I did say, was that I thought the experiment, which was once called in Rhode Island the "lively experiment," of giving self-government to the Filipino people up to the point it has now arrived had been a very great success; that it had gone far enough to justify us in hoping that by continuing the same policy for a certain period we might ultimately arrive where the Filipino would be so trained that we could very wisely give him a larger self-government; that perhaps ultimately we might arrive at complete self-government, or whatever you like to use for an expression. I have never said I thought the Filipino people were incapable of being trained for self-government.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I did not say that.

Mr. LIPPITT. I do say I think for the Filipino people it would be unwise at this moment to give them independence. But I think my remarks were perfectly consistent and plain on this subject.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I can not conceive of anything that would help the Filipino more in the development of the capacity for self-government than keeping his body sound and his brain clear and sane. There is no effort on the part of Senators who entertain the views I do to tie the Filipino or to limit him in the development of his own Government and his own civilization after the American Government has withdrawn from the Philippine Islands. It is the purpose of this legislation to give him an idea, to furnish him a plan by which he can organize and build his own civilization. If he wants to go back to the whisky business, if he wants to legalize the whisky traffic after the United States has withdrawn from the islands, that is his affair. I would not proscribe him. I would not limit him in that way; but it is the duty of Congress to help him in so far as Congress can as long as he is a subject and a ward of the Government, and after we turn him loose, then, wishing him Godspeed, let him work out his own salvation.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I ask leave to modify my amendment to strike out that portion of the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho providing for the exception and inserting the clause which provides for a penalty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the amendment as a proviso the following words:

> That anyone violating this law shall upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not more than $100 or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will state as a member of the committee that at the last session of Congress we considered this question quite thoroughly, and we came to the conclusion that we did not believe it was best to insert such a provision in the measure. I think I have voted for prohibition on every occasion where I have had an opportunity. I believe in prohibition as applied to ourselves and as applied to any people who pass upon the matter.

But, Mr. President, when we have no prohibition law in the very territory over which we are exercising exclusive jurisdiction, namely, in the District of Columbia, when we have not adopted prohibition as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, it comes with poor grace from us to enforce prohibition, without their consent, on people who are 7,000 miles from us and with whose habits and customs we are not familiar.

This is not a permanent measure. It is not intended for a permanent measure. We are simply to legislate and prescribe what the Philippine General Assembly shall do for a limited period of time. It does seem to me that to force a change entirely of their customs with respect to this matter is not wise policy. If those people are very desirous of those native drinks, it will be very difficult to enforce the law.

But, Mr. President, the Filipino does not go into an American saloon. In those saloons the price of the drinks are the same as here, I understand, and it is beyond their ability to buy them. That is one of the reasons they do not drink the American whisky.

But the great objection which it seems to me exists to the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota is that we are trying to let those people settle to a large extent their own government and we can not in the temporary occupation that we propose to have under this measure, change their customs, and if we do it would be considered by many a great hardship and wrong.

I have always felt that whenever an alien people attempt to legislate and prescribe limits as to the customs of other people it is hardly fair. These are conditions that exist by reason of their own will. I have not any doubt that the prohibition question will come up in the General Assembly of the Philippines and I have no doubt that they will solve that problem according to the best interests of the Philippine people. We can not consider all the problems and attempt to settle them and fix exactly what they shall do. It seems to me this is a problem which they ought to determine for themselves.

Under those circumstances, Mr. President, I believe that we ought to leave the bill just as it is.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I wish to make one further suggestion with reference to the form of this amendment. I suggested a moment ago that if it were adopted in the language written by the Senator from North Dakota, it would be wholly innocuous, that it could not be enforced because no penalty was prescribed. Now, the Senator has offered an amendment, which reads that anyone violating this law shall upon conviction thereof be punished, and so on. The amendment itself is proposed to be inserted on page 5, line 11, of the bill.

Mr. GRONNA. I have changed that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Where does it come in now?

Mr. GRONNA. It comes in following the word "prohibited," after "polygamy."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then it comes in after line 12?

Mr. GRONNA. After line 12.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Very well. Now let us read the proposed law as it will read if this amendment were inserted. Taking that paragraph, it would read:

That no law shall be made respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, and that the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed; and no religious test shall be required for the exercise of civil or political rights. No public money or property shall ever be appropriated, applied, donated, or used, directly or indirectly, for the use, benefit, or support of any sect, church, denomination, or system of religion, or for the use, benefit, or support of any priest, preacher, minister, or other religious teacher or dignitary or sectarian institution as such. Contracting of polygamous or plural marriages hereafter is prohibited.

That no intoxicating drink or drug shall be manufactured for sale or gift, imported for sale or gift, or sold or offered for sale or gift for use as a beverage; but this shall not apply to or include the native wines and beverages commonly known as vino, tuba, basi, and tapuy.

Which means, of course, that anybody who misuses public moneys or who does any of these other things, including the contracting of polygamous or plural marriages, or the sale of intoxicating liquors, or any of the other things that I have not stopped to read preceding this amendment, would be liable to this penalty, whereas I suppose the Senator means simply to confine it to the sale of intoxicating liquors or drugs.

Mr. President, that shows the utter futility of trying to frame a law in the open Senate in this manner. I will predict to the Senator from North Dakota that if he will still further amend this law so as to make it clear that the penalty applies only to the sale or manufacture of intoxicating liquor, yet the provision has been drawn so hastily that ingenious lawyers will find loopholes through which they can drive a cart and horse. All of which demonstrates the unwisdom of undertaking to legislate in this haphazard way.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say, Mr. President, to the Senator from Utah that of course I expected this to be a new paragraph and that it would apply only to intoxicating liquors and would not apply to anything which the Senator has read.

I will also say to the Senator from Utah that this very amendment itself, in the very same language in which I offered it, has stood the test not only of the State courts but of the Federal courts of the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota can very quickly and very easily obviate the objection of the Senator from Utah by the insertion of the words "with relation to the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors," and I have no doubt he will be willing to do that.

Mr. GRONNA. I am very glad to accept that suggestion.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to say just one word with regard to the position taken by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], which seems to me to be very illogical and unsound. We are dealing with the Filipino people upon the assumption that they are not capable fully of managing their own affairs. It is the very foundation stone of this structure that is being reared with such care and patience. If we believe that with regard to this subject they are not yet capable of self-government or self-disposition, it becomes our duty to supply that weakness and do what we can to make society there stable and sober.

But the Senator from Colorado forgets apparently the suggestion I made a few moments ago to the Senator from Idaho. This bill does not leave the Philippine Legislature in possession of the subject at all. It leaves the Philippine Legislature with power to prohibit the importation of liquor from Great Britain, or France, or Japan, or anywhere else, but it denies them the liberty or power to prohibit the importation of liquor from the United States. A most inequitable, unjust, and unfortunate limitation of power on the part of the government about to be established there. I ask the Senator from Colorado, if the committee desired to leave the legislature of the islands with the power to determine the policy that ought to prevail in the islands, does he not think that we ought to give to the authorities there the right to say what the relations between the United States and the Philippine Islands shall be respecting liquor? So long as that is reserved, it is for us, and not for the Philippine Legislature, to declare the policy in this respect. I propound that question to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I believe the Philippine Legislature ought to be given the power to determine whether or not intoxicating liquors shall be shipped from the United States there, and I would be perfectly willing to vote for a provision that authorized that; but the question is whether or not the Philippine Legislature should have this power. The Senator from Iowa has said that these people are incapable of self-government. I do not agree with the Senator in that respect. This is a limitation of power upon the legislature. I want to inform the Senator, though he probably knows it, that every one of the 81 members of the Philippine Legislature is a graduate of a college or of a university. Consequently, they are perfectly capable of passing whatever laws they think are for the best interests of the Philippine people.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Colorado misunderstood me if he understood me to say that I thought they were incapable of self-government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know that the Senator said so, but I inferred that from what the Senator said.

Mr. CUMMINS. On the contrary, I said that the theory of this bill was that the Filipinos are not competent to fully and completely govern themselves. I do not agree with the theory of this bill, as the Senator from Colorado certainly well knows.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Of course, Mr. President, every bill is a subject of compromise; there is no doubt about that, nor is there any doubt there are provisions in this bill which do not satisfy me or perhaps any other one man. You can not have legislation in a bill covering 40 or 50 pages to which every one exactly agrees, but I maintain that the position which we are trying to take in the bill is to let the legislature of the Philippine people deal with this question; that it is a question which affects those people. They know more about it than we do and could tell you more about it in a month than I could tell you in a lifetime. Consequently, they are the ones who ought to determine the question. I am satisfied that they are not a drinking people. I have been over there twice and have spent considerable time in the islands, and I never saw a Filipino drunk in my life, although I have been on the streets time and time again. There is no necessity for this great change in policy.

If they are going to be taught self-government, they should be given the opportunity to govern themselves. If they decide that this shall be the policy, well and good; I hope it will be, but I want them to take the action. I do not want this policy to be imposed upon them by a power that they may think is exercising an act of tyranny. For this reason it seems to me that we ought to leave this matter to an intelligent legislature which exists over there; let them determine it. Put whatever provision you desire into the bill giving them the power to prohibit the importation of liquors from the United States; I believe in that. I believe they should have the power to determine that very question; and if the Senator will propose an amendment to permit the Philippine Legislature to determine the question of the importation of liquors from the United States or from the world at large, I shall be perfectly willing to vote for it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] is rejected, if some other Senator does not do so, I certainly shall offer an amendment removing the limitation that the bill imposes upon the Philippine Legislature with regard to the importation of liquor from the United States; but, inasmuch as I believe it to be a wise policy so long as we are legislating for these islands to establish the fundamental doctrines of organized society, I intend to support the amendment commanding prohibition.

If the Filipino people are not accustomed to strong drink—and I am happy to believe that they are not—they will not be seriously injured if we prohibit them the opportunity to become accustomed to strong drink. We are not destroying ideals; we are not compelling them to move in strange ways or paths; apparently we are simply instituting a policy which they will recognize as just and wise more readily than we seem to have done. I hope that the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota will prevail.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I merely wish to say a word in further answer to the Senator from Iowa. The question of prohibition in our States has been much discussed, and there are certain classes of our own people who think it is tyranny, that it is oppression, to pass any law which, as they term it, would be an embargo upon their stomachs. They claim it is the violation of an individual right. That contention comes from our own people, and our population is pretty evenly divided on the question, for in most of the States the majority for prohibition is merely a small one.

If some of our own intelligent American citizens feel that we have not any right to legislate as to what they shall eat or drink, and they regard such legislation as an act of tyranny, though I do not think it is, because I believe that the majority have a right to control in that matter—but if such legislation is so regarded by our own people, with how much more force must the same view appeal to the Filipino if he thinks that his rights are invaded by an alien people 7,000 miles away? For that reason, it seems to me, Mr. President, that we ought to let this matter stand where the committee has placed it, and let the Filipino Legislature determine the question. I am satisfied that they will ultimately determine it for the best interests of the Filipino people.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]:

In line 3 of the Senator's printed amendment, after the word "beverage," I move to insert:

But this shall not apply to or include the native wines and beverages commonly known as vino, tuba, basi, and tapuy.

Mr. CLAPP. Just a moment, if the Senator from Nebraska will pardon me. I ask him to withhold his amendment until the Senator from North Dakota perfects his amendment, if he will do so, so as to make his amendment complete in itself.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, it is manifest that this bill can not be passed this afternoon or that the vote will not be taken upon it. I think, therefore, it would be prudent to let this matter all go over until morning and give the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] an opportunity to perfect his amendment. I think that course would be in the interest of economy of time and might save trouble in the future, for I do not want to vote on immature legislation. I repeat, we can not finish the bill this afternoon, because there is an agreement to take up the Clarke amendment to-morrow. I think it would be better if we could have the night to consider these amendments; and, from the discussion here this afternoon, I think a proper plan might be evolved.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska withdraw his amendment to my amendment until my amendment, as perfected, can be stated?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not want my amendment to the amendment to lose its position.

Mr. GRONNA. Not at all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will ask the Secretary to state the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota for information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment as perfected by the Senator from North Dakota.

The SECRETARY. Mr. GRONNA proposes to perfect his amendment as follows: After the word "beverage," the last word in the printed amendment, he proposes to insert:

That anyone violating this law relating to the manufacture, sale, or gift of intoxicating liquors or drugs shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $100 or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then I offer my amendment, to be inserted in the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota, after the word "beverage."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska offers an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "beverage" it is proposed to insert the words:

But this shall not apply to or include the native wines and beverages known as vino, tuba, basi, and tapuy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA].

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I can understand why the proponents of this bill do not like to have any more inconsistencies introduced into it than it already contains. I can understand why, if they actually believe that the Filipino is capable of self-government and practically fitted for independence, they should wish to relegate this intoxicating-liquor question to the Filipinos themselves. Believing, as I do, that this is not true, that we are making a serious mistake in greatly enlarging the governmental powers of the Filipinos and in promising them independence at this time, believing that these people are not competent for self-government and that it would be a great mistake for the United States to relieve itself of power while it retains responsibility in the archipelago, I shall oppose the passage of the bill. I shall also oppose the so-called Clarke amendment when it comes up, and upon which I propose to speak briefly later.

I think the experiment in the Philippine Islands by the United States thus far is admitted by everybody to have been a splendid success. Everybody that I have heard speak upon the subject has said that we are doing very well in the Philippine Islands; that we are performing the greatest work that any nation has ever done for a dependent people. Every person whom I have consulted, and who was entitled to speak with authority on this subject because of his personal knowledge, has said that we ought not to hold out to Filipinos the encouragement of independence in the immediate future, and that we ought not to grant them a much larger degree of self-government than they already possess until the experiment that we are conducting has been carried forward further than it is at the present time. Why not continue on the course that is proving so satisfactory? Why invite more trouble when we already have quite enough?

I recognize that it is the popular thing for some temperance people, prohibition people—and I am of that class, being in favor of practical prohibition legislation where possible—it is popular, I say, to tack prohibition onto all sorts of bills and inject its discussion on every possible occasion. That does not, however, help the cause of temperance. Senators have been insisting that the Filipinos are capable of self-government and that it is oppressive for the United States to impose government upon them, and yet some of these Senators are about to repudiate their own arguments by voting to take away a power which they now possess. I would not at this time greatly enlarge the legislative powers of our oriental wards, neither would I take from them powers which they now possess. Senators in dealing with this question should be reasonably consistent.

We ought to retain the respect of the Filipinos, if possible. The United States certainly should not contribute anything to their detriment, to their injury. Therefore I can see where it would be consistent, according to my theory, of still retaining authority in the islands, to prohibit the importation of liquors into the islands, and for that proposition I can cheerfully vote; but I shall not consider myself less in favor of prohibition or of temperance if I vote against a clear interference with the right of the Filipinos to govern themselves in regard to domestic and local matters, which they have shown ability to handle. I think we would make a mistake by thus interfering; that we would lose the respect and confidence of these people; and while, as I have said, I am going to vote against the Clarke amendment and against the bill, because I think they are both unwise and loaded with trouble not only for us but for the Philippine Islands, I shall vote for an amendment, if I am permitted to do so, to prohibit the importation into the Philippine Islands of intoxicating liquors. I am in sympathy with that proposition. It surely is the duty of the United States to protect these islands from all enemies from without, but inasmuch as it is admitted and uncontradicted that domestic intoxicants are not harming the Filipino, and he has shown sense enough to handle them much better than we handle the liquor question in the United States, I want to leave him in undisturbed control of domestic intoxicants.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA].

Mr. VARDAMAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STERLING (when the name of Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber on account of sickness.

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I do not at the present time see him in the Chamber. So I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I announce that I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. He not being present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. POINDEXTER (when his name was called). I was paired with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. My understanding, however, was that the arrangement for the pair expired yesterday, so I shall vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. POMERENE (when his name was called). On all except two propositions connected with this bill I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], and, therefore, withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. POMERENE (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Maryland was called). The Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber. He is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM].

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], who is absent, is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I inquire whether the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed he has not voted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a pair with that Senator, and, on account of his absence, withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I inquire whether the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed he has not voted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I can not vote, because I have a pair with him. If I were privileged to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have been requested by the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to announce that he is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF].

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] and to state that he is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIVELY] and his pair with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Referring to my last announcement, I wish to transfer the pair which I have with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], and with that transfer I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. BROUSSARD] on account of illness.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. WARREN] on business of the Senate.

Mr. CHILTON. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. If present, I do not know how he would vote; but if I were permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

I also desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. GOFF] is absent from the Senate on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. CATRON. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. FALL] is unavoidably absent on account of sickness.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM] is absent on important business, and, as has been stated by the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], my colleague is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. COLT. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. LIPPITT. I transfer the pair I have with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WEEKS. My colleague [Mr. LODGE] is absent on account of illness. He is paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] has announced his pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. I wish to add in that connection that the Senator from Delaware is detained at home by illness.

I also wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. REED], who is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], is absent on urgent and necessary business.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], which I transfer to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KENYON. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence for the day of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. CHILTON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 26, as follows:

YEAS—32.

Borah	Hardwick	Lee, Md.	Simmons
Bryan	Hitchcock	Lewis	Smith, Ga.
Catron	Hollis	McLean	Sterling

Fall	Overman	Smith, Md.

So the amendment of Mr. HITCHCOCK to the amendment of Mr. GRONNA was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota, as amended.

Mr. SMOOT. On that the yeas and nays have been ordered, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] and its transfer to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. I vote "yea."

Mr. COLT (when his name was called). I again announce my pair, and withhold my vote.

Mr. STERLING (when the name of Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota was called). I again announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. GRONNA (when Mr. MCCUMBER'S name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. MCCUMBER] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. I wish this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. POMERENE (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], who is unavoidably absent, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. STONE (when Mr. REED'S name was called). I wish to make the same announcement that I did on the last vote with respect to my colleague [Mr. REED] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). Making the same transfer of my pair which I have before announced, I vote "yea."

Mr. POMERENE (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Maryland was called). I make the same announcement as before with regard to the absence of the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] and his pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM].

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as before respecting my pair, and, on account of my pair, withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I again announce my pair and withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understand that in my absence I have been paired with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I should like to transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BORAH. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. BRADY] on account of illness. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. He is paired with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. CHILTON. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH].

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—35.

Ashurst	Curtis	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Fletcher	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Gore	Overman	Smoot

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 18, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, in whom we live and move and have our being, make us conscious of Thy presence, working in and through us, and of Thy love, manifest in a thousand blessings, new every morning and fresh every evening, that we may go forward with faith and confidence to do the work Thou hast given us to do, and thus be worthy recipients of Thy love and care. So may we honor, praise, and glorify Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WITHDRAWAL OF A BILL.

Mr. HAMLIN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] will permit.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well.

Mr. HAMLIN. On December 10 I introduced the bill H. R. 3695, and my attention has been called to the fact that this bill was passed at the last session. In reintroducing other bills, which I was not so fortunate with, I reintroduced this bill, and I ask unanimous consent that it be withdrawn from consideration by the Committee on Military Affairs and stricken from the files of the House.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request of the gentleman will be granted.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HOWARD rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Georgia rise?

Mr. HOWARD. I rise to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the question of preparedness.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the question of preparedness. Is there objection to the request?

There was no objection.

MINORITY REPORT ON THE CHILD-LABOR BILL.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Virginia rise?

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. To make a request for unanimous consent, sir. On yesterday a report was made from the Committee on Labor on the bill (H. R. 8234) to prevent interstate commerce in the products of child labor, and for other purposes. On the part of myself and other minority members of that committee I ask unanimous consent to have five legislative days in which the views of the minority may be filed upon that subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent for five legislative days in which the minority can file their views on House bill 8234, the child-labor bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CORRECTION OF THE CHILD-LABOR BILL.

Mr. KEATING rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Colorado rise?

Mr. KEATING. To submit a unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. I ask unanimous consent that the calendar print of the bill (H. R. 8234), to prevent interstate commerce in the products of child labor, and for other purposes, and report No. 46 be corrected. In submitting the printed bill the clerk to the committee neglected to report one amendment, and we desire permission to include that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] asks unanimous consent that the calendar print of House bill 8234 and the report thereon be corrected. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MAINTENANCE OF ORDER IN THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER. Before the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] begins the Chair wants to make a suggestion to the Members in the interest of order, and that is that Members when they undertake to make remarks in the House ought to talk so that people can hear them. That is one of the things that contributes to the chronic disorder in this House. Men will not refrain from talking when they can not hear what a man on the floor is saying.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. ELSTON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, yesterday a private pension bill was improperly referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions—the bill (H. R. 9264) for the relief of a veteran of the Spanish War. It should have gone to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, all Members ought to be informed that improper references of private bills are corrected by the clerks on request without bringing them up in the House under the rules.

The SPEAKER. That is a very pertinent suggestion.

Mr. ELSTON. Very well.

SEIZURE OF THE "HOCKING."

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a communication from William Bayard Hale upon the seizure of the Hocking, a vessel passing from one American port to another.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a communication from William Bayard Hale on the seizure of the ship Hocking, passing from one American port to another. Is there objection?

Mr. BARNHART. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what is the extent of the publication? It is not a book, is it?

Mr. FESS. Oh, no. It is simply a communication.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT TO RULE XXIV.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a privileged report of a resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 94 (Rept. No. 58).

Resolved, That paragraph 7 of Rule XXIV of the House of Representatives be amended by adding thereto the following:

"Provided, That not more that two hours of general debate shall be permitted on any measure called up on Calendar Wednesday, and all debate must be confined to the subject matter of the bill, the time to be equally divided between those for and against the bill: Provided further, That whenever any committee shall have occupied two Wednesdays it shall not be in order, unless the House by a two-thirds vote shall otherwise determine, to consider any unfinished business previously called up by such committee, unless the previous question had been ordered thereon, upon any succeeding Wednesday until the other committees have been called in their turn under this rule."

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the other side of the House if any time is desired there for the discussion of this rule? How much time do the gentlemen desire on that side?

Mr. LENROOT. Twenty minutes on this side.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the end of 40 minutes the previous question be considered as ordered on the resolution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not do that. It is possible that the gentleman may accept a slight amendment, is it not?

Mr. FOSTER. I will say frankly, Mr. Speaker, that so far as I am concerned and so far as the committee is concerned, our hope is that we have got some amendment to Calendar Wednesday that would make it more workable.

Mr. MANN. I suggest that my colleague from Illinois proceed with the debate for 40 minutes. The gentleman has the right to move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can have an hour if he wants it.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, Calendar Wednesday was established in 1909, in the hope of giving one day when committees might have the opportunity of calling up bills for consideration in the order in which the committees appear in the rules. I think every Member recognizes that Calendar Wednesday has been a most excellent thing. As the result of our experience from 1909 until the present we believe that the efficiency of Calendar Wednesday can be increased by making this addition to the rule. I think it has been decided by the Speaker that when the consideration of a bill has continued until the end of the second day, the committee having the bill in charge has the right to go ahead and complete that bill, though it may take the whole session. However good a bill may be, I do not believe that any committee should have the right to occupy a good many Wednesdays during a session of Congress. If a bill is of importance—and I am not saying that any bill which has been considered here on Calendar Wednesday has not been of importance—it ought to be considered under a special rule that will provide consideration, or give it some privileged status in some other way, and not occupy the whole time on successive Calendar Wednesdays.

Another provision here is that in the consideration of these bills not more than two hours general debate shall be had upon any one bill, and that that debate must be confined to the subject matter of the bill, so that on Calendar Wednesday we can confine the day to the actual business of the House, and not talk about everything in the world except the bill.

We provide that at the end of the second Calendar Wednesday, unless the previous question has been ordered, the committee shall lose the right to consider another bill until all the committees have been called again in their turn, unless the House, by a two-thirds vote, decides to take it up for further consideration, upon the next succeeding Calendar Wednesday, the bill which was under consideration.

I believe that the addition of this rule will be of advantage to the Members of the House, and will help to expedite the public business.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. I should like to inquire of the gentleman in the event that a bill of much importance to the House is in the regular order of procedure taken up on Calendar Wednesday, so that it can go nowhere else, and there is no other means of getting the bill before the House, what becomes of it after its consideration on the second Calendar Wednesday? I have in mind the printing bill, which I consider of much importance not only to the membership of the House, because of its advantage to them, but of importance to the well-being of the Treasury of the United States. Now, suppose an important bill of that kind comes up on Calendar Wednesday. In the very nature of things the length of the bill is such that it could not possibly be concluded in two days' consideration. Could any other means be provided under this rule by which a bill of that nature might be taken up except by a two-thirds vote?

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that I fully agree with him as to the importance of the bill which he speaks about. It is an important bill; but, as the gentleman well knows, a bill of that character requires a good deal of discussion and a long time to pass it. If this rule is adopted, there will be no way by which such a bill could be brought up for further consideration after the second Calendar Wednesday except by a two-thirds vote; and I submit to the gentleman from Indiana that it is hardly fair to other Members who have bills which they desire to reach that one bill should hold Calendar Wednesday possibly for two, three, or four months. It seems to me that is not what was intended of Calendar Wednesday when it was established, but it was established in order that each committee might during some part of the session have the right to be called. Yet, as we all know, when the calendar becomes congested it is impossible to reach many of these committees during the session, and Members who have bills of great importance sit around here without being able to get the opportunity to have them considered. Now, I say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] very frankly that I am for the consideration of the bill to which he refers, and I should be glad to do everything I could to help to take up that bill; but I do not believe it is right to place upon this calendar a bill to revise some code of laws which requires the entire session of Congress for its consideration or the printing bill of the gentleman, which I would be glad to help him get up in some other way if I could. I say it is hardly fair to the membership of this House that several Calendar Wednesdays and possibly several months be taken up in the consideration of that particular bill to the exclusion of all others and all other committees in the House.

Mr. BARNHART. Let me inquire of the gentleman, under his proposed procedure, if a bill of that sort were taken up on Calendar Wednesday and had the right of way, after two Calendar Wednesdays what would then become of it?

Mr. FOSTER. If the House, by a two-third vote, decided that the gentleman should go ahead with his bill, he would have the right to do so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would come up the next time the committee was called in its order.

Mr. FOSTER. If the House did not decide by a two-thirds vote to continue its consideration, the gentleman would have to wait until all the other committees were called, and then the bill would come up again as unfinished business.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. The Committee on Rules could bring in a special order.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course it could be taken up under a special order.

Mr. BARNHART. The chairman of the Committee on Rules has given his word to the Committee on Printing that it can have a rule on this bill, inasmuch as it has passed the House once and the Senate once, and a great majority of the Members are entirely familiar with it, and probably it will not take very much time; but in my own case I am only trying to safeguard the possibilities of getting the bill considered and completed after it has taken so much time in the committees and on the floors of both branches of Congress.

Mr. FOSTER. I fully agree with the gentleman that that bill ought to be taken up, because some reform ought to be made in the matter of printing for this House.

I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] 20 minutes, and reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. LENROOT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, Calendar Wednesday was an experiment. My colleague [Mr. FOSTER] says he thinks it was undoubtedly a good experiment. I myself have always questioned whether it was for the interest of the House, because practically now we have the call of committees on Calendar Wednesday only, after we get really started on the work of the House. Under the existing rule it is possible for a majority of the House to stop the consideration of any bill on Calendar Wednesday, whether it has been considered one day or two days or not at all, because the question of consideration may be raised in the Committee of the Whole on Calendar Wednesday, and was raised in the last Congress on one of the codification bills; and although the other side of the House was protesting against the delay, yet the House continued to consider that bill, knowing full well that it had no chance of becoming a law, and that its only use was to take up the time of the House. It is possibly a good thing to shut off somewhat the delay on Calendar Wednesday. I think it would have been better in this rule to provide means of closing debate rather than to limit debate to two hours. There are some bills that come up in the House of great importance that ought to have more than two hours' discussion. But I am quite willing to try it. If the majority wants to give us the opportunity of increasing the power of the minority, as this amendment does, we will be content during this Congress at least.

The majority have it in their power to say whether consideration of a bill shall be continued, but under this rule the minority will determine whether you proceed with the consideration of a bill on Calendar Wednesday, because under the rule it takes a two-thirds vote to continue consideration. Under the existing rule it takes a majority vote to discontinue the consideration.

But upon all of these rules it is more or less, as we make changes, a matter of experiment. I believe myself that some of us, if we would undertake it, could revise the rules of the House so as to protect the rights of the majority, protect the rights of the minority, and yet very much expedite the transaction of business. The House has grown so large in numbers, and the number of bills reported favorably to the House is so great, that toward the end of the session of Congress we find ourselves in the position where we are trying to put 100 pegs in one hole, a process that is not always agreeable and never possible to accomplish. As we go along the length of the calendars increase and the time is shortened. It is impossible for those who have not been here to understand fully how the pressure comes, as the days of Congress dwindle, to get consideration of certain measures in which Members are interested, knowing full well that it is impossible owing to the length of time for all the measures to be considered.

I do not know whether my friend from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] will get his printing bill passed or not. I think he ought to take it up and spend two days on it, anyhow. Then he can look at it sorrowfully and with regret as he lays it away in its final resting place. [Laughter.] Calendar Wednesday will become a sort of receiving tomb.

I would like to ask my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, a question or two about the construction of this rule. If the committee has had two days, or a part of one day and a full day, is that to be considered two days?

Mr. FOSTER. My recollection is that the House has so considered it.

Mr. MANN. That is undoubtedly the construction of the present rule, and that would be the construction of this rule. When is the motion to be made for further consideration of the bill?

Mr. FOSTER. I should say on the succeeding Wednesday, if the bill was not completed. The chairman would have the right to make the motion.

Mr. MANN. Before the call of committees proceeds?

Mr. FOSTER. Before the call of committees is resumed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I am in sympathy with the proposed amendment. In my opinion it should be changed in two respects. After the word "that" in line 4 I believe there should be inserted the words "unless otherwise ordered by the House." That would give the House the right to determine if more than two hours' debate should be allowed on any bill, and it would not be dependent on unanimous consent. There is another change that may be very important if the purpose of the rule is to be carried out. Having hastily examined the resolution, I wish to call the attention of the members of the Committee on Rules to the wording of the proposed amendment. In line 9 it provides:

That whenever any committee shall have occupied two Wednesdays it shall not be in order, unless the House by a two-thirds vote shall otherwise determine, to consider any unfinished business previously called up by such committee, unless the previous question had been ordered thereon, upon any succeeding Wednesday until the other committees have been called in their turn under this rule.

Under that wording of the rule, Mr. Speaker, the committee could call up a bill and occupy two Calendar Wednesdays. It could not continue the third day in consideration of such a bill, because it would be the unfinished business. But is there anything in the rule as it is now worded that would prevent the committee from calling up a new bill on the third day?

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. CRISP. Does not the rule itself prohibit that? The rule itself provides that no committee can occupy more than two days except to complete unfinished business.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not believe that it does. I shall read the provision again:

That whenever any committee shall have occupied two Wednesdays it shall not be in order, unless the House by a two-thirds vote shall otherwise determine, to consider any unfinished business previously called up by such committee, unless the previous question had been ordered thereon, upon any succeeding Wednesday until the other committees have been called in their turn under this rule.

I take it the purpose of the committee is to make the Calendar Wednesday rule the same that applies to the call of committees under the old rule.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Paragraph 4 of rule 24 provides that whenever any committee shall occupy the morning hour on two days it shall not be in order to call up any other bill until the other committees have been called in their turn.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the rule for the call of committees on any day except Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MANN. But the rule for Calendar Wednesday refers to that rule.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Speaker on several occasions has determined that that provision of the rule does not apply to business on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon, Calendar Wednesday rule is this:

On Wednesday of each week no business shall be in order except as provided by paragraph 4 of this rule, unless the House by a two-thirds vote on motion to dispense therewith shall otherwise determine.

It makes the exception that Union Calendar bills may be called upon Calendar Wednesday. Otherwise paragraph 4 of rule 24 covers it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not help out for this reason. There would be nothing to prevent a committee from laying aside on the second day the consideration of the bill under consideration.

Mr. MANN. That is true, but the House could raise the question of consideration.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am taking into account the desire of the majority of the House sometimes to filibuster. Calendar Wednesday was designed to prevent the majority of the House resorting to skillful parliamentary tactics to prevent the consideration or to reach the consideration of a bill. The suggestion I intended to make to the committee was to strike out of line 12 the words "previously called up by such committee" and insert after the word "any," on line 11, the words "business from such committee except unfinished business and consideration of which the House is then engaged." So that it would read:

Whenever any committee shall have occupied two Wednesdays it shall not be in order, unless the House by a two-thirds vote shall otherwise determine, to consider any business from such committee except unfinished business in the consideration of which the House is then engaged.

It may be that by construction that objection would be overcome. I merely make the suggestion.

I believe, however, that there should be some modification so that the House itself would have the power, if it wished to exercise it, to extend the time for general debate more than two hours. It would not occur often, as the debate must be germane to the bill; but there are some bills called up under the rule on Calendar Wednesday that are of very great importance and on which the discussion would be practically entirely in the general debate, with very little desire for opportunity under the five-minute rule. I am in sympathy with the purpose of the Committee on Rules and intend to support whatever they eventually decide. I simply have given expression to these views at this time, so that if the changes are deemed desirable they can be made now.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am in thorough sympathy with this proposed rule. We represent 100,000,000 people, comprising the greatest Government the world has ever known, and in my judgment this is the greatest legislative forum in the world. My observation has been that the Representatives are all earnest, active, and sincere in representing to the very best of their ability the interests of their respective constituencies. We have a great country with many diversified interests, and there are many measures introduced into this body by the various Representatives that mean much to their respective communities, but which are not of such general, Nation-wide interest that in the multiplicity of bills introduced into the House one can get them considered. Bills of general interest, those of such general interest that they are given a privileged status, can always take care of themselves and be given a hearing in this body, but local bills, bills in which various local communities are interested, owing to the thousands of bills introduced into the body never reach a hearing under the general rules of the House. Speaking to my new colleagues who are serving their first term in this House, they do not now and can not now grasp the truth of that statement, because up to now there has been practically no trouble in getting bills reported from the committees considered; but when the committees are at work and the calendars are filled with bills you will find these local measures do not stand very much chance of getting a hearing. That was the reason that Calendar Wednesday was created—to give those bills a chance to have a hearing, bills local in nature and which are not privileged and can not be brought up at any time.

Practical observation and experience with this rule, however, has shown that it is possible to call up under it some long bill, a bill of great importance to this country, and a committee can lodge one of those bills before the House on Calendar Wednesday and it will destroy Calendar Wednesday for the rest of the session of Congress, so far as the consideration of other measures is concerned, whether that is one week or four months. That is the practical operation of it. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says that you can raise the question of consideration. That is true, but when a bill is before the House and is being considered, it is very hard to get the House, by a vote, to displace it. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] states that he is in sympathy with the rule, but he thinks it should be amended to allow more than two hours' general debate of a bill called up under Calendar Wednesday, if the House saw fit. I do not favor that suggestion, because if the measure called up is to be considered for only two legislative days, and it may be in effect practically one legislative day if it be called up late in the afternoon of the first day, I think two hours of general debate ample, and I think the old Members of this House will agree with me that, so far as legitimate discussion of the measure up for consideration is concerned, it takes place under the five-minute rule and not under the general debate.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Take the Philippine bill, which may be up and can be called up on Calendar Wednesday. Does not the gentleman think that it would be proper, if the House saw fit, to give more than two hours general debate on that?

Mr. CRISP. Answering the gentleman, I do not think the Philippine bill or a bill of that magnitude should be brought up under Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MANN. That may be true, the gentleman may not think so; but still if the chairman of the committee thought so, he would bring it up on that date, if it was ready.

Mr. CRISP. If that is true, the House can raise the question of consideration, and if a majority of the House agreed with the one raising that question, the Philippine bill could not be called up under Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's argument a moment ago would answer his present statement. The House would not refuse to consider a bill reported by a committee—a majority of the House probably would not.

Mr. CRISP. My statement was, when the House had the bill already up for consideration and had been considering it for two days that it would be difficult then to have the question of consideration sustained.

Mr. MANN. Would it not become the practice, where a majority of the House desired to prevent debate, to seek the opportunity of taking up a bill on Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. CRISP. I do not quite understand the question.

Mr. MANN. Where a majority of the House desired to prevent debate it would seek the opportunity of calling a bill up on Calendar Wednesday, in which case, under this rule, it would not require a vote of Members to shut off debate.

Mr. CRISP. I do not agree with the gentleman. I think a bill like the Philippine bill, a bill like the printing bill, which is a very great bill and will save the people a great deal of money, ought to be considered——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. I have only two minutes, but I yield for a question.

Mr. BORLAND. The main purpose, the main reform in this amendment, is to prevent one committee from occupying more than two Calendar Wednesdays with unfinished business?

Mr. CRISP. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Then it is not important whether you limit debate to two hours or not in this reform?

Mr. CRISP. Well, I believe that as far as legitimate discussion of a measure before the House is concerned, it is better subserved under the five-minute rule than under general debate. My observation is that general debate generally touches and covers everything under the sun except the question before the House.

Now, as I was saying, bills of the character of the Philippine measure, the printing bill, and bills that are of general interest, I think ought to be considered, and I think the Committee on Rules should bring in a rule giving them a special privilege and let them be discussed on their merits, and I do not believe that the framers of this Calendar Wednesday rule ever intended that bills of that character should be brought up under it.

Now, answering another stricture of my friend from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], that you could get a bill up under this proposed amendment and just before you adjourn lay that aside and bring up another bill, I desire to say that is not possible under the rules of the House, even should this resolution be adopted; and I call the attention of the gentleman to clause 4 of Rule XXIV, which refutes his argument. Under the present rules of the House when a bill is called up, either on the daily call of committees or on Calendar Wednesday, it can be considered for two days; and if it is finished then the committee loses the call, and the call passes on to the next committee, with this exception: If the committee has occupied two days and at the expiration of those two days they have a bill pending, they can go on ad infinitum, so far as Calendar Wednesday is concerned, until the unfinished measure is disposed of, but when that measure is disposed of the committee loses the call.

I think, gentlemen, the proposed amendment is a good one. I think the practical operation of it will make your Calendar Wednesday more workable than it has ever been and will give the Members of this House an opportunity to consider many bills of vast importance to their constituents, but which are of local character and, owing to the great number of bills introduced in the House, stand very little chance or opportunity of getting a hearing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSTER. I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. BARKLEY. I want to ask the gentleman from Georgia whether, in his opinion, if this amendment is adopted with a proviso as to Calendar Wednesday, it would abrogate that general rule of the House in respect to bills coming up on Wednesday?

Mr. CRISP. Not at all. The Calendar Wednesday rule is part and parcel of Rule XXIV and ancillary to clause 4 of that rule, which provides for a call of committees; and this proposed rule simply adds an additional proviso at the bottom of the rule providing for Calendar Wednesday, which simply makes it impossible to call up some big bill and hold the floor on Calendar Wednesday for weeks and months, thereby absolutely destroying the Calendar Wednesday rule for the remainder of the session.

Mr. BARKLEY. In the gentleman's opinion there is no antagonism between the two provisos?

Mr. CRISP. I think they are in perfect harmony, and that there is no conflict whatever between them.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I used?

The SPEAKER. Thirty-one minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, this rule is reported from the committee of which I am a member, and I desire to give a reason or two why I shall support it. When I was a member of the majority I always maintained that the majority had the right to the control of the House, and had the right—as long as it was not oppressive to the minority—to erect its own machinery. This resolution comes within that rule for which I then contended, and as a member now of the minority I ought consistently to maintain the same position. Personally I am not inclined to be very enthusiastic about the rule, and if I were a member of the majority I think I would be even less enthusiastic. It takes from the hands of the political majority of this House the right to control, which, under certain circumstances, it ought always to have. It places that power in the hands of a minority, where I do not think, under our system of government, it ought ever to be; but certainly if it is not oppressive of the minority, we on this side ought to have no objection. I do recognize that the majority is placing upon our sense of justice and fair play a very high degree of responsibility. I think that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is quite right in his position that rules of this character are in a measure an experiment and evolution. We are just at the threshold of a long and what ought to be a very serious session. The responsibility now, as always, is upon the majority of this House. The majority desires, as a part of the machinery of government, this rule, and as the responsibility is their own and as the rule is certainly not unfair to the minority, the minority ought not to object to the majority working out by experiment a rule for the proper conduct of the business of this House. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields back one minute. Of course, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] will understand that 31 minutes, as the Speaker stated, was all that was left of the gentleman's hour.

Mr. FOSTER. That leaves me 11 minutes, as I understand.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, conditions have not been such as that I could attend the meeting of the Committee on Rules, of which I am a member, to consider this resolution. I have been in attendance upon another committee. I shall support the resolution which the House has before it, not that I approve of it in its entirety, but because I think it does make some advance in providing for the doing of public business. It is rather a peculiar thing to me, and has been ever since I have been a Member of the House, that the rules of the House should be the constant football of politics. The most dramatic fight that I have ever witnessed in this House was over the question of the rules and the relation of the Speaker thereto. I suspect it was the most dramatic episode in any Congress for the last 30 years. I think that the rules of the House need a very complete reformation, not in their fundamentals, but in the manner of administration and procedure.

The rules are a matter of development and growth. After all, as parties have come and gone in the control of this country, there have been very few changes in the fundamental features of the rules. There ought to be some sort of a provision here by which gentlemen could know day by day what is to occur. There is no good reason that any man can give why the Speaker of the House should not be a member of the Committee on Rules. Of course, the present Speaker does not desire to be a member of that committee, but in the matter of business procedure he who is charged with passing upon these matters ought certainly to have knowledge of what is going to arise from day to day.

I do not think this proposition will get us very far. I do not think Calendar Wednesday got us very far. I am willing to support this as a proposition looking toward better procedure than we have had heretofore.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields back half a minute.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message, in writing, from the President of the United States by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries.

AMENDMENT TO RULE XXIV.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I think it will hardly advantage us to determine whether or not this resolution will benefit the majority more than it will benefit the minority. I believe the primary consideration in the mind of every Member of the House should be, Is it in the interest of greater justice to the individual Members of the House? Is it in the interest of the furtherance of business? Will it tend more to give to the House the benefits intended by Calendar Wednesday? And if those things shall be answered in the affirmative, then it seems to me that it is the duty of every Member of the House to vote to support this proposition. Because, Mr. Speaker, after all, the things that concern parties, the majority and the minority, are an inconsiderable part of the legislation of this House, and certainly if this shall be in the interest of facilitating the business of the House in all of its branches, it occurs to me there ought to be no hesitancy on the part of any man in voting for it. If it shall be considered as a concession of the majority in the interest of justice, in the interest of fair play and dispatch of business, then I congratulate the gentlemen who have brought it here and the majority of the House, and as a member of the minority I thank them not for their graciousness but for their justness.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there can be no question regarding the real practical operation of this resolution. It has been suggested by gentlemen who have opposed it that two hours will not be a sufficient time for the consideration of large measures. It should be remembered by Members that in every instance it is with the committee who reports favorably a bill to determine how they will present it to the House, and if they present an important bill that can not be determined fairly with two hours general debate, then certainly the committee will not call it up on Calendar Wednesday, but will ask a rule for its consideration that will give them a longer time for general debate.

But in the vast majority of cases, as gentlemen well know, two hours' general debate, when limited to the express object under consideration, is all that will be necessary. It is sufficient to allow a fair statement of the bill on the part of its proponents and a fair statement of objections on the part of those who may oppose it; and the real debate, as everyone of experience knows, in this House is not in general debate, but under the five-minute rule, when the bill is read for consideration by the House. And that, in my judgment, is amply sufficient to guard against any injustice that might occur.

Again, it is said that two days will not be sufficient for consideration. That, in my judgment, is carefully enough guarded. This House has the right by a two-thirds vote to continue the time for the consideration of any bill if it so desires. And, in justice to all of those who may have bills for consideration by the House, it certainly would be an exceptional case where in fairness to the 435 Members of this House a bill should be allowed to be considered for more than two days. And if it is of sufficient importance, and if the House desires to do so, under the terms of this resolution they have the right to extend the time.

Mr. Speaker, in my judgment this bill is a step forward in the right direction toward the advancement of the business of the House both for this session and for the future, and I predict if it shall be adopted by this House at this time it will never be repealed in its substantive parts as long as we have Calendar Wednesday.

I yield back the balance of my time, if I have any.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman used half a minute more than he was entitled to. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] if he desires any more time.

Mr. LENROOT. We will conclude on this side with one more speech.

Mr. FOSTER. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] three minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I am not a member of the Rules Committee, neither do I pretend to know much about the rules, but I do pretend to know a little about the actual working capacity of the Calendar Wednesday rule, and I think I know it is almost completely broken down. It has not accomplished what the House intended it to accomplish. Of course the authors of it and the proponents of it were well meaning at the start and everybody vainly thought that they could get their bills considered under it. But they could not and they did not, and it has not worked. This proposed amendment from the Rules Committee does a little of what I wish they would do a good deal of, and that is to cut off endless debate. Some one has said here that two hours' general debate is not enough time. In my opinion it is an hour and 20 minutes too much time. This House has suffered more from too much talk and too little consideration of the real thing under consideration. In journeying along over the bills that come before the House everyone here on both sides of the aisle knows that the real thing that is accomplished is always done under the five-minute rule, and if there were no other method of being sure that everyone would get all the talk they wanted under the five-minute rule, they could look at the emptiness of these benches and know the rights of every Member who could make the point of no quorum and use an hour instead of five minutes, and that question will be answered.

I wish the committee would agree to an amendment making it 20 minutes on a side, 40 minutes in all, for general debate, and then carefully take up the bill section by section and go over them, under the five-minute rule, and let everybody offer amendments that cares to offer them, let us have a vote on the different amendments, and let us have full consideration.

Too long a time accorded in general debate always does one of two things. First, it either empties all the benches, or, second, it induces Members who participate in debate on the bill to talk about something else. Calendar Wednesdays have been days when we would talk about Jack Johnson's wedding or anything else on earth that happened to enter the mind or the head of the gentleman who had the floor, when in reality the time ought to be spent in trying to consider and pass the little bills that are of importance to Members of the House here.

I do not wish to be understood as criticizing the committee; on the contrary, I want to congratulate the committee for bringing on this much help. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says this may be a morgue. I can conceive that it may be. On such a day we may have two roll calls to bring in a quorum, and those, with the time otherwise wasted, may make four hours; and then some one else rises to a question of privilege, which may be debated for an hour, and that makes five hours; and then some one moves to adjourn, and we adjourn, thus consuming the day. I can imagine what happens in reading a bill under the five-minute rule with no quorum here and then demanding a roll call on the second paragraph, and the next Wednesday is spent in the same way, and, after attempted consideration for two Wednesdays, the bill is not finished.

I desire, if I can get a chance, to substitute 40 minutes for 2 hours to be bestowed on a bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Eleven minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the majority members of the Committee on Rules on the bringing in of this resolution.

Members will remember that on the first day of this session there was an effort made on the part of some of us to defeat the permanent adoption of these rules and to adopt them temporarily only, in order to secure a modification of this rule with reference to Calendar Wednesday. We were defeated in that attempt, but the discussion that was then had and the vote that was then had was so productive and so influential that at last we have, as the fruit of it, the resolution which is now pending before the House.

And I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that there was nothing partisan in the proposition then; there is nothing partisan in the proposition now. There is nothing in this proposition that ought to be considered upon the theory that it deprives the majority of some of its powers, or confers upon the minority greater powers than it now possesses. While it is true that not many bills have been considered on Calendar Wednesday during the six years in which it has been in operation, I can not now recollect of a single bill that has been considered on Calendar Wednesday that has involved any partisanship whatever, and making Calendar Wednesday a working day instead of a holiday is in the interest of every Member of this House on both sides of the aisle.

True it is that the minority, if it choose to exercise it, will have greater power to embarrass the majority than it now possesses if this amendment be adopted. But, I say, Mr. Speaker, that if the minority, which is Republican now, and which will be Democratic in the next Congress, shall attempt to use that power merely for the purpose of embarrassing the majority, it will prove a boomerang to the minority that uses it, and will only injure themselves.

As the situation now exists Calendar Wednesday is practically worthless. Unless this amendment be adopted we will have the entire session consumed this year, as it was last, by the Committee on Printing, and the very purpose of Calendar Wednesday is absolutely defeated, which is to give the membership of this House opportunity to have consideration of bills that are not privileged, but are of greater or less general importance.

Now, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] makes the inquiry as to what would become of his bill, for instance, after he has occupied two Wednesdays, if this rule be adopted. I will say, in the first place, that the gentleman is no worse off than if Calendar Wednesday did not exist at all, and he is this much better off: That if he has occupied two Wednesdays in the consideration of his bill and the bill is then unfinished business, he has a better chance before the Committee on Rules to make his bill privileged than he otherwise would have, while if we did not have Calendar Wednesday his only opportunity would be a special rule from the Committee on Rules. As to any bill of general public importance that may be unfinished business at the end of the second Wednesday occupied by a committee, if it is of sufficient importance, the Committee on Rules is always open to give a special rule permitting the conclusion of the consideration of that bill upon any day; in other words, to make it privileged.

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] criticizes the latter portion of this rule and attempts to construe it to the effect that it would only apply to unfinished business so far as occupying two Wednesdays are concerned; that, except as to unfinished business, a committee might occupy an indefinite number of Wednesdays. That has been completely answered, because the rule itself refers to paragraph 4 of the rule, which expressly provides that only two days shall be occupied by the same committee.

I want further to call attention to the fact that this second proviso, which covers this portion of the subject, refers only to unfinished business and nothing else, leaving the rule exactly as it stands as to any business that is not unfinished business.

And just a word, Mr. Speaker, with reference to a possible construction of one feature of the rule. The committee uses the language that "whenever any committee shall have occupied two Wednesdays it shall not be in order," and so forth. It was suggested to the committee, and was considered by the committee, whether the language should be "two succeeding Wednesdays," and the committee deliberately did not incorporate the word "succeeding." The reason was that it is within the power of the House at any time to dispense with Calendar Wednesday upon a two-thirds vote, and we did not wish to raise the question of whether, if the House by vote had dispensed with one Wednesday when a committee had occupied one Wednesday, it had lost its right to the Wednesday next following. And as the rule now stands it is entirely clear, I think, that each committee, under the Calendar Wednesday rule, will have the right to call up a bill on one Calendar Wednesday and occupy the next Calendar Wednesday when Calendar Wednesday is in operation. I do not think there is any possibility of any misconstruction of the rule in that regard.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields back three minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] is recognized for one minute.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, this is a unanimous report of the Committee on Rules. The committee met and without partisan division gave thorough consideration to this amendment to the rule. We believe that the verbiage of it as presented to the House is good, and that no amendment is necessary. Our purpose was to make Calendar Wednesday a working day, and not a holiday, as it is now under the present rules of the House. This rule as we propose will do a great deal of good and will go far toward facilitating the business of the House. We think it ought to be adopted promptly. We are sure that it will help the business of the House and relieve the congestion of the calendar. We have submitted it as the unanimous action of the Committee on Rules, and hope it will be ratified by the House of Representatives on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE PRESS GALLERY.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send it up.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 97.

Resolved, that clause 2 of Rule XXXV be amended so as to read as follows:

"Such portion of the gallery over the Speaker's chair as may be necessary to accommodate representatives of the press wishing to report debates and proceedings shall be set apart for their use, and reputable reporters and correspondents shall be admitted thereto under such regulations as the Speaker may from time to time prescribe; and the supervision of such gallery, including the designation of its employees, shall be vested in the standing committee of correspondents, subject to the direction and control of the Speaker; and the Speaker may assign one seat on the floor to Associated Press reporters, one to the Sun Press Association, one to the United Press Association, one to the National News Association, and one to the New York Herald Syndicate, and regulate the occupation of the same. And the Speaker may admit to the floor, under such regulations as he may prescribe, one additional representative of each press association."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, from the reading of the rule by the Clerk I caught the proposed change of the present rule, but I think the gentleman ought to state it to the House.

Mr. HENRY. The amendment to the rule is simply this: It is a reenactment of clause 2 of Rule XXXV, with the exception of the added language which gives to the standing committee of correspondents the control of the employees of the press gallery. That is to say, the standing committee of correspondents, under the supervision of the Speaker, shall have control of the gallery, and with this addition it is provided that they shall appoint the employees in the gallery. That is the amendment.

Mr. MANN. The control of the gallery and the employees both. That is the amendment.

Mr. HENRY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I notice that the Clerk read "shall be set apart for their use." I suppose there is no difference between "setting aside" for their use and "setting apart" for their use, and I wondered why the committee changed the word in the existing rule, which says that he shall set aside a part of the gallery, and why they made it read "set apart" instead of "set aside."

Mr. HENRY. That was the way we intended to keep it, as the gentleman suggests. It is merely a clerical error in copying.

The SPEAKER. What amendment does the gentleman from Illinois suggest?

Mr. MANN. The existing rule says "shall be set aside for their use." This says "set apart for their use."

Mr. HENRY. We intended to follow the wording of the existing rule, and I ask the Clerk to change the word "apart" to "aside."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 4 by striking out the word "apart" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "aside."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], I will say a word on a subject which has just been very forcibly brought to my attention, and, I think, to the attention of many gentlemen here, by the fact that we are being asked to vote upon amendments to the rules without proper opportunity for Members upon the floor, except the gentlemen who are fortunate enough to be sitting close to the committee table, to have access to a copy of the rules. I do not wish to see a return to the old desks for Members—far from that—but our experience to-day shows the urgent necessity—a necessity often before demonstrated—of having put here, somewhere convenient to each seat, some sort of a receptacle that shall contain copies of the rules and of such other books and documents as may be needed. Also, there could and ought to be adjustable appliances on which, with a pencil, to write amendments, or motions, or to make notes.

To-day, with few exceptions, the Members of the House, unlike those of any other legislative body in the United States, are compelled to go to the Clerk's desk or committee table for a copy of the rules. Nor are there on the floor suitable, often necessary, conveniences for such writing as I have mentioned. In other words, the present conditions are not convenient nor just for the great majority of the Members of the House. I have been told, by men competent to know, that with but little trouble and expense there could be provided for each seat a convenient receptacle for papers and books, and something upon which to write. The privilege of being able easily, promptly, to procure copies of the rules and of other books and documents when needed and of having some such appliance as I have indicated on which to write ought not to be confined to gentlemen fortunate enough to sit at the committee tables.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Does not the gentleman think we could manage the writing if we could have copies of the rules?

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman know that any Member can get a copy of the rules by pushing the button and sending to the document room? That is the way these copies of the rules come to the table here.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. They are kept there.

Mr. MANN. Oh, not at all.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. They are kept here in the drawers of the tables during the day.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I do not want any controversy with the gentleman from Wisconsin, and merely rise to say that I will try to see that he gets a copy of these rules.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Texas ought to know that attempting to be funny does not aid us with the facts. The gentleman attempted to be funny on the first day of the session in what he said about the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and of my colleague [Mr. LENROOT] to have the rules adopted temporarily until January 17, with the privilege of the committee on that day to offer amendments to the rules before their final adoption. During the debate on this proposition it was especially and strongly urged that at the proper time there must be an amendment adopted to regulate Calendar Wednesday. The gentleman from Texas said that the proposition must be rejected because of its partisanship. Yet now he comes on the 18th of January, one day later than the time proposed by the gentleman from Illinois and by my colleague, with an amendment to regulate Calendar Wednesday. His proposition fails of being partisan by just one day.

Mr. HENRY. I beg the gentleman's pardon, I was not trying to be funny. I agree that when the gentleman wants information from the House that he should get it. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there is a good deal in the suggestion made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER]. I would like in that connection to suggest to the Committee on Rules that in matters of this kind, which do not require immediate consideration, it would be an exceedingly good practice if the committee would report such a resolution, and let it lie over for a day before it is called up for consideration, so that the rule and report, if there be one, may be printed, and Members have access to it before it is called up. Of course, that could not be the case in a rule for the consideration of a bill.

Mr. HENRY. The Committee on Rules has no objection to that, but here is a report where there is no contest about it, and it is manifestly necessary. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I present the following resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 96.

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House be granted permission to sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MOTIONS TO RECOMMIT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to make a suggestion to Members of the House, and that is when a Member has a motion to recommit containing instructions, that he submit it to the Chair some time in advance, so that the Chair may have an opportunity to consider it and be ready to rule upon it.

Under a special order of the House the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] is recognized for 45 minutes.

PREPAREDNESS.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, we are all more or less the creatures of environment. The word "preparedness" seems to be on the lips of everyone. We all talk preparedness. Nobody asks the question what is this preparedness for, what are we to prepare against, whom we are to prepare against. It seems but logical that when we use the word "preparedness" the question against whom and against what are we to prepare should immediately suggest itself.

Modern wars are wars of more than one nation against another. They are wars of combinations of groups of nations. When we now talk about being prepared we must imply preparation against the contingency of fighting a combination of nations. If it was possible for revolutionary France to ally herself with the most reactionary nation in Europe, with the absolute monarchy of Russia; if it was possible for England, the mother of constitutional democracy, for England, that has given to the world the free Republic of the United States and the Dominion of Canada and the Commonwealth of Australia, and has laid the foundation of constitutional law—if it was possible for England to ally herself with Russian czarism, what is there to prevent a combination of France, England, Germany, Japan, Russia, Italy, Portugal, Denmark, and all other powers against the United States? And if we are to prepare we should prepare against a possible combination of all European powers. We would then have to construct a navy large enough to fight the combined navies of the world. We would have to build up an army larger than any that has ever been organized in this or any other country.

What is this talk of preparedness all about? Let us analyze it. I will waste no time in proving that there is money in the manufacture of munitions. Of course, there is money in it. The manufacturer of munitions has an elastic conscience. A man who can make profits out of the business of manufacturing death-dealing instruments has a conscience that will adapt itself to anything. He will buy officials, he will corrupt, he will acquire and control newspapers, he will influence ministers of the gospel, he will defile all political life. In the manufacture of munitions there is no soul. I am not interested in the question of how much profit there is in the manufacture of death-bringing munitions. One thing is certain, and that is, that no matter how the war results the business of manufacturing munitions will be taken out of private hands in every civilized country of the world and become a Government function. [Applause.]

When you investigate this matter of preparedness you will find that the manufacturers of munitions have the largest share in creating this sentiment, but they are not the exclusive authors of it. There are other elements. There is the insidious conspiracy, the secretive element of the American imperialist. These are the elements which are responsible for the acquisition of the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico in 1898. These are the captains of industry who undertook to be the guardians of the American people. They are the men who want to influence world affairs. They are the men who seek foreign markets and foreign colonies. They have not the courage to say so, but they would like to have an army and a navy large enough to be able to coerce Europe, to be able to coerce the rest of the world into yielding to American capital new spheres of influence, new colonies, new empires. The 600,000 noble men who responded to the call of President McKinley in the Spanish-American War believed they were fighting to liberate oppressed Cuba. That was the belief of the men who were sacrificing their lives, but Uncle Sam's imperialists immediately proceeded to reward themselves, were quick to take advantage of the movement of liberation by acquiring Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands, and by tying a string to Cuba. Capitalism rewarded itself without delay. These imperialistic elements are behind the preparedness movement. There is a third element. There are the old women of both sexes—frightened, scared out of their wits, honestly believing that somebody is going to fight them, and they see in every bird an aeroplane and in every fish a submarine. They would like to change every ferryboat into a dreadnaught and prepare to fight, fight, fight. There is a fourth element, and that is the political element. There is the Republican Party, the minority party to-day. They are trying to play a trick on the Democrats, and the Democrats are just stupid enough to fall into the trap. [Laughter.] The Republicans know well that an increase of the Army and Navy require additional taxation.

I heard the discussion on the tariff, a discussion which is only about a hundred and twenty-five years old, and I was greatly interested when they delivered those political tariff chestnuts. They know and we all know that the war is largely responsible for the cutting down of the revenue from the tariff. They also know that the war has, to a great extent, upset American industry. They know that as a result of the prohibition movement there has been a diminution of revenue from a source which was considered a pretty good Democratic source, as there was a time when the saloon was the only university and inspiration of the Democratic Party [laughter], but that has since changed. In New York, however, it is still almost the only college that a Democrat attends. [Renewed laughter.] They know well that revenues have diminished because of conditions over which the Democratic Party, the Republican Party, or, for that matter, the Government of the United States itself has no control, and they know that agitation for preparedness will compel the Democratic majority in Congress to assume the responsibility for imposing additional and burdensome taxes, and they want you to impose these taxes, they want you to put revenue stamps on everything and everybody—and then they will go out with the slogan, "Lick stamps or lick the Democrats." [Laughter.] Look out for that preparedness talk and agitation.

As a Socialist, I consider it a great privilege to have the opportunity to explain the attitude of the socialist movement on the subject of war. I am in a better position than you Democrats or Republicans. I can speak honestly and conscientiously on the subject, because, beginning with the year 1871, the socialists warned Europe against this very war. You take the literature of the socialist movement of 1871, right after the Franco-Prussian War, take the prediction of Carl Marx, the expounder of scientific socialist thought, and see what he said. He warned against the danger of acquiring Alsace-Loraine, and he said:

Whoever is not totally stupefied by the noise of the moment must realize that the war of 1870 bears in its womb the necessity of a war with Russia. If they (the German imperialists) take Alsace-Loraine, then Russia and France will make war on Germany.

In another manifesto, issued immediately after the Franco-Prussian War, Marx said:

Do the Teutonic patriots seriously believe that the independence of France, the liberty and peace of Europe can be secured by driving France into the arms of Russia?

In the international socialist congresses, and in all of the parliaments of the world, the socialists pointed to the danger of large armies and navies.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman care to be interrupted?

Mr. LONDON. I prefer not to. I will try to conclude 10 minutes before my allotted time, so as to afford an opportunity for questions, which I will endeavor to answer. I have not yet learned to write out a speech. I have a great deal of collected material which is not quite in shape. I will be glad to answer any questions later. In all the congresses, in all the parliaments, the socialist movement opposed an increase of armaments, and pointed to the presence of large armies as a most serious menace to the peace of the world. There exists among the great masses of the people a notion that the present war is an accident, that somebody became crazy, particularly that a certain ruler with a long military mustache became crazy, and that all is to be blamed upon that crowned individual. That is absurd. That is baby talk; that is talk that you get from the headlines of newspapers. Reason the thing out, study it, and you will find that this war is not an accident. This war is the direct result of a serious clash of economic interests of nations. It represents the struggle of nations, each of which is an economic unit, seeking expansion and seeking free and full development. Poor little Serbia wanted access to the Adriatic so as not to be crushed by prohibitive tariffs. Russia, with hundreds of miles of land frontier to one mile of sea, without a single warm-water port, with a population of 190,000,000 people, covering one-ninth of the habitable globe, wanted to have a warm-water seaport.

That is a sensible and justifiable demand for a nation. Germany, with her wonderful civilization and culture—Germany, with her splendid literature and philosophy, with her magnificent industrial development, with an intelligent, educated, working class—Germany was seeking opportunity for expansion; she wanted to increase her colonies. Her ambitions collided with those of Great Britain, which tried to retain the possession of her wonderful colonies all over the world. So it was not an accident. The moment when the war took place might not have been foreseen, but the war itself was foreseen and was inevitable with armies serving as the handmaid of industry. It was primarily an economic struggle, an outward expression of economic conflict. Of course, it was a conflict in which other factors entered, as they do in all human life. There are so many forces in the economic and political life of nations. There was in it the element of prejudice and race hatred; and every fool can at any time utilize national and race hatred for any vile purpose. [Applause.] There was national and race prejudice. There was a military caste in Germany, a caste brought up with the idea that everybody not in uniform was an inferior. Then there was Russia, with a population—three-fourths of which are illiterate—believing that the "White Father" is a representative of God. These things complicated the situation, but the primary cause of the war was the economic struggle of nations. And while it was an economic contest, gentlemen, it would not have been so dangerous if it had not been for the presence of large armies and navies. When two men get into a fight, if they have no revolvers they would not fight with revolvers, but if they have revolvers and ammunition and large stores of explosives, at the very moment when their interests collide they will use the means they have at their disposal for destroying each other.

Let me attract your attention for a moment, gentlemen, to a very interesting incident. A few days before the war broke out the German social democracy was encouraged by the minister of war to continue antiwar demonstrations. I have it on the most reliable authority. The idea was conveyed to the German social democracy that the Emperor did not want to fight. The idea was conveyed to them that it was desirable to develop large antiwar demonstrations, so as to have an excuse for not fighting, so as to have an excuse for not supporting Austria in her unreasonable demands upon poor little Serbia. I heard only a few days ago from an English lady, whose father is a member of Parliament, whose brother is a member of Parliament, whose brother-in-law is a member of Parliament, that she was permitted three or four days before the war commenced to go to Germany, which shows that the people of Great Britain did not expect any war. But what happened? There were large armies on both sides, and large navies, and the leaders of the armies said, "A fight may come at any moment. Our diplomats may not be able to reach an understanding. Now, if the fight must come, let it begin right now," so that every consideration of statesmanship, every dictate of reason, every rule that ever inspired men to nobler action was subordinated to the wisdom of the military strategist.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Amen!

Mr. LONDON. It appears that German military strategy was right. The great armies of the allies have so far been unable to take back an inch of the territory captured by the German armies during the first six weeks of the war. Organizing armies for its protection Europe has prepared the means of its own destruction. The greater the army, gentlemen, the smaller is the people which has that army. [Applause.]

The greater the American Army, the greater the American Navy will be, of which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] talked so much, the smaller will be the American people. [Applause.] In all parliaments we protested against the war. The socialists have no apology to make to history. The socialists could not stop the war for the very simple reason that there were not enough of them. They did their best, and they spoke honestly and not as patriots. I do not know—people talk about patriotism as something big. It is very easy to be a patriot; every fool can be a patriot. Every rogue can proclaim himself a patriot; every blackguard can sing a national hymn and wave a flag. It takes a manly man to live a life of devotion and sacrifice for the best ideals of his country. [Applause.] That is the only kind of patriotism I recognize. I do not know what Americanism means to others, but to me Americanism means not only an opportunity to do better than the rest of the world, but the imperative duty to be nobler than the rest of the world. [Applause.] The socialists were the real patriots and well-wishers of the people, as they everywhere opposed the war.

Little Serbia had one or two socialist representatives. Only a month or two before the Balkan war the representative of the socialist movement in Serbia delivered these significant and prophetic words:

We are opposed to war among the people of the Balkans not only because that war will be bloody and horrible, not only because it will ruin the Balkans, but because the war will not fail to bring about the intervention of the great capital States, and that intervention may mean a general conflagration in Europe, colossal bloodshed, and the disappearance of economic and political gains due to the efforts of previous generations working for centuries to realize them.

That was said in 1912. How prophetic.

The one socialist representative in the Parliament of Serbia had the courage to speak boldly and openly against the "patriots," against the real enemies of the people, against men who sought to plunge Serbia into war, although it threatened to bring about the general destruction of European civilization.

During the first Balkan war the international socialist movement found it necessary to call a special congress of the socialists of the world. In the resolutions which they adopted they warned the English working class, they warned the German people, against the artificially stimulated hatred between the German and the English peoples. The congress advocated a federation of the Balkan peoples, and protested against the sinister designs of both Russia and Austria-Hungary upon the Balkans.

It will be relevant to cite to you an extract from a speech delivered by the chairman, or what we would call here the leader, of the Social Democratic minority on the floor of the German Reichstag when the question of increasing the army came up in 1913. He said:

You are speaking now of preparedness, of defending our border. What you want is not a defense of our borders. What you seek is free elbow room to give full play to the economic aspirations of your imperialists. You seek new colonies. You seek to establish and maintain the prestige of Germany by the power of the sword.

And in 1913 the representative of the Social Democratic movement in Germany warned Germany against the danger of a clash with Great Britain; the very same thing was done by Keir Hardie and McDonald in the British Parliament. I consider it a misfortune for the socialist movement of America that they have only one Representative in this Congress, who can not possibly perform his duty as a socialist with any degree of adequacy. I feel extremely uncomfortable when, after this short service in Congress, I have to force myself on the House. I feel as if I were imposing upon you. But believe me, gentlemen, I am not inspired by any vanity or any desire to hear myself talk. I hate the process of talking. Talk is valuable only when talk is action. But I am animated and inspired by a solemn and sacred duty to express to you in the name of the socialist movement of America and in the name of the international socialist movement my abhorrence of and my protest against that agitation for preparedness, which in speaking for preparedness against war will inevitably lead you into war with the nations of the world.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. LONDON. If you will allow me one minute. I find great difficulty in congesting so much material in so short a time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. LONDON. I will yield. It will give me time to look over my papers.

Mr. QUIN. In your judgment what influences in the United States are responsible for this wild propaganda sent out to the newspapers?

Mr. LONDON. There are three. I referred to them before. They are, first, the manufacturers of munitions, who have been exporting hundreds of millions of dollars worth of munitions, and who feel that as soon as the war is terminated they will be left without a customer, and they will need Uncle Sam's generosity. Second, the many people who have already been scared, and who really believe that they are in danger. Third, the very same influences that would lead you to go to war with Mexico so as to protect their capitalistic investments—the very same people who are responsible for the acquisition of the Philippine Islands and for the acquisition of Porto Rico. Their work is insidious. You do not see them or hear their names, but it is powerful work they are doing.

I say that the German Social Democrats had the courage to speak out boldly, and they said to the Emperor a few days before the war, and a few days after the war had broken out, that the military camarilla of Germany was responsible for this war, baiting Austria into insisting upon her iniquitous ultimatum against defenseless Serbia.

The socialists are not cowards. We are not afraid. More than 20 years ago I addressed an audience consisting of two good-natured fellows on the east side of New York, and every 10 minutes I would lose half of my crowd because one of them would go in to take a cup of coffee. [Laughter.] But I kept up my work. I knew the time would come when our movement would grow, when we would get more adherents. I knew the development of the United States 20 years ago did not offer a receptive soil for our philosophy and our theory, but I knew the social problem that was pressing Europe was universal in its character and that the people of the United States would awaken to its importance some day; and they are awakening very rapidly.

Now, gentlemen, I want to impress upon the American people the need of fighting the insanity of preparedness with the sane, rational, insistent demand for international peace. That is why I introduced on the 6th day of December a joint resolution calling upon the President of the United States to convene a congress of neutral nations to offer mediation to the belligerents of Europe. I sent a copy of that resolution to every Member of Congress, and if you will permit me, I will just say a few words about it. This is the resolution:

Joint resolution calling upon the President of the United States to convene a congress of neutral nations to offer mediation to the belligerents in Europe.

Whereas the people of the United States, while neutral, can not be indifferent to the fratricidal conflict which is devastating Europe; and

Whereas the longer the war is continued the more does the code of physical force replace every other code of human conduct; and

Whereas the war has brought about a state of fear in the minds of millions of the American people which menaces the normal development of this Nation and beclouds the real issues which confront our generation by the artificial issue of "preparedness" against an invisible and unnamable enemy; and

Whereas a declaration by Congress in favor of an immediate conference of neutral nations will strengthen the hand of the President of the United States in his efforts for international peace: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, called upon to convene a congress of neutral nations, which shall offer mediation to the belligerents and which shall sit in continuous session until the termination of the war; and be it further

Resolved, That it is the judgment of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States that a durable peace can be established if the following principles shall be made the basis of discussion in said congress of neutral nations:

First. Evacuation of invaded territory.

Second. Liberation of oppressed nationalities.

Third. Plebiscite by the populations of Alsace-Lorraine, Finland, and Poland as to their allegiance or independence.

Fourth. Removal of the political and civic disabilities of the Jewish people wherever such disabilities exist.

Fifth. Freedom of the seas.

Sixth. Gradual concerted disarmament.

Seventh. Establishment of an international court of arbitration, with the commercial boycott as a means of punishment for disobedience. And be it further

Resolved, That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated from the current revenues of the United States, to be used by the President of the United States in carrying out the purpose of this resolution.

I know that any man who now talks international peace is looked upon as a madman or a fool; that the only wise people are those who shake their heads and say, "We can not do anything," or those who say, "War existed, war exists, and there will always be war."

These men forget that the horse car has been replaced by electricity, and that just as surely as the horse car is replaced by electricity just so surely will the reactionary and conservative be replaced by the revolutionary, vigilant, and intelligent man who refuses to think in a rut.

The resolution was taken seriously by the press of the world. Let me tell you something amusing. A Democratic paper published in the city of Chicago, a weekly, one of the best papers you have, called The Public, not having been informed that I introduced the resolution, but being under the impression that Senator LANE, of Oregon, was the author of it—I need not tell you that I am grateful to the Senator for introducing it in the Senate—had the following editorial on the 24th of December:

DEMOCRATIC PEACE TERMS.

The resolution of Senator LANE, of Oregon, for a peace congress of neutral nations is a democratic and statesmanlike measure—

The author of the resolution is not only a good Democrat, but a statesman of senatorial timber. Look out for me. [Laughter.] It proceeds:

Senator LANE proposes that the suggested peace congress submit to the belligerents peace plans based on evacuation of invaded territory, decision by popular vote of Alsace, Finland, and Poland as to their independence or allegiance, freedom of the seas, gradual disarmament, and arbitration of all disputes. These terms are perfectly just, and no government which honestly desires peace with honor will refuse them. There properly might be some additions made to the list of suppressed peoples to be allowed to vote on independence. Bosnia, Herzegovina, India, and others might well be included, and the United States might set the example by liberating the Philippines. But even as proposed, the terms are such that refusal on the part of any belligerent must be taken as conclusive evidence that justice is not what it has been fighting for.

They could have enumerated 12 or 15 other nationalities. [Laughter.]

It is rather interesting, this editorial from the Democratic weekly. Let me also read from an editorial from the Labor Leader of Manchester:

The American Socialist Party has one Representative in Congress, Mr. MEYER LONDON, but, though he is alone, he is doing his utmost to hasten the coming of an enduring peace. He has given notice that he will move a resolution instructing the President to convene a congress of neutral nations to offer mediation, sitting continuously until the declaration of peace. The resolution also asks Congress to affirm as essential to permanent peace:

The evacuation of invaded territory; the liberation of oppressed nationalities; a plebiscite of the populations of Alsace-Lorraine, Finland, and Poland concerning independence; the removal of all disabilities of Jews; the freedom of the seas; gradual concerted disarming; the establishment of an international board of arbitration, with a commercial boycott for punishing disobedience.

That was said immediately after I had announced that I would introduce the resolution. Then it goes on:

We thank Mr. LONDON on behalf of the Independent Labor Party in this country for the lead he has given.

The sentiments that I expressed in this resolution are not the result of my imagination. They are the result of the study of peace terms and peace conditions. They are the result of the study of the economic struggle of Europe. Ten peace groups, working in France, in England, in Holland, and Germany—there is one German organization—10 peace groups have worked out a series of principles upon which a durable peace can be founded, and every one of these 10 groups favors a majority of the demands contained in my resolution. International socialist congresses held before the war and during the war promulgated the same principles. My resolution presents a consistent, logical, intelligent method of dealing with the problem of international peace.

Let me tell you one thing, gentlemen: You may be very modest men—we may all be very modest men—but I refuse to believe that God Almighty has picked out some special material out of which he created statesmen and diplomats, and that He created the rest of mankind out of some common clay. [Applause.] No; we are all made of about the same material, and I refuse to abdicate the right to think to diplomats and statesmen. The diplomats have so cleverly managed the world that they have got everybody fighting except themselves. [Applause.]

I would extend democracy to international relations. I would ask every Member of this American Congress to take my resolution earnestly. I would ask every Member of this American Congress to study it. You can not do anything nobler than to help bring about a conclusion of this war.

I was in England in August, 1914, immediately after the war broke out, and I saw the desperate attempts of the British press to arouse the people against the Germans. There was no enmity against the German people then. Nonsense! How could they hate each other? They were in constant intercourse, and have been for successive generations. The German language is well known in England now. The English have abandoned the idea that their own language is all-sufficient. They began to study European languages, and he who knows more than one language has a better opportunity to sympathize with other people and to understand them. There was no hatred in England of the German people, and there was no hatred of England by the Germans at the beginning of this war. It was a war of Governments, and not a war of the people.

In my resolution I ask that the President of the United States be requested to urge the convening of a congress of neutral nations. My idea is that he should be enabled to say that the collective conscience of the American people as expressed by its Congress has forced him to initiate peace negotiations and is compelling him to convene a congress of neutral nations.

There may be some men who think that all this talk about internationalism is entirely out of place in this Congress. They are mistaken. Everything worth while, gentlemen, is international. There are national prejudices; there are national hatreds. But science is international. Art is international. Music is international. Religion is international. All that you cherish in your religious system has been transmitted to you from the past generations, from other climes and other lands and other continents. Let us abandon that narrow conception of patriotism which consists in the doctrine, "My country, right or wrong," because there is a nobler doctrine, a higher doctrine, "My country must always be right." [Prolonged applause.]

To this higher conception of patriotism, gentlemen, I ask you to listen now. I suppose I shall have to resort to the expedient of asking and obtaining your unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks. Not that I wish to say a great deal more in the RECORD. I do not believe in canned speeches, but I will put my remarks into shape.

I desire to thank you from the very bottom of my heart for the fairness you have shown toward me, for the encouragement you have given me. I shall not abuse your kindness. I shall not abuse your courtesy. I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. KING. To ask a question of the gentleman, if he will submit to it.

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. KING. The gentleman is speaking for the Socialist Party of the United States, and is their sole spokesman upon the floor of this House. Referring to various of his remarks, I would like to ask the gentleman, if the American flag which hangs behind the Speaker of this House should be attacked by a foreign foe, what would be the attitude of the socialists as to its defense?

Mr. LONDON. I desire to say that if the American people were attacked, every socialist would rise in defense of the American Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. KING. The question is as to the flag.

Mr. LONDON. I speak of the American people. I want to reject the old code of national honor which we have inherited from monarchs and rulers of the Old World.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. I will.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman tell us what is the distinction that he makes between the American people and the American flag, which we suppose stands for the American people?

Mr. LONDON. The distinction between the American people and the American flag is just this: That the people are living beings, throbbing with life. The American flag is an emblem. A fool, a rascal, an idiot may insult the flag. It is something different to attack the American people. Every intelligent man should understand the difference. A madman, rushing out of a lunatic asylum, may attack that flag, and not realizing its sacredness may tear it to shreds. Will you fight him? No. But if anybody should attack the people of the United States, then every socialist, together with the rest of the American people, would rush to the defense of America.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York be kind enough to answer the question that I asked him?

Mr. LONDON. I believe I have answered it.

Mr. KING. As to what the attitude of the Socialist Party will be with reference to the flag of the United States if it is attacked by a foreign foe or a combination of foreign foes?

Mr. LONDON. I believe that a foreign foe can not attack our flag. Flags are not attacked. People are attacked. Do not draw that artificial distinction. You can not attack a flag. A flag does not feel anything. You can not attack a flag, but when a people are attacked, they have a right to defend themselves.

Mr. JAMES. I can hardly believe it is true; but I read in one of the New York papers the other day that the American socialists were adopting and signing this pledge. I should like to ask the gentleman as a socialist if he thinks it is so? It is headed "A league of treason." This is the pledge:

I, being over 18 years of age, hereby pledge myself against enlistment as a volunteer for any military or naval service in international war, offensive or defensive, and against giving my approval to such enlistment on the part of others.

I would like to ask the gentleman from New York as the representative of the Socialist Party if he thinks any socialist would sign such a pledge?

Mr. LONDON. I am glad the gentleman has brought that up. The socialist movement everywhere recognizes the right of a nation to defend itself. I would not sign a pledge which would prevent me from sacrificing my life for the American people whenever the American people were in danger. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENSLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York be extended 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma objects.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask that the gentleman have five minutes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from New York if he desires the five minutes to finish his remarks?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Or whether he proposes to yield to questions?

Mr. LONDON. I propose to yield to questions.

Mr. MANN. I shall object to any time for the purpose of yielding to questions. If the gentleman desires time to finish his remarks, I shall not object to that.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope my colleague will not object. There are some gentlemen here who desire to ask questions.

Mr. MANN. We would be all day at it, and then to-morrow.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, well——

Mr. MANN. My colleague [Mr. FOSTER] gave us a good lecture this morning about proceeding to business.

Mr. LONDON. I will ask 10 minutes, that is all.

The SPEAKER. How does the gentleman say he is going to use the time—to conclude his remarks, or to yield to questions?

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, in the course of my remarks I promised to answer questions, and I would ask the House for 10 minutes to answer questions. At the end of 10 minutes I will cease.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] asks unanimous consent to continue for 10 minutes, for the purpose of answering questions. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. LONDON. I do.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. One of the most serious questions since I have been here is presented in this, and I want my brother, representing one of the great centers of our civilization and representing the undercurrent of life, to answer this question: If this country was invaded by a foreign army landing on our shores, could we expect the socialists as an organization to help us defend our country?

Mr. LONDON. My answer is that the Social Democracy of the world is opposed to war, but if we are attacked we must defend ourselves. If something should happen to the United States—something that can only happen in the imagination of some gentleman from Massachusetts—if the territory of the United States were to be invaded by any other people, every socialist will consider it his obligation to defend this country. [Applause.]

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman spoke with some earnestness in condemnation of the infamous ultimatum that Austria sent to Serbia. As I recollect it, the ultimatum grew out of a criminal act of the citizens of Serbia against a nobleman of Austria. How does the gentleman view the present talk in high quarters of revenge against 15,000,000 people in Mexico?

Mr. LONDON. I look on the talk of revenge as the talk of savages, and as out of place in a civilized community.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONDON. Certainly.

Mr. LOBECK. The question has been asked the gentleman whether the socialists would defend this country if attacked. I want to ask if in the war now in Europe the socialists support their own Governments in which they live?

Mr. LONDON. In the European war the socialists are performing a difficult task. They were for peace until the last moment. In Germany they were told that it was a war for defense. They took the attitude that it was their duty to defend their own country, to defend their culture and civilization against a country of an inferior civilization, and at the same time they are now everywhere in Europe advocating the necessity of terminating the war. In the German Reichstag and in the Austrian Reichsrath, in England, and everywhere else they are advocating peace negotiations, and I have no hesitation in predicting that if the war is not terminated within a few months the world will witness one of the greatest revolutions in the history of mankind.

Mr. LOBECK. In every case they will defend their country as they see it?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. What does the gentleman think of the phophecy expressed in this House just before the breaking out of the European war, that this world would never see another war?

Mr. LONDON. It is very dangerous to make prophecies. Thomas Paine predicted in 1790 that by the end of the eighteenth century every country in Europe would be a Republic, but it seems that he made a slight error. In 1884 Frederick Engels predicted that by the end of the nineteenth century a cooperative commonwealth would be installed in every country, still we have only one Socialist among so many Republican and Democratic Representatives in 1916.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I do not think the gentleman has answered my question. I have heard many say that they were opposed to preparedness and that we would never have another great war. Does not the gentleman think that if the Monroe doctrine is insisted on by the United States there is great necessity for preparedness?

Mr. LONDON. I have tried to prove that the war was not an accident; it was the clash of economic interests between various European countries. My argument is that there is no clash between the economic interests of the United States and other countries; there is no conflict that would lead us to war. If there is such a conflict, we want to know it. I would not vote for any appropriation unless I knew what it was for.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Does not the gentleman think we are bound toward progress in a commercial way, and in that connection does not the gentleman think that we ought to be prepared?

Mr. LONDON. You are bound to progress in a commercial way, but progress does not lie in the direction of a protective tariff. The progress of the world and the progress of the United States lies in the creation of an international court of arbitration to settle disputes in a civilized manner. The progress of the world lies in the removal of the protective barrier. Every protective tariff is a barrier between the nations of the world. [Applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. In response to a question asked by some one, the gentleman said that unless this war concludes within a few months some serious revolutions will take place. I do not understand what the gentleman means by that.

Mr. LONDON. What I wanted to say is this: The Franco-Prussian War of 1871 was followed by the bloody Commune—the revolution in France. The Russo-Japanese War was followed by the Russian uprising of 1905, in which 20,000,000 people participated. Basing my reasoning upon what occurred in the past and upon the agitation in all European countries against the continuance of the war, I predict that, unless an effort is made by a great neutral power to terminate it, the European nations will reject the advice of their misleaders, who brought about this world catastrophe, and will bring about a violent change.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY. Of course the gentleman has stated that he is opposed to increasing the Army and Navy. I am wondering if he thinks the country would be better off if we had no Army and no Navy?

Mr. LONDON. I do know that the less this country relies upon its Army and Navy, and the more it relies upon the genius of the American people, the better off will this country be.

Mr. KELLEY. And the gentleman thinks that we ought not to have any Navy or Army?

Mr. LONDON. I have not said that.

Mr. KELLEY. That is what I would like to have the gentleman say—one way or the other.

Mr. LONDON. I have not said so. I have not said so.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman has not stated he thinks we ought to have no Army or no Navy. Would he be willing now to state whether he is in favor of the maintenance of an Army and Navy?

Mr. LONDON. I believe that as long as armies are maintained by others it is necessary to have some physical power for defense. I do know that the Army of the United States, and particularly the militia, has been more frequently used to suppress the struggles of the working people for better wages and shorter hours than against foreign enemies.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. One more question.

Mr. LONDON. And I want to ask permission to rephrase that answer, as it came out rather clumsy.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. May I ask the gentleman this question. Since he believes in the maintenance of an Army and a Navy, does he believe in the maintenance of an efficient Army and Navy?

Mr. LONDON. If it were necessary for the United States to maintain an Army and Navy——

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. But the gentleman says that he is in favor of that.

Mr. LONDON. If it were necessary, I would advocate an Army which would enable every man in the United States to know the art of arms. I would like, for the sake of the working people, if a large Army should be necessary, to see every workingman know how to use a gun, and not be the victim of the militia. But we have not come to that pass. No one threatens you. You are the victims of a nightmare of your own imagination. [Laughter.]

[By unanimous consent, Mr. LONDON was granted leave to extend and revise his remarks in the RECORD.]

STOCK-RAISING HOMESTEADS.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 407, to provide for stock-raising homesteads.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 407, with Mr. Cox in the chair.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment pending, adding a new paragraph at the end of section 2. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw that amendment, so that I may present it at the end of section 3, when we reach that section, and to offer in lieu thereof an amendment to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to call attention to a feature of this legislation which I think at least those who live in the country where it applies should have very clearly in mind. In the past, in legislating relative to the distribution of the public land, we have provided that the entryman may by conforming to certain conditions secure lands of a certain character. The enlarged-homestead law contained a provision that the Secretary of the Interior should make designations of lands that in his opinion were not susceptible of irrigation before they could be entered under that law, but the designation was not final as to the character of the land. This act very vitally modifies the past procedure in that its first provision is a provision of designation, and in the second section it then provides for the entry lution earnestly. I would ask every Member of this American Congress to study it. You can not do anything nobler than to help bring about a conclusion of this war.

I was in England in August, 1914, immediately after the war broke out, and I saw the desperate attempts of the British press to arouse the people against the Germans. There was no enmity against the German people then. Nonsense! How could they hate each other? They were in constant intercourse, and have been for successive generations. The German language is well known in England now. The English have abandoned the idea that their own language is all-sufficient. They began to study European languages, and he who knows more than one language has a better opportunity to sympathize with other people and to understand them. There was no hatred in England of the German people, and there was no hatred of England by the Germans at the beginning of this war. It was a war of Governments, and not a war of the people.

In my resolution I ask that the President of the United States be requested to urge the convening of a congress of neutral nations. My idea is that he should be enabled to say that the collective conscience of the American people as expressed by its Congress has forced him to initiate peace negotiations and is compelling him to convene a congress of neutral nations.

There may be some men who think that all this talk about internationalism is entirely out of place in this Congress. They are mistaken. Everything worth while, gentlemen, is international. There are national prejudices; there are national hatreds. But science is international. Art is international. Music is international. Religion is international. All that you cherish in your religious system has been transmitted to you from the past generations, from other climes and other lands and other continents. Let us abandon that narrow conception of patriotism which consists in the doctrine, "My country, right or wrong," because there is a nobler doctrine, a higher doctrine, "My country must always be right." [Prolonged applause.]

To this higher conception of patriotism, gentlemen, I ask you to listen now. I suppose I shall have to resort to the expedient of asking and obtaining your unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks. Not that I wish to say a great deal more in the RECORD. I do not believe in canned speeches, but I will put my remarks into shape.

I desire to thank you from the very bottom of my heart for the fairness you have shown toward me, for the encouragement you have given me. I shall not abuse your kindness. I shall not abuse your courtesy. I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. KING. To ask a question of the gentleman, if he will submit to it.

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. KING. The gentleman is speaking for the Socialist Party of the United States, and is their sole spokesman upon the floor of this House. Referring to various of his remarks, I would like to ask the gentleman, if the American flag which hangs behind the Speaker of this House should be attacked by a foreign foe, what would be the attitude of the socialists as to its defense?

Mr. LONDON. I desire to say that if the American people were attacked, every socialist would rise in defense of the American Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. KING. The question is as to the flag.

Mr. LONDON. I speak of the American people. I want to reject the old code of national honor which we have inherited from monarchs and rulers of the Old World.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. I will.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman tell us what is the distinction that he makes between the American people and the American flag, which we suppose stands for the American people?

Mr. LONDON. The distinction between the American people and the American flag is just this: That the people are living beings, throbbing with life. The American flag is an emblem. A fool, a rascal, an idiot may insult the flag. It is something different to attack the American people. Every intelligent man should understand the difference. A madman, rushing out of a lunatic asylum, may attack that flag, and not realizing its sacredness may tear it to shreds. Will you fight him? No. But if anybody should attack the people of the United States, then every socialist, together with the rest of the American people, would rush to the defense of America.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York be kind enough to answer the question that I asked him?

Mr. LONDON. I believe I have answered it.

Mr. KING. As to what the attitude of the Socialist Party will be with reference to the flag of the United States if it is attacked by a foreign foe or a combination of foreign foes?

Mr. LONDON. I believe that a foreign foe can not attack our flag. Flags are not attacked. People are attacked. Do not draw that artificial distinction. You can not attack a flag. A flag does not feel anything. You can not attack a flag, but when a people are attacked, they have a right to defend themselves.

Mr. JAMES. I can hardly believe it is true; but I read in one of the New York papers the other day that the American socialists were adopting and signing this pledge. I should like to ask the gentleman as a socialist if he thinks it is so? It is headed "A league of treason." This is the pledge:

I, being over 18 years of age, hereby pledge myself against enlistment as a volunteer for any military or naval service in international war, offensive or defensive, and against giving my approval to such enlistment on the part of others.

I would like to ask the gentleman from New York as the representative of the Socialist Party if he thinks any socialist would sign such a pledge?

Mr. LONDON. I am glad the gentleman has brought that up. The socialist movement everywhere recognizes the right of a nation to defend itself. I would not sign a pledge which would prevent me from sacrificing my life for the American people whenever the American people were in danger. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENSLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York be extended 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma objects.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask that the gentleman have five minutes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from New York if he desires the five minutes to finish his remarks?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Or whether he proposes to yield to questions?

Mr. LONDON. I propose to yield to questions.

Mr. MANN. I shall object to any time for the purpose of yielding to questions. If the gentleman desires time to finish his remarks, I shall not object to that.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope my colleague will not object. There are some gentlemen here who desire to ask questions.

Mr. MANN. We would be all day at it, and then to-morrow.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, well——

Mr. MANN. My colleague [Mr. FOSTER] gave us a good lecture this morning about proceeding to business.

Mr. LONDON. I will ask 10 minutes, that is all.

The SPEAKER. How does the gentleman say he is going to use the time—to conclude his remarks, or to yield to questions?

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, in the course of my remarks I promised to answer questions, and I would ask the House for 10 minutes to answer questions. At the end of 10 minutes I will cease.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] asks unanimous consent to continue for 10 minutes, for the purpose of answering questions. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. LONDON. I do.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. One of the most serious questions since I have been here is presented in this, and I want my brother, representing one of the great centers of our civilization and representing the undercurrent of life, to answer this question: If this country was invaded by a foreign army landing on our shores, could we expect the socialists as an organization to help us defend our country?

Mr. LONDON. My answer is that the Social Democracy of the world is opposed to war, but if we are attacked we must defend ourselves. If something should happen to the United States—something that can only happen in the imagination of some gentleman from Massachusetts—if the territory of the United States were to be invaded by any other people, every socialist will consider it his obligation to defend this country. [Applause.]

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman spoke with some earnestness in condemnation of the infamous ultimatum that Austria sent to Serbia. As I recollect it, the ultimatum grew out of a criminal act of the citizens of Serbia against a nobleman of Austria. How does the gentleman view the present talk in high quarters of revenge against 15,000,000 people in Mexico?

Mr. LONDON. I look on the talk of revenge as the talk of savages, and as out of place in a civilized community.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONDON. Certainly.

Mr. LOBECK. The question has been asked the gentleman whether the socialists would defend this country if attacked. I want to ask if in the war now in Europe the socialists support their own Governments in which they live?

Mr. LONDON. In the European war the socialists are performing a difficult task. They were for peace until the last moment. In Germany they were told that it was a war for defense. They took the attitude that it was their duty to defend their own country, to defend their culture and civilization against a country of an inferior civilization, and at the same time they are now everywhere in Europe advocating the necessity of terminating the war. In the German Reichstag and in the Austrian Reichsrath, in England, and everywhere else they are advocating peace negotiations, and I have no hesitation in predicting that if the war is not terminated within a few months the world will witness one of the greatest revolutions in the history of mankind.

Mr. LOBECK. In every case they will defend their country as they see it?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. What does the gentleman think of the phophecy expressed in this House just before the breaking out of the European war, that this world would never see another war?

Mr. LONDON. It is very dangerous to make prophecies. Thomas Paine predicted in 1790 that by the end of the eighteenth century every country in Europe would be a Republic, but it seems that he made a slight error. In 1884 Frederick Engels predicted that by the end of the nineteenth century a cooperative commonwealth would be installed in every country, still we have only one Socialist among so many Republican and Democratic Representatives in 1916.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I do not think the gentleman has answered my question. I have heard many say that they were opposed to preparedness and that we would never have another great war. The progress of the world and the progress of the United States lies in the creation of an international court of arbitration to settle disputes in a civilized manner. The progress of the world lies in the removal of the protective barrier. Every protective tariff is a barrier between the nations of the world. [Applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. In response to a question asked by some one, the gentleman said that unless this war concludes within a few months some serious revolutions will take place. I do not understand what the gentleman means by that.

Mr. KELLEY. That is what I would like to have the gentleman say—one way or the other.

STOCK-RAISING HOMESTEADS.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 407, to provide for stock-raising homesteads.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 407, with Mr. Cox in the chair.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment pending, adding a new paragraph at the end of section 2. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw that amendment, so that I may present it at the end of section 3, when we reach that section, and to offer in lieu thereof an amendment to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to call attention to a feature of this legislation which I think at least those who live in the country where it applies should have very clearly in mind. In the past, in legislating relative to the distribution of the public land, we have provided that the entryman may by conforming to certain conditions secure lands of a certain character. The enlarged-homestead law contained a provision that the Secretary of the Interior should make designations of lands that in his opinion were not susceptible of irrigation before they could be entered under that law, but the designation was not final as to the character of the land. This act very vitally modifies the past procedure in that its first provision is a provision of designation, and in the second section it then provides for the entry of the land as designated, the designation being final. This departure from our past policy has some advantage from the standpoint of the entryman. He knows under this legislation, as he has not in the past, that when the designation has been made and his entry is accepted, the case is closed as to the character of the land, and can not thereafter be raised. That is, assuming the department construes the provisions of the act in accordance with their evident intent.

On the other hand, it does present this situation: While under the 320-acre homestead law the Secretary's designation was in no way final, and the question of the character of the land could be raised at any time prior to final proof, under this law the Secretary's designation is final, that is, if it is construed in accordance with its intent. Therefore the officials under the Secretary making the designation will no doubt be cautious in making the designations not to include lands which do not properly come under this law. That will result in the necessity of sending men into the field for the classification of this land, something we have not to any considerable extent done heretofore, in order that no land containing merchantable timber be designated, in order that no irrigable land be designated, in order that no land fit for general agricultural purposes, if any there be, may be designated. That will render the work of designation slow, and so people must not be disappointed if there is delay in designations under the provisions of this act. There is another important effect that it will have. It will, in my opinion, make it more difficult to secure the designation of present entries as of the character of land described in this act in order to give the present entryman the benefit of one of the several sections of the bill providing for additional entries. Those sections all provide that his right must have been of this character. That means that the Secretary must determine that the region did not contain merchantable timber, was not irrigable, and, further than that, that it is of such a character that 640 acres are required to support a family. Now, just what the Secretary's policy may be when he reaches land that has been taken under the 320-acre law on the theory that 320 acres would support a family I do not know; but I make this observation, throw out these suggestions in order to show my understanding of what the effect of the bill is likely to be. I am rather inclined to think that under the bill, if it becomes a law in its present form, it will be very difficult to secure the designation that any present entry is of the character contemplated by the act, thus making the holder eligible to secure an additional acreage. There are some advantages, as I have suggested, but there are features which are very serious disadvantages.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Now, in my State there are approximately 700,000 acres of land recently designated under the act of February 19, 1909, the enlarged homestead act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. May I have one minute more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Wyoming having an additional minute? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of one minute debate shall close on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. That designation will apply to the working of this act.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, of course, I can not say what the Secretary may think about this land. I am raising this query. Lands having been designated under the 320-acre law; more having been entered under that law on the theory that they could be to some extent cultivated and were sufficient in area to support a family, what will be the Secretary's policy, then, in designating this land heretofore entered as of this character in order to make the entryman upon them eligible for an additional area? I am frank to say I fear that will be slowly done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That any qualified homestead entryman may make entry under the homestead laws of lands so designated by the Secretary of the Interior, according to legal subdivisions, in areas not exceeding 640 acres, and in compact form so far as may be subject to the provisions of this act, and secure title thereto by compliance with the terms of the homestead laws: Provided, That instead of cultivation as required by the homestead laws the entryman shall be required to make permanent improvements upon the land entered before final proof is submitted tending to increase the value of the same for stock-raising purposes, of the value of not less than $1.25 per acre, and at least one-half of such improvements shall be placed upon the land within three years after the date of entry thereof.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment——

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk began the reading of the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. If it is to be inserted as a new section, then it will be necessary——

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Wyoming offering it as a new section?

Mr. MONDELL. As a new paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

To be inserted at the end of section 3:

"Persons who have heretofore perfected homestead entries for areas less than 160 acres and who no longer own or have an interest in the lands embraced in their former entry, if otherwise qualified, may make an entry under this act of an area which together with the area of the former entry shall not exceed 640 acres."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Wyoming withdrew his amendment. The gentleman from South Dakota rose, a member of the committee, asking for recognition. How does this get in?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Wyoming gave notice that he would offer the amendment at the end of this paragraph.

Mr. FERRIS. But he withdrew the amendment, and moved to strike out the last word, and the gentleman from South Dakota, a member of the committee, rose and got recognition, and is entitled to be recognized first.

Mr. MONDELL. The Chair will remember the gentleman from Wyoming gave notice of the offering of this amendment at the end of this paragraph at the time he withdrew it.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Wyoming can not consume all the time on all paragraphs and give notice that he is going to consume it in the future. Mr. GANDY is a member of the committee, and was recognized, and I think he is entitled to have his amendment offered first.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state his recollection of the proposition. The gentleman from Wyoming had his amendment lying on the Clerk's table and asked leave to withdraw it, stating at the same time that he would offer it at the close of section 3.

Mr. FERRIS. If that is so, it will have to be reoffered in the regular way. He withdrew his amendment and moved to strike out the last word. After he had concluded a member of the committee rose to offer an amendment, was recognized, and is entitled to offer his amendment first.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma may possibly be correct in that, but the Chair understood the gentleman from Wyoming to say—I believe the RECORD will show—that he temporarily withdrew it and stated at the same time that he intended to reoffer it at the close of this paragraph. It is true I did not recognize the gentleman temporarily.

Mr. MONDELL. What I did was this. I temporarily withdrew my amendment to substitute and offered an amendment to strike out the last word, and offered my amendment at the end of the next paragraph of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the Chair's recollection of it.

Mr. FERRIS. Even if all that both the Chair and the gentleman from Wyoming say is true, the amendment has to be reoffered. The gentleman withdraws his amendment, which he has the right to do, and he offers a new one, which he has the right to do, to wit, to strike out the last word. I do not think it is of any great consequence, but I think we ought to proceed regularly.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming has been reported. If the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota is on the same subject, it is very easy to offer it as a substitute.

Mr. FERRIS. Surely. It is an amendment the gentleman has that has been talked over and pretty well agreed to, and we understand it. He is a member of the committee. The other procedure balls up the committee.

Mr. MANN. The members of the committee are usually entitled to preference; but, after all, they are not the whole thing.

Mr. FERRIS. I understand that. It is hardly fair for the gentleman to say that.

Mr. MANN. Well, I said it good-naturedly. I have no criticism of the committee.

Mr. FERRIS. The committee has been exceptionally modest in the reservations of time,

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Oklahoma is always modest and able.

Mr. FERRIS. I am probably not entitled to have that said; but we are entitled to have this said, that in this almost endless debate we generally save one or two minutes for all the members of the committee, and the rest is consumed by nonmembers.

Mr. MANN. In this case the gentleman slept on his rights.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman does not think so; but we submit. Go ahead.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I believe the amendment has been reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment has not been reported, then the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY] is entitled to proceed.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course, if the members of the committee want to take up the whole afternoon——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is recognized.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which the members of the committee seemingly do not desire to have the House understand is simply this: Throughout the eastern part of the country in times past many men have taken homesteads of less than 160 acres. Those men, having had experience as homesteaders, make the very best sort of homesteaders. We want to give them an opportunity to come out on these lands from wherever they live—Missouri, Iowa, Oklahoma, or in our own region farther west—and take such areas of these lands as, together with their former entry, will make 640 acres. It is an amendment in favor of the man who has once homesteaded in any State of the Union less than 160 acres. It will affect largely not men now living in the States to which this bill applies but men living in the States farther east, whom we hope to have come out and take lands. The amendment which the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY] would offer, and which the chairman seems to favor, is an amendment which will only give this opportunity to the men who have homesteaded in this very same region and on this same character of land. I want to give that right to the old homesteader from anywhere who did not receive the full 160 acres and give him an opportunity to secure such portions of this land as will, with his original holding, make 640 acres. The amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota will not only benefit solely those who have homesteaded in the far West; it will benefit few of them or only such as can get the Secretary of the Interior to decide and determine that the lands embraced in the former entry were of the character described in this bill. Not one in a hundred will be able to have that done.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. MANN. Under the gentleman's amendment, if a man has taken a homestead of 160 acres, he may take 480 acres of this kind of land.

Mr. MONDELL. No; not any.

Mr. MANN. And if he had taken 140 acres, he would not get any right under this. It makes a distinction between the man who got 140 acres and the man who got 160 acres?

Mr. MONDELL. My amendment applies only to the man who has had less than 160 acres. Heretofore, until the last two or three years, it was held that a man who had not secured 160 acres was a qualified entryman. Recent holdings are to the effect that, having made an entry of any acreage, he is not a qualified entryman. That holding barred such a man from an entry under the enlarged homestead law; it would bar him under this law. I offer this amendment to make such a man eligible for an entry to making his combined entries 640 acres, so that a man coming from outside these States, as well as one from within, may take up these lands. Otherwise many men we should bring under the law have no rights.

Mr. MANN. I thought we passed a bill in the last Congress in certain cases giving the right to take additional land where a man had taken less than 160 acres in the first instance.

Mr. MONDELL. There are statutes under which a man who has not taken 160 acres may take enough to make 160. There is a law whereby a man who has not taken 320 acres now living on that kind of land may take enough to make 320 acres; but this law is to enable a man who no longer owns his former homestead to take these lands in such area as will make 640 acres in all.

Mr. MANN. That will practically give to anyone who has a homestead entry anywhere the right to take 640 acres, because upon the homestead which he owns it is supposed he can not support his family?

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of such time as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] may desire the debate on this amendment close.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the amendment under consideration is directly violative of the principle on which the bill is drawn. This bill in various sections gives the right to any former entryman still possessed of his land, who has entered upon the same kind of land as is herein designated, to make additional entry so as to total 640 acres; but nowhere in this bill is there any such principle involved as is carried in the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] giving every person who has heretofore made a homestead entry and then sold it, perchance, the right to enter upon the remaining fraction that would be left after deducting the acreage in his original entry. It is inconsistent with the very purposes of this bill, as pointed out by the gentleman from Illinois. It is assumed that it takes 640 acres of stock-raising land for a man to support himself. A man may have heretofore entered 160 acres, and he would have, under the amendment proposed, the right to enter upon 480 acres. But why should a person who has heretofore exercised his right and taken a homestead upon agricultural land be privileged now to take this fractional part of stock-raising land, as suggested by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]?

He suggests that it is for the benefit of the people living in my country. No; it is designed exclusively for those who live in the Western States; who have sold out, perhaps, to the large stock-raising barons out there, and who again want to preempt some additional land so that they may turn this over also to those large stock-raising barons. I am opposed to it, and I think it is in opposition to the whole principle contained in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GANDY:

"Page 3, line 13, after the word 'Provided,' insert: 'That a former homestead entry of land of the character described in section 2 hereof shall not be a bar to the entry of a tract under the provisions of the act, subject to the requirements of law as to residence and improvements, which, together with the former entry, shall not exceed 640 acres: Provided further.'"

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I offer as an addition to section 3, which section provides that a qualified entryman may enter not exceeding 640 acres of land that has been designated by the Secretary of the Interior as enterable under this act, the following amendment:

Provided, That a former homestead entry of land of the character described in section 2 hereof shall not be a bar to the entry of a tract under the provisions of this act, subject to the requirements of law as to residence and improvements, which, together with former entry, shall not exceed 640 acres.

Mr. Chairman, in our public-land practice we have heretofore recognized that consideration should be had for the man who, for some reason or another, is unable to secure the full amount of land permitted to be entered under any public-land law. In the bill which is now before the House provision has been made for persons taking an original entry of 640 acres of such lands designated by the Secretary of the Interior as reasonably requiring 640 acres to support a family, and for an additional contiguous entry for one who has heretofore filed on lands of this kind, the original and the additional entry not to exceed 640 acres. As the bill was reported to the House by the Public Lands Committee there is no provision for an additional entry for a homestead entryman on lands of the kind described in this act where there are no vacant public lands adjoining the land embraced in his entry. As the bill was introduced, section 6 provided that, in cases where there are no contiguous vacant lands, entrymen might file an additional not to exceed 10 miles from the original, with credit for residence on the original. The honorable Secretary of the Interior, in his report on this bill, suggested the advisability of striking out that section; and the Public Lands Committee, by a close vote, followed his suggestion. Later on in this discussion I will have something to say about the principle involved in that section.

Many years ago, when we had only the quarter-section law, it was found that many persons filed on a forty, or an eighty, or a hundred-and-twenty acre tract. The act of March 2, 1889, granted to those persons the right to file an additional entry of such an amount of land as, when added to the quantity previously entered, would not exceed 160 acres, with a proviso that additional entrymen must comply with the homestead law in all respects. There was no limitation on where the additional entry might be secured, and the entryman who had filed on less than the maximum amount permitted by law could go into any public-land State for his additional.

The Kinkaid Act, applicable only to portions of western Nebraska, was passed on April 28, 1904, and in his report on this bill the Secretary of the Interior calls attention to how well the Kinkaid Act has worked out and the great development in western Nebraska thereunder, in the following language:

Since the last session of Congress the department has been seeking information as to the advisability of the passage of such a law as is now proposed by this bill. Attention has been especially directed to the operation of the act of April 28, 1904 (33 Stat., 547), which authorized the entry of not exceeding 640 acres of land in a considerable area of western Nebraska. The provisions of that act, as applying to that limited area, were in the main designed to meet the same conditions which the present bill proposes to meet as to other areas of the public lands. Eleven years have elapsed since the passage of the law relating to western Nebraska, and the investigations of the department as to the results of that legislation are both important and significant. Prior to the passage of the act of 1904 considerable land in western Nebraska had been entered under other laws, but the marvelous development since the passage of the act of 1904 is so marked that it must in great measure at least be attributed to that law. It has been found that some of the valleys and lower lands which intersperse the larger area have been made to produce through intensive cultivation varied crops of large value, and that the production of live stock has largely increased rather than diminished. The improvements placed by the settlers upon their claims indicate both prosperity and permanency of occupation, as dwellings of stone, cement, or frame construction, plastered and provided with conveniences, have generally supplanted the original sod houses, and the farmer who has not built barns, silos, or other structures for storing crops and protecting live stock is a rare exception. The live stock raised upon the small ranches is of a higher grade than that which was produced by grazing upon the vacant public lands.

It appears from statistics collected, covering 31 counties within the area to which said law is applicable, that the population was 124,508 in 1890, 107,434 in 1900, and 162,217 in 1910, an increase of nearly 50 per cent in population during said 10-year period, during 6 years of which the 640-acre homestead law was in force.

The value of household furniture increased from $174,779 in 1904 to $342,312 in 1914, an increase of 95 per cent.

The value of agricultural implements in 1904 was $139,609; in 1914, $243,304; increase, 74 per cent.

The value of cattle in 1904 was $3,176,109; in 1914, $4,267,055; increase, 34 per cent.

In 1904, 30 counties produced 69,962 bushels of potatoes; in 1914, 2,671,924 bushels; increase, 3,719 per cent.

Number of acres planted to rye in 27 counties in 1904, 47,451; in 1914, 91,336; increase, 92 per cent.

Number of acres planted in oats in 28 counties in 1904, 137,032; in 1914, 246,722; increase, 80 per cent.

Number of acres planted to corn in 28 counties in 1904, 564,554; in 1914, 1,143,916; increase, 102 per cent.

Number of acres planted to wheat in 27 counties in 1904, 122,799; in 1914, 297,900; increase, 142 per cent.

Number of horses in 31 counties in 1892, 107,295; in 1904, 168,556; increase, 57 per cent; in 1914, 282,624; increase, 67 per cent.

Number of hogs in 29 counties in 1904, 171,849; in 1914, 225,480; increase, 31 per cent.

The acreage of improved land in 27 counties increased 68 per cent in 12 years, 1892 to 1904; increased 77 per cent in 10 years, 1904 to 1914. The value of the improved land decreased 18 per cent the first period and increased 143 per cent the second.

The total assessed valuation of all property in 31 counties in 1892 was $23,468,899.69; in 1904, $27,480,836.57; increase, 17 per cent; in 1914, $57,278,766; increase, 108 per cent.

Of the land entered in Nebraska under the section law there is an average of 1 settler for every 571 acres. In the 37 counties affected by this law it appears that there are 4,589,870 acres in the hands of the original entrymen, 6,411,963 acres in the hands of small holders, and only 316,453 acres in the hands of what might be termed large holders; that is, those possessing areas in excess of 2,000 acres. The department is informed that the practically unanimous sentiment of the people in western Nebraska is that the law has been a benefit to them and to the country, causing a large increase in the population, promoting the development of the lands, and advancing generally the public welfare.

If there is any objection to the Kinkaid Act or any of its provisions, the Secretary would have told of that in his report, and having heard so strong a commendation by so high an official as the Secretary it would be entirely proper for this House to write into this bill any of the provisions of the Kinkaid law. When the venerable Member from Nebraska, Judge KINKAID, wrote that law he placed therein a provision which has now stood the test of almost 12 years, and which permits an additional entry of such an amount as will bring the entryman's total to 640 acres. The exact wording of that proviso is:

That a former entry will not be a bar to the entry, under the provisions of this act, which, together with the former entry, shall not exceed 640 acres.

This bill applies only to certain kinds of land. You will note that sections 4 and 5 grant the right of a contiguous additional entry to one who has or who has not proved up, whose original entry was of the kind described in this act.

Gentlemen of the House, there are other people worthy of consideration in addition to those whose homestead entries adjoin vacant land. Many persons have quarter or half section entries on lands of the kind and of the character described in this act, where no vacant land adjoins their land, who pasture their stock on near-by public lands. The land which they have been permitted to acquire under the homestead laws is not sufficient for the pasturage of their stock. If you, in this legislation, provide for the homesteading of the vacant public land and at the same time do not provide for this class of settlers who have no vacant lands adjoining them, and for whom I plead, then they must buy or lease pasturage lands or move. They will be compelled to quit, for the pasturage privileges that are now being enjoyed by them will be denied to them if all of the near-by vacant lands are taken up.

This amendment is not as broad as the proviso of the Kinkaid Act, for under that act there was no restriction as to the quality of land embraced in the former entry. Now, I am only asking you for a noncontiguous additional right for those who have had entries of the kind of land proposed to be disposed of by this act, and I submit that they of right ought to be provided for; that we ought to think of the man now there, of the men who have gone out on this kind of land and are doing the best they can to support themselves and their families.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY] may have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GANDY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood from the remark just made by the gentleman that the purpose of his amendment is to protect those who have formerly entered upon this kind of land, but who have not taken the full 640 acres. Am I correct or not?

Mr. GANDY. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I read the gentleman's amendment, it enables anyone who has heretofore entered upon this kind of land to enter upon the remainder of the amount to which he would be entitled after deducting the amount contained in the original entry.

Mr. GANDY. If the land is of like kind.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then there is no provision whatever, according to the gentleman's amendment, that would safely limit this. The vice of it is the same as the vice of the amendment introduced by the gentleman from Wyoming. You grant to any person, whether he is on the land or not, the right to go and make an additional entry. It gives an additional right. It does not require settlement upon this additional fraction. Persons out in the territory who have entered upon the land and sold it can make a double entry and sell it the next day after they have conformed to the conditions of this law.

Mr. GANDY. Just one moment, in answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin. This proviso reads—that entries made under the provisions of this amendment are subject to the requirements of law as to residence and improvements.

Mr. STAFFORD. But you do not forbid those who have heretofore entered and sold their rights to an entry from entering anew. As soon as he enters he turns right around and sells it to some adjoining land baron. Will the gentleman deny that that may not take place?

Mr. GANDY. I want to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] that he is raising a bogey man who is not seen in any place except in imagination. He is mistaken when he surmises that a man as soon as he enters this land will sell it to some adjoining landowner. The land contemplated by this act is low-priced land, and yet we are requiring three years of residence and improvements to the extent of $1.25 per acre. I leave it to the judgment of the Members of this House as to whether or not it is fair to presume that a man could make much money out of selling a half section or a three-quarter section of this kind of land, taking into account the three years of residence and the cost of his home and other improvements that he will be required to place on this land and that he will, of necessity, be compelled to place thereon in order to make it habitable for him. The chance for speculation there is small.

indeed, unless the man's three years of time are absolutely valueless to him.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman will not deny that it is possible for a man who has heretofore sold his homestead to come in under the gentleman's amendment and take this additional land?

Mr. GANDY. If his entry was of the kind and character contemplated by this act.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GANDY. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Under the amendment proposed by the gentleman will a man who has taken a homestead heretofore of an acreage less than the limits prescribed in this bill and who has disposed of his holding and who is not a settler there at all be permitted to make an entirely new entry and get enough land to make up 640 acres?

Mr. GANDY. If his original entry was of the kind and character contemplated by this act, and I insist that that is a principle that is as old as the administration of the public-land laws in this Nation.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Further suppose that I had gone out there into that country and taken up land to the amount of 160 acres and after proving up had sold it and had returned to my home in Michigan. To-day could I go out there and under this law get enough land to make it up to 640 acres? Having once shown my bad faith, that I did not intend to make a home out there, that I was not a bona fide homesteader, that I had sold out the land on which I had settled, could I go out there now under the amendment offered by the gentleman and again repeat the process through which I had gone?

Mr. GANDY. If the entry was of the kind and character contemplated by this act; and I submit that the fact that a man has sold his entry does not necessarily mean that he has shown bad faith or in any way attempted to commit any fraud upon this Government or on society. Let me call your attention to the situation in my district. The country adjacent to the Black Hills received its first homestead settlers in the latter seventies and early eighties. Following this, in the nineties, there came a period of depression, when the valuation of lands, as well as other things, reached low-water mark. In those days, in addition to the burden of financial stringency, crops were failures, and a quarter section of land could be purchased for from $150 up. I venture the assertion, without fear of successful contradiction, that in those days the average value of a quarter section of land was from $200 to $400. The quarter section which was embraced in a homestead entry would not produce a sufficient return to maintain a family, and unless the entryman had outside means of support he had to give up the effort that he was making in good faith to establish a home for himself and those dependent upon him. After proof many persons lost their places because of indebtedness which had been incurred in complying with the homestead laws, and others, being unable to even pay the taxes, were compelled to see their lands sacrificed at tax sales. Thus, through no fault of their own, but really because of the adversities which nature and a world-wide financial upheaval combined to visit upon that section, hundreds of persons lost the land embraced in their homestead entries. Some of them have been provided for under laws that have been passed by Congress at one time or another, and it is but fair now that in this bill provisions should be made for all who have heretofore entered a quarter section or a half section of lands that are of such character that 640 acres are reasonably required for the support of a family.

I realize that some argument has been advanced against this proposition, for it has been said here that no man ought to be permitted to take a less quantity of this kind of land than 640 acres on the ground that he absolutely needs that much to support a family. Now, there is nothing in this act or any other act which would prohibit an additional entryman under this amendment of mine from buying or leasing such an amount of land above that which he can secure as a homestead entry as will be necessary to support himself and those dependent upon him. The responsibility is on the entryman, and he must earn this additional in order to get it. If he is willing, after having once homesteaded a tract of land of this kind, to spend three years earning 320 or 480 acres of land while his neighbor is earning 640 acres, we ought not to say to him, "nay."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Does not the gentleman think that this right to take the additional homestead ought to be limited to those who are settlers now, and who need additional land?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. GANDY. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. This enlarged homestead law is less than seven years old now, and in some cases it has been charged here that people have gone on that dry land and have been unable to stay there, that lands which have been designated under the enlarged homestead law were of such a character that a man could not make a living upon 320 acres. There are some cases of that kind; but I think the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] has in mind settlements that may have been made several years ago in Eastern States under the 160-acre law, on good land. Now, this does not contemplate that.

Mr. GANDY. In closing, now, I plead with you to remember those in the West who have filed on land of the kind described in this bill, but who have no vacant land adjoining their original entries. The precedent established by the additional-homestead law of March 2, 1889, and almost 27 years of the equitable and successful result of that law sustains my contention. Almost 16 years of the existence on the statute books of a more liberal proviso in the Kinkaid law and the wonderful result obtained thereunder, in Nebraska, justifies my position to-day. Adopt this amendment and you will have dealt rightly, justly, and equitably with all citizens who are entitled to the benefits of this act.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I do not care how old the law is nor how old the man is who made the entry if, after swearing that he was a genuine homesteader, he sold out and perhaps left the country, and having once taken advantage of the laws of this country to acquire a home he has not been willing to comply with the laws and make a home, evidently never intending to do so, I think another law ought not to be enacted to permit him to go through with the same process again. It seems to me there ought to be a provision in this law limiting this right to actual settlers, those who wish to stay there, those who have gone there with an evidence of bona fide intention to become residents. This law might be extended to help men of that kind to make permanent homes and to acquire additional land on which they might make a living.

Some queer statements are made here in regard to the value of this land and what one can do and can not do with it. Judging by some of these statements, evidently the land is of no value whatever, yet the more a man gets of it the better off he is. It seems to me some of these statements are very inconsistent.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I shall not be able to remain longer in the House because I have a committee meeting calling me now, but I have it in mind that something should be put into this bill to insure that those who avail themselves of its privileges shall be actual settlers, and one of the amendments that I think should be made is that improvements allowed for should not all be fences. Under this law as it is now drawn——

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman seems to have a curious conception of a homestead out in the West. Does the gentleman think that under the provisions of this bill a man can comply with the law by living on a fence rail? Would a fence be the only improvement necessary?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. No; but there ought to be some evidence of permanent improvement with the idea of remaining on the place. A man might live in a temporary structure of some kind, of no particular value, and for which he could claim no particular credit, and might be given no credit under this law. Then he would be permitted to gain credit for having built a fence and so putting that land in shape to be disposed of. I have no disposition to place obstacles in the way of acquiring homesteads, and if it is proper in that part of the country to acquire homesteads of 640 acres, let them have homesteads of that size. Let them acquire them under circumstances outlined by this bill, but let there be some safeguards.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Would the gentleman inform the committee whether or not he has been over any of this land that this bill would apply to see whether his criticisms are just?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I have been through that part of the country a number of times. I have never made any such investigation as would enable me to say whether or not your entrymen had shown good faith in making their entries or in presenting their proof in order to get their patents. If that is what the gentleman's question means I have made no such investigation. But there is no question in the world, Mr. Chairman, everyone knows it, that fraud has been perpetrated time without number. Many men have gone out and taken possession of public lands under the homestead law, occupied them, or pretended to, acquired title, and have disposed of the lands, evidently carrying out their plans to profit by the law without complying or intending to comply with the spirit of the law.

Everything they did was with the intention of ultimately or immediately acquiring the land and disposing of it. This law should be so drafted, if possible, as to prevent that improper practice.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, if some entrymen under the homestead law should be guilty of bad faith, that would not be a sufficient reason why the whole system should be condemned and set aside. Furthermore, it is incompatible with our institutions that any man having selected a particular place or a particular locality where he homesteads should be required to forever remain there. But when the department passes upon the final proof of the homestead entryman and grants him a patent, that precludes the right of any man thereafter to allege any bad faith existing in securing the title to that land.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I regard the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY] as one of the most equitable provisions in the bill. In fact, the act will not be completely equitable unless this amendment be adopted.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINKAID. Yes.

Mr. BOOHER. I would like to have the gentleman tell me if I understand the amendment. Suppose a man enters 320 acres in Nebraska. Would he be permitted under this amendment to go out and enter 320 acres of this land?

Mr. KINKAID. If the Secretary of the Interior finds that the land of Nebraska is of the same character as this land he is to enter, he would.

Mr. BOOHER. It must be of the same character, but you are punishing the man by putting him on 320 acres. He is going to take it up and sell it, for he never can live on it.

Mr. KINKAID. Well, this is a free country, and it is for the individual to say whether or not he will cast his lot in a certain locality as a homesteader. This act will not do equity unless the amendment shall be adopted, for the reason that without it former entrymen obtaining less than 640 acres will not be afforded the opportunity to even up in area with entrymen under this bill. It will not be serving all citizens alike. If the amendment is adopted, it will afford all an equal opportunity. It is one of the fundamental principles of our institutions that we shall have equality before the law, and that this amendment will afford. It affords all a chance who have not had an equal opportunity heretofore.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINKAID. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Is the amendment so drawn that a man who has taken 320 acres under the Kinkaid Act in Nebraska can take 320 more in Nebraska, or can he go out in some other public-land State and take 320 acres?

Mr. KINKAID. Yes; he can go to any State if the Nebraska land is the same kind of land that is in the other States. But I am not speaking for Nebraskans alone, but for justice to all alike.

Mr. BORLAND. Does not the gentleman think that the 640 acres settled ought to be contiguous?

Mr. KINKAID. I think the man who has entered less than 640 acres ought to have an opportunity to make himself equal to those who have secured 640 acres, and this amendment will do that justice. Mr. Chairman, a vote for the amendment will be consistent with the maxim, "Equality before the law."

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 13, after the word "Provided," insert "That a former homestead entry shall not be a bar to an entry of a tract under the provisions of this act subject to the requirement of law as to residence and improvements which, together with the former entry, shall not exceed 640 acres."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The amendment now offered is one of a general character not restricted to an entry of the character of land provided in the bill. This would have been a proper substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming. His amendment provided for those who had made homestead entry of any kind of land whatever. This amendment should have been offered at that time as a substitute and not at the present time.

Nothing is better established in parliamentary practice than the rule that when one proposition is before the House the right to exhaust amendment must be made; any relevant amendment must then be offered. Otherwise we would be in interminable discussion in offering amendments at any time on matters that had previously been passed on by the committee.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to debate the point of order. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin is mistaken about the germaneness of the point of order. We are dealing with a homestead bill; we are dealing with the qualifications of homesteaders; and we are dealing with what particular class of homesteaders will be entitled to enter land under this bill. I do not think the point of order will lie. I do not say this in support of the gentleman's amendment, for I think I shall have to oppose him. I think the point of order is not well taken, because we are dealing with the precise thing the gentleman's amendment deals with.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is germane and overrules the point of order.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, a great many members of the committee seem to be laboring under the delusion and nightmare that a compliance with the homestead laws on the part of an entryman is a sort of Sunday picnic. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] seemed to labor under the delusion that a man who goes out and complies with the present homestead laws by residing for three years on a tract of land does that with the main idea in view of disposing of it to some imaginary stock baron. If the gentleman knew the actual conditions in the West he would know that year by year the large landowners in the West are selling out, and that the farms and ranches are becoming smaller each year.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly; I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BAILEY. Is the gentleman sure that that is a fact?

Mr. NORTON. I am absolutely certain of it.

Mr. BAILEY. The statistics furnished apparently do not bear out that assertion. The Census Bureau seems to reach a different conclusion.

Mr. NORTON. That the acreage in farms is becoming larger?

Mr. BAILEY. I think so.

Mr. NORTON. That is not true in any section of the West that I have observed, and I have been through all of the western public-land States.

Mr. BAILEY. I think on examination the gentleman will find that the Census Bureau so reports.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman furnish those statistics?

Mr. BAILEY. I know they exist.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I will say that in the Dakotas, in Montana, in Idaho, where this law will apply, during the past decade there have been no great tracts of land gathered up by this mysterious person called the land baron, spoken of by the gentleman from Michigan. My substitute purposes to give to any man who in the past has been one of a band of pioneers to an undeveloped section of the country, and has complied with the homestead laws, the right to make entry on an additional tract of land, which with his former entry will not exceed in the aggregate 640 acres of land.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman regards the purpose of this act as providing homes?

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. And section 2 provides that the land which is to be granted under this 640-acre homestead act shall be of such character that 640 acres are reasonably required for the support of a family?

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. If a man already had 160 or 320 acres, which he has disposed of, and he is given another 320 or 480 of a character such that 640 are necessary for him to support a family, what kind of a home will he have acquired?

Mr. NORTON. In reply to that I would say, as I said yesterday, that if it were left to me I would legislate to provide that he have the right to make entry on the entire tract of 640 acres. I would give him the right——

Mr. CRAMTON. But that is not the gentleman's proposition, however.

Mr. NORTON. No, it is not; and it is not for the reason that there are so many delusionists in the House here who imagine that a man who goes out and makes entry on a homestead in a new country has some wonderful privilege given to him by the Federal Government, whereas in truth and in fact the country where he goes owes more to him after he has spent three years there in building up the country than he owes to it or than he receives from the Government. Railroad companies interested in the question of immigration and the further settlement of the West have made calculations as to the value of a settler in a new country, and their estimates show that a new settler adds each year about $1,000 to the increased production of a new territory.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORTON. Every man who goes out and settles on a homestead and makes his home there adds each year to the production of the country approximately $1,000. By the amendment I have offered I purpose to give the same right to every man who is willing to go out on one of these 640-acre tracts and reside there three years and otherwise comply with the law. I purpose to give this right to the man who in the past has made entry on 160 acres of land and who, through one misfortune or another, has lost his homestead. In giving him such privilege I feel—in fact, I know—that the section of the country where he may take up his residence will be permanently benefited; and that he, with the experience and wisdom of his early pioneer days, will cause to grow two blades of grass where scarcely one grew before, and with his new desire for a home will raise and care for many sheep and cattle on these lands that now are unoccupied and unproductive. [Applause.]

This bill, if enacted into law, will cause to be settled up thousands of acres in the Dakotas, in Montana, in Idaho, as well as in the Southwest.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Upon what premise does the gentleman base the statement that if this bill becomes a law it will greatly increase the population of my State—the State of Idaho?

Mr. NORTON. I base that on the fact that there is to-day in Idaho a great deal of land on which settlement will be made under the provisions of this act.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Where?

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman contend that in the southern part of Idaho there is not to-day much land that would be included under the provisions of this law?

Mr. McCRACKEN. I did say so; and I say that the greater part of that land will be taken up by the large stock owner, who proposes to gather a large area of the public domain where he can control the grazing. Now, that is my objection to this bill; and I believe I voice the objection of every settler in my own State. I can prove that by letters which I have here, and I would like to read them for the gentleman's information. I do not think the gentleman has the right to speak for the State of Idaho. I have not any doubt but what this bill will probably work to the benefit of the gentleman's State, but the range conditions in his State are very different from those in my State.

Mr. NORTON. I am very much obliged to the gentleman. I do not wish to place myself in the position of speaking for the people of Idaho. The distinguished gentleman from Idaho [Mr. McCRACKEN] is well able to do that. I am willing to stand corrected, if I should be corrected in the reference I made to conditions in the splendid State of Idaho. While this bill may not be of so much importance to Idaho as to my State and to other States, I still contend that a man who is willing to go out and live for three years on this land, build his home there, and make thereon permanent improvements for stock raising purposes to the value of $1.25 an acre should be given the right to make entry on one of these grazing homesteads, notwithstanding the fact that at some time in the past he may have made and perfected homestead entry.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of 20 minutes all debate close on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that at the expiration of 20 minutes all debate close on this amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STAFFORD. How is the time to be divided?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Colorado wants a little time, the gentleman from Nebraska wants a little time, and I wish a few moments to oppose the amendment for the committee.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee, the Kinkaid Act contains this proviso:

> That a former homestead entry shall not be a bar to the entry under the provisions of this act of a tract of land which with the former entry shall not exceed 640 acres.

According to the report of the Secretary of the Interior this act has worked admirably. This great bugaboo that our friends look for does not appear. It is all wiped out. It is not in existence. The amendment that is now pending is the same as the Kinkaid Act. The amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota contains a proviso which has the saving clause of land of the character described in section 2 thereof, and his original entry must be of the character named in the bill. Personally, I would have no objection on earth to the substitute. It could not do any harm and would not do any harm. Those provisions have been found to be beneficial, but to show the committee that we are not extending beyond the kind and character of land involved in this legislation we believe that a man who has exercised his right to 160 acres described here and sold it should go to this country and he will not be debarred, or will not lose the right to enter upon 480 acres of land of the character provided for in this bill.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAKER. I yield.

Mr. McCRACKEN. The gentleman has an irrigation project in his State, has he not?

Mr. RAKER. Very little. We have collected in my State about $7,000,000 which is going to some place else, I am sorry to say, but we have got 10,000—ten hundred thousand—acres susceptible of irrigation, which we want to irrigate if we can get the money and get the department back of us, all of which, I think, will be done eventually.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Take a case of this sort: Suppose a man has taken up one small unit on an irrigation project, and he has a number of cattle that he can not sustain by the forage which he produces upon this——

Mr. RAKER. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. McCRACKEN. I am getting to that point. Assuming that he now has 40 or 50 calves and he wants to go upon the range which is a considerable distance from home——

Mr. RAKER. That would not make any difference.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Is there anything in this bill which will give that man an opportunity to go upon the range and select a range homestead so that he can take his cattle there?

Mr. RAKER. It will give him the same right as anybody else.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Then, how can the gentleman argue that you are going to encourage the stock raiser?

Mr. RAKER. Why, we are going to, because we are going to encourage his building; we are going to develop the country by which we will have more school houses, by which we are going to have better roads; we are going to be in a position to raise one steer that is worth five times that of the little long-horned ones they raise now, scattered over the range unprovided for and uncared for. We are going to give to them more meat for the market. We are going to have a better opportunity than we have, by permitting those who can assist to obtain a home and thereby get more land under farms. The provisions of this bill enacted into law and faithfully carried out will be of great good to the country where it will apply.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, if there were less applications for entry than there was land, I could readily see the purpose of this amendment. If there is more land than there are people who want homes, I can see how we might grant to one who had had his chance under some former homestead law a second chance under this act. The purpose of the homestead act, as I understand it, is to provide homes, but whenever that purpose is prostituted to satisfy land greed, the purpose for which the act should be enacted is destroyed.

In every community in this land, not restricted to any locality, are those working upon salaries or for wages who are haunted constantly with the idea that age is creeping upon them, that the time will come when the burden of years will decrease their efficiency and when they will lose employment. Such men are looking forward to the accumulation of some property that will be their haven when the evil days shall come. This land in the West is never settled by those who live in its immediate locality. The hills are always greener on the other side. The opportunities always lie outside the limit of man's immediate activity, for if the opportunities afforded by his own location were as good as those beyond the horizon, he argues, "I would have done better than I have done here." In the minds of thousands of these men constantly grows the hope that some time they may settle upon some spot of ground they may call their own which will furnish a haven when the other days shall come.

Mr. Chairman, I see no reason why, under the purpose of a homestead act, we should grant to some men two homes and deny some men one home. If there were fewer entrymen than there was land upon which the entries are to be made, I can see why we should give an opportunity to a man who had taken a less acreage to file upon enough of the land comprehended in this bill to bring his holdings up to 640 acres.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. REAVIS. I ask for two minutes more.

Mr. FERRIS. Will one minute help the gentleman any?

Mr. REAVIS. One minute will help me.

Mr. FERRIS. All right. I will yield one minute more.

Mr. REAVIS. The proposition I have to make in the moment I have left is this: If I am correct in the purposes of this act, if it is to furnish homes for persons who want to take advantage of the opportunity granted by this act, why should we deprive them of it by giving some other man, who has already had his chance, a second one, while to many we give no chance at all? The amendment will have that effect, and I oppose it for that reason. [Applause.]

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, it has been suggested that under this act opportunity would be afforded for the enlargement of land ownership in the West. It was suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the statistics will show that to be the case in the last 10 years. I am confident, Mr. Chairman, that the statistics of the Census Office will show to the contrary, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in that direction.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the discussion upon this amendment to the enlarged homestead law with a good deal of interest. I see those and hear those who are building for those who have not had an opportunity to take a homestead anywhere. I want to appeal, gentlemen, for those who have taken homesteads and who, because of the circumstances under which they labored, have lost the same. They have not received the benefits that have been accorded to others who have also become homestead entrymen in this far western country. Having been receiver of the United States land office in my State for many years, I came very close to the homesteader, and I want to appeal here and now for those who came out into that western country and filed on 160 acres of land that was not susceptible of large returns, in consequence of which, although they were allowed seven years in which to offer final proof to secure title to their lands, were granted the privilege of making proof within five years. They underwent five years of the hardship of that western country. Prior to the passage of the act of 1909 it became necessary for them to offer proof on their land to get title to the same in order that they might obtain credit from the business houses in order to maintain their families. The result was that about the time that they offered proof the 320-acre law came into effect, and they were barred by the provisions of that act from getting contiguous land. The neighbor, who had not undergone all the hardships undergone by this man, was allowed to come in and file on another 160 acres contiguous to his land. These operations have gone on for years, and the reason for my support of this amendment is to keep those people and enable them to make homes and support their families. I gladly welcome men from other States, from the Eastern States and from the cities, to come out West and avail themselves of the privileges offered; but we do not want the men that have undergone hardships in these Western States to be forever debarred from the provisions of this act. I do hope that it may prevail in this House.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the provision that was in the bill last year and passed the House last year was section 6; that is now stricken out. That passed the House last year practically by unanimous consent. I reintroduced it, but when it came up in the committee I was sure it reached too far and did too much. It practically made a gift of the additional land to the homesteader who had had one entry, without requiring him to move or do anything toward getting it. I believe he had to spend $1.25 an acre, but did not have to make his home on the land. We struck that out in the committee. But in doing that we went further than we ought to have gone, in my opinion. I think we went too far. Here is the Kinkaid Act, which permits anybody to make another entry who has had a preceding entry. Why, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] goes too far. He does not require them to move on the land and make a home. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY] introduces a middle ground, and says, first, that the original entry must be of a like kind, to wit, it must be nonmineral, it must be nontimber, it must be nonirrigable, and the Government reserves all the title. And the succeeding entry, if there be enough to make up the 640 acres, must be nonmineral, must be nontimbered, must be nonirrigable, with no water supply flowing into it at all, and in addition to that, under the Gandy amendment, he must move on it—he must take up residence on it. He must earn the addition.

Now, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] a moment ago was of the opinion that it would be wrong to let a man here take 320 acres additional, because he was of the opinion that he could not make a living on it, and therefore would make a failure, or he thought that we ought to put a line around it and draw him within the 10-mile limit. Now, he may be right about that. My own opinion is, however, if a man's first entry was either 160 or 120 acres, it will do no harm to let him take another grant which will amount to 320 acres.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman knows that anyone who has made a homestead entry and a preemption entry—a disclaimer entry—prior to 1900 has the right to make another homestead entry.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is right about that, but still we are giving him a larger unit.

Mr. NORTON. Why not give him the same as was given prior to 1900?

Mr. FERRIS. We are giving him a larger unit. I want to beg of my friends from the West not to insist on so much that they will break down their wagon. I am in favor of a 640-acre grazing bill because I think it will help those States.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield? If the land is restricted to that of such a character that 640 acres are reasonably required for the support of a family, and you give a man under the Gandy amendment land of such a character that he can not make a living on it and it goes into other hands, does it not defeat the purpose of this bill?

Mr. FERRIS. No; I do not think so.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, why not?

Mr. FERRIS. I have heard the gentleman's reasoning on that, and——

Mr. CRAMTON. Then you must believe that the department is going to construe this contrary to its purpose and include lands of a better character than the bill contemplates.

Mr. FERRIS. No. There is a positive prohibition against that. There is no danger of the department doing that.

Mr. CRAMTON. If it is of the character that requires 640 acres on which to maintain a family and you give him only 320 acres, he can not maintain his family on it and he loses it, and you thereby defeat the purpose of the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. If 320 acres is sufficient to support that family, then will the gentleman say it ought to be of this class of land?

Mr. FERRIS. No. I think both the gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from Michigan trip as they go along. Their reasoning stumbles and falls over the obstacles that have been erected. It will not work that way. There is a positive prohibition in the bill against the designation of any land that is not nontimbered, of any land that is mineral land, and of any land that has any known source of water supply upon it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Why do you skip the last prohibition?

Mr. FERRIS. Wait one moment. The gentleman knows I have only a moment's time.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; but I did not limit the gentleman's time.

Mr. FERRIS. I did. The gentleman is not to blame for that. We are trying to get along. Let me proceed for just a minute. This is a grazing proposition anyway. For instance, the land is 10 miles away from the former entry. The entryman could run his herds on that by digging a tank or pond and building a wire fence around it, and run a few cattle on his original entry, and also on his subsequent entry, although they are of the same kind.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question again?

Mr. FERRIS. Just in a moment. Montana has 376,000 people, Idaho has 325,000 people, Wyoming has 145,000 people, Colorado has 799,000 people, New Mexico has 327,000 people, Arizona has 204,000 people, Utah has 273,000 people, and Nevada has 81,000 people. Now, gentlemen, we do not want to run mad and leave our wits behind us, and we do not want to depart from reason and common sense. The people who have gone out into those States and lived there and existed there—Nevada containing only 81,000 people—have need of some relief from somewhere to get some people out there. The people in my State who are without homes need some place where they can exist. The people of Wisconsin and the people of Michigan, and indeed of all the States, need somewhere where they can find a place that they can call their own and remain on, and you have got to give them a little larger area in order to do it. That reaches the general proposition.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope what the gentlemen will do is to object to the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota, because, for instance, a man from Oklahoma could already have 160 acres of land, and yet under the gentleman's amendment he could go and take one of these entries; or a man from the State of Missouri or from any other region could go and do that. I do not think that is fair. It might, it is true, help people of my State, but it is not fair. I myself have taken a homestead, and I own it yet. It would not be fair for me, having a homestead that is worth a few thousand dollars, to go out to the State of Wyoming, for example, or to Colorado, to again take up anther homestead and deny another good man the right to take a home.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment:
Amend the amendment by adding, after the word "tract," in line 2 of the amendment, the words "within a radius of 10 miles from such former entry."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported now as amended?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report it as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

That a former homestead entry of land of the character described in section 2 hereof shall not be a bar to the entry of a tract within a radius of 10 miles from such former entry under the provisions of this act, subject to the requirements of law as to residence and improvements, which, together with the former entry, shall not exceed 640 acres: Provided further.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, if it is desired to carry out the consistent purposes of this bill, this amendment will be adopted. If this amendment is not adopted, the bill itself will be absolutely inconsistent with itself.

But let me say first, Mr. Chairman, that this entire controversy, so far as the committee is concerned, arose over the striking out of section 6 by the committee. That section provided that an entryman, if there were not lands contiguous to his original entry, might make another entry within a radius of 10 miles from his first entry upon complying with the provisions of the act, so far as improvements are concerned. It did not require residence. That meant that if that section stood in the bill an entryman could build a fence around 320 acres of land, or whatever amount was necessary to make up the 640, thereby complying with the act, if that fence cost $400, and then receive a patent to the land. He would not need to use it for homestead purposes at all, but could sell it immediately upon getting his patent, and use this section as a means solely of speculation.

When this bill was referred to the department, the department took that view of it, and in the report which is found in the report of the committee to this House it recommended that that section be stricken out of the bill, because, as the department said, it would promote speculation. Thereafter, after the committee had voted to strike this section 6 out of the bill, the gentleman from South Dakota came to me with reference to the question as to whether or not we could get together upon some proposition that would enable entrymen to get some land that was not contiguous to his original entry. I had supposed we had an understanding that the amendment now proposed by the gentleman from South Dakota should be limited to land that was within 10 miles of the first entry. I want to say frankly that that was a misunderstanding on our part. I do not for a moment charge the gentleman from South Dakota with misrepresenting what he desired to do in any respect, but I did not understand it.

Now, I did not object, and I do not object, to amending this bill so as to provide that an entryman may make an additional homestead entry, if the land of the original entry is of the same character as that proposed by this bill and if the additional entry is within 10 miles of his first entry, to the amount of 640 acres, because the theory is that both of those tracts of land will or may be used for a home, and that combined they will give to the homesteader an opportunity to make a livelihood upon 640 acres of land.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Is the gentleman now advocating an amendment that will prevent a man locating within 10 miles of his original tract?

Mr. LENROOT. No; it must be within 10 miles.

Mr. BORLAND. Then I misunderstood the amendment. I was going to ask how a man could farm two tracts that must be at least 10 miles apart?

Mr. LENROOT. No; they must be within 10 miles of each other, under this amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. That is a different proposition.

Mr. CRAMTON. Do I understand that there is anything in the original amendment that is suggested, or in the gentleman's amendment to that, which requires that the first entry shall not have been disposed of?

Mr. LENROOT. No. It may have been disposed of.

Mr. CRAMTON. It may have been disposed of, and hence the reasoning advanced by the gentleman may entirely fail.

Mr. LENROOT. That is true, in part. The gentleman is right about that. I had not thought of that; but that is not an argument against the adoption of my amendment. It is an argument against the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Dakota. Now, I want to call the attention of the Chair and the members of the committee to this proposition: If the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota be adopted without the amendment that I have proposed, it means that the House in passing this bill requires the Secretary of the Interior to designate lands of a character which, in his opinion, will require 640 acres on which to support a family——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. If the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota be adopted as proposed by him, it permits a homestead entry of 320 acres of land, upon the theory that that will support a family. Now, I submit to the gentleman that if a 320-acre tract is enough land upon which to support a family and enable the homesteader to make a living it ought not to be within this designation at all; and therefore, if this bill is to have a consistent purpose, no entry of 640 acres ought to be permitted unless the original entry and the additional entry can be used in conjunction with each other.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield for a moment?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Since the gentleman proposes to make it within a radius of 10 miles, would he not be willing to extend it and make it within a radius of 40 miles? I will give the gentleman my reason for asking that. Here is a man who writes me a letter. He occupies a homestead upon an irrigation project, and he says that he has now about 70 head of calves. He says he can not furnish enough feed for the calves from his small tract upon the irrigation project. He wants to go outside and get more land. He is not asking for a homestead; but would not the gentleman be willing, and would not the committee be willing to allow men who are situated as this man is to go out upon the range and locate grazing homesteads, so that they could find forage enough for their cattle? This man would have to go probably 50 miles before he could get to that point.

Mr. LENROOT. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Dakota and by myself would not take care of the case mentioned by the gentleman at all, because the land in the original entry must be of this character.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. Would it satisfy the gentleman to modify his amendment so as to allow the taking of another entry of like kind within the same land district?

Mr. LENROOT. I do not think that ought to be so. There is a land district in California that is 200 miles across.

Mr. FERRIS. Of course we are going further than the Kinkaid Act went, and further than we went last year. If a man should make entries 11, 12, or 15 miles apart, the two homesteads could be used in conjunction.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; but a land district, as the gentleman knows, in some places in the West would cover hundreds of miles.

Mr. FERRIS. That might be.

Mr. LENROOT. In southern California I think there is one which is 200 miles across.

Mr. FERRIS. Would the gentleman have any objection to a limitation of 20 miles?

Mr. LENROOT. I have no objection to increasing it to 15 miles, but I do want to make the bill consistent to the theory, at least, that the two tracts of land would be used in conjunction with each other.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. There is one law with a limit of 20 miles; would not the gentleman accept that?

Mr. LENROOT. What law?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The law that we passed for Idaho or Utah.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; the colonization act.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; and it was deemed practicable in that act to colonize within 20 miles.

Mr. LENROOT. If the committee thinks this should be done, I would be willing to accept the 20-mile limit. But before that is accepted I want to call attention to another reason why this should be adopted: Unless there is a limitation made, I wonder if gentlemen realize that any man that took up a homestead in the East where there was a sand-barren or worthless land would be entitled to make an entry in the West, and the Land Office would be compelled to send an agent to examine the original entry, say, in any State in the East to determine whether or not he was entitled to the additional entry. That furnishes another reason why there should be some limitation of a right to the entryman.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin by making it 20 miles instead of 10 miles.

The CHAIRMAN. That would be an amendment of the third degree.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well, Mr. Chairman, I will accept it as a substitute.

Mr. MANN. I would like to hear the amendment reported.

Mr. FERRIS. It only changes the 10 miles to 20 miles. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all debate on this amendment and the section close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks that all debate on this section and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, section 6, which was stricken out, was intended to cover this class of settlers—those still living on their lands, although they had made proof on them, who had no contiguous land that they could enter as additionals. That was stricken out. The gentleman from South Dakota introduced an amendment which went much further. It allowed any former entryman of lands of this character, whether he owned and lived on the land or not, to secure an additional entry to make up the 640 acres. Clearly the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin is not in harmony with the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota, for his amendment would include, for instance, a man who had formerly had a homestead in South Dakota and who wanted to take a homestead in Montana or Wyoming. It would affect a man having had a homestead in New Mexico who might want to take one in Colorado or Utah. It strikes me as being ridiculous to insert in that amendment a provision limiting a man to within 10 miles of his original entry which might have been a thousand miles away from where he is now living and wants to make entry.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the fact that never in the history of the administration of the public-land affairs in this Government when we have conceded the right of a man to a noncontiguous additional entry have we placed any limitation thereon. You may just as well argue, if you please, that the original homestead act which placed the limitation at 160 acres carried with it the presumption that 160 acres was necessary to support a family, and that when you only gave a person a noncontiguous additional 40, 80, or 120 acres you were doing something that you ought not to do; that you were promoting speculation, and yet since March 2, 1889, there has existed on the statute books of this Nation an additional provision with relation to 160 acres under which a person can go into any State of the Union having vacant public lands and get the additional he is rightly entitled to. No voice has ever been raised on the floor of this House to say that the act of March 2, 1889, does not work rightly and justly. No man has said that that act promoted fraud.

Then in 1904 the Kinkaid Act was passed with a proviso that permits a man to take such an amount as when added to what he theretofore had does not exceed 640 acres, and in the almost 12 years that act has been the homestead law of western Nebraska no charge has been made that that additional entry permitted fraud. I want to say to you that you are unfair to the man now on the land; you are unfair to the man who went out on the land in good faith to build up a home for himself and his family when you limit him to any given number of miles, 20 miles or whatever it may be. If this original entry was of the kind contemplated by the act, I submit that it is fair to let the man go where he may to get the additional land.

I recall that about the time the exodus of young men to Canada was at its height Congress passed the three-year homestead law, and provided that the claimant should have a right to five months of absence from the land during each residential year. Now, our residential requirement on free homesteads prior to that time had been five years, and it is apparent that many who had read the Canadian public-land laws believed that the three-year residence provision on the north side of the boundary was attracting our people that way. The three-year residence requirement and a provision requiring only six months of residence each year had, for many years, been embraced in the Dominion public-land laws. Hence the act of June 6, 1912, was by way of meeting the terms of our competitor.

I think I am safe in saying that the provisions of section 6, which section was stricken out by the committee and the committee's action agreed to by the House, were very largely borrowed from the Canadian land laws, and that where, in the period of absence permitted under the three-year law, we lacked a month a year of the Canadian provision, section 6 went the Canadian's 1 mile better than their law. In Canada, in addition to a homestead, an entryman is entitled to a preemption, but if, because there is no contiguous vacant land, he is unable to secure a preemption, he is permitted to take what is known as a purchased homestead. With reference to that additional entry, or purchased homestead as it is called, I quote you from the Canadian public-land laws the following:

> If the land entered under this section is situated within a distance of not more than 9 miles from the entrant's homestead, in a direct line, exclusive of the width of road allowances crossed in the measurement, residence upon the homestead may be accepted as residence on the quarter section.

There, gentlemen of the House, is the Canadian provision, which, in my opinion, led to the offering of section 6 in the last Congress.

For several years I was a United States commissioner in one of the land districts in the district which I now have the honor to represent in this House. Later I was receiver of the land office in that land district for nearly two years. My experiences in hearing homestead proofs that were offered before me as commissioner convinced me that we do not recognize existing conditions in many of our requirements. I recall cases where a son or a daughter would have a homestead in close proximity to the parent or where other near relatives were located close to each other. In the case of parent and child, the parent usually had a good home and the child a shack, as we call the homestead house in the West. Everyone knows that the rule of life is that, for the most part, the child would stay at the home of the parent, and yet we require the child and his or her witnesses to swear that he or she has resided on his or her homestead continuously, and if somebody with personal spite sends an anonymous letter to a land office calling attention to the fact that the child lived a portion of the time at the home of the parent a special agent of the Land Department is soon hurrying around to file charges against the homestead proof of the child. That is also true of other near relatives, and the situation that I have explained to you is not an unusual one. It is well that in this matter we should turn again to the common-sense provisions of the Canadian public-land laws—the laws that have worked such a wonderful development for the prairies of the western Dominion:

> Permanent residence by an entrant upon a farm of an area of at least 80 acres, situate within a distance of 9 miles from his homestead in a direct line, exclusive of the width of road allowances crossed in the measurement and owned solely and occupied by him, or permanent residence on a farm of that area and so situate, owned solely and occupied by his father, mother, son, daughter, brother, or sister, and, in the event of the death of such owner or occupant, continued permanent residence on such farm shall be accepted as residence upon the homestead.

Let me call your attention to another of our unreasonable requirements, which causes perjury to be committed every time a three-year proof is made. The witnesses of the claimant are required, at final proof, to testify to the particular number of acres that were planted, giving crops and the specific yields for each of the years since claimant established residence. Now, if the witnesses were required to testify of their own personal knowledge as to the aggregate number of acres that a claimant had in crop each year they could do that truthfully; but I submit to you that not one witness in a thousand can, of his own personal knowledge, testify to specific crop acreages and yields of previous years. In scores, if not hundreds of cases, I have seen the claimant and his two witnesses stand on the walk or sit down on the step in front of the building in which my office, as commissioner, was located, and the claimant carefully explain to the witnesses just what he had raised each year and the acreage. In a great many cases the claimant would prepare a statement of acreages, crops, and yields each year, and from that statement the witnesses gave their testimony. It does not stand to reason that a witness, who may live several miles from the homestead entry of a person, will have investigated and charged his memory, each year, with just the crops that the claimant planted in each of his fields, the acreage of the crops, and the yields.

I trust that before our public lands are gone we may indeed get our public-land laws and regulations on a practical working basis, that will be fair between man and man and recognize conditions as they exist in the field.

I am very much interested in the passage of this section grazing homestead bill, and I am of the opinion that a good many hundred thousand acres of rough land in western South Dakota will be entered thereunder.

My amendment was presented in good faith, in an honest effort to provide for people who of right ought to be provided for in this bill. The Lenroot amendment is a departure from our long-established practice in permitting additional entries and ought not to be adopted. The bill in itself is good, and I may be pardoned for trying to impress you with the idea that my amendment will make it better. After this measure has been enacted into a law I am confident that, in the years to come, there will be found scattered over an exceptionally large acreage of now unappropriated public domain in the West the homes of prosperous, contented, and happy people, who will have been given the benefit of an act which recognizes existing conditions.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Michigan permit me to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I have been cut down now to four minutes. If I have time, I will permit it later. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee somewhat new to these matters, I have been watching them with a great deal of interest, and I have been inclined to take this bill as meaning just what has been claimed for it, and what the bill says, that the purpose of it is to attract men to homes in the West. It having been found that 160 acres or 320 acres of land of a certain character are not sufficient to maintain the family, and therefore a home, it is here proposed to grant 640 acres. That is a whole lot of land of the kind that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] picked out for his homestead, but we are told that this is to be a different kind of land. It is now proposed, as I understand it, by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY], that any entryman under a former homestead law who desires may come in now and get enough more——

Mr. GANDY. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. GANDY. Of the kind.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; of the kind. Unless the land is of the kind covered by section 1, it ought not to be granted under this act, and section 1 says that the land to be granted shall be of such a character that 640 acres are reasonably required for the support of a family. The Gandy amendment is such that a man having received 160 acres of the land covered here—I do not know what he would want of it—but having received it and given it up or sold it, he is now to be permitted to come in, having disposed of the 160 acres, be it valuable or otherwise, and get 480 acres; or, if before he has 320 acres, he is to come in now and get 320 acres of a character that 640 is necessary to support a family. What is he going to do with it? He can not support a family, because it is of that character that 640 acres is the least amount that can support a family. What will he do? Naturally he is going to abandon it and turn it over to somebody else, and if there are land barons or cattle barons in the West—and there seems to be some dispute, for my friend from Idaho [Mr. MCCRACKEN] says there are—then that is going not to make a home which you desire, but it is going to swell the acres of your land baron or your cattle baron, and I think that is the purpose of your bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. NORTON].

Mr. MANN. Let us have it reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FERRIS) there were—ayes 56, noes 10.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I now desire to offer an amendment, as I stated to the chairman of the committee at the time he limited debate. I move to amend by inserting in the Gandy amendment, after the word "acres," the words:

Provided said entryman owns and resides upon the land so formerly acquired.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the Gandy amendment by inserting, after the word "acres," the following:

"Provided said entryman owns and resides upon the land so formerly acquired."

Mr. FERRIS. He can not live in two places, and we prefer him to earn a subsequent entry by living upon it.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am trying to fix it so that he will have enough land on which to maintain a family.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. CRAMTON) there were—ayes 19, noes 37.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. NORTON] as amended by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were—ayes 56, noes 2.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That any homestead entryman of lands of the character herein described, who has not submitted final proof upon his existing entry, shall have the right to enter, subject to the provisions of this act, such amount of contiguous lands designated for entry under the provisions of this act as shall not, together with the amount embraced in his original entry, exceed 640 acres, and residence upon the original entry shall be credited on both entries, but improvements must be made on the additional entry equal to $1.25 for each acre thereof.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. A good deal has been said in this debate about people acquiring agricultural homesteads and making a living for their families. My observation in the agricultural regions has led me to believe that the greatest difficulty the American farmer confronts to-day is finding a prompt and adequate market ready for what he raises. I am glad that the present administration is to be credited with an extension of the parcel post provisions by which the American farmer may have a little better market for his produce.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does the gentleman consider that in the administration of the rural-delivery service the present practice by which a man's mail box is half a mile from the farmhouse constitutes another improvement?

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman hardly expects an answer to that.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is a serious question, if the gentleman is talking about the benefits of the parcel post on the farm.

Mr. BORLAND. I would be glad to answer that. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read as a part of my remarks, the recent improvements in marketing farm produce, which may be of interest to these gentlemen who are interested in the establishment of homes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is out of order, in that he is not discussing the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have to proceed in order.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not know it appears I am out of order until the matter has been read, and I think it is germane to this statement.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's statement makes it out of order. I appeal to the gentleman not to introduce such extraneous matters now. We are not making progress——

Mr. BORLAND. I will say to the gentleman I do not think I am introducing extraneous matters; I think I am entirely within the limits of debate on this bill, and I have not taken a great deal of time on it. I ask unanimous consent to insert it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, let me say we have been putting in all day long on one section of this bill, and for heaven's sake let us get along, otherwise it will take us all winter to pass this one bill; and I hope that members of the committee will confine their talk at least to the bill itself——

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I have no personal responsibility for the length of time taken in this debate.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. And there is a desire to get this bill through.

Mr. NORTON. Is it the gentleman's purpose to tell us how the Postmaster General is going to supply the Postal Service to all these homes?

Mr. BORLAND. I might regard that as extraneous to the debate, but I should be very glad to discuss it. I think the article can be read in less time than it takes to discuss the matter.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I will say to the gentleman that if we introduce questions with reference to the parcel post, rural free-delivery routes, we may talk on it until we are blue in the face and not get any further along. It is a very tender subject—perhaps the gentleman may not be aware of it——

Mr. BORLAND. I have no doubt it is a very tender subject. I ask unanimous consent to insert it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the Clerk may read the document in his time.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and insert it as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to insert the articles as part of his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The articles are as follows:

[From the Kansas City Star, Jan. 13, 1916.]

TRY A FARM-TO-TABLE PLAN—PARCEL POST WILL BRING HOUSEWIFE AND FARMER TOGETHER.

W. N. Collins, acting postmaster, has won recognition from Washington on his efforts to make the parcel post a farm-to-table servant. By special order of Postmaster General Burleson he has been given authority to become a clearing house between the farm and the city, bringing producer and consumer together.

In results it is perhaps the biggest thing the department has done since establishing the parcel-post service, Mr. Collins believes.

Here is what it will do: The farmers, most especially those within the 150-mile zone of Kansas City, will write in giving a list of the produce they have to sell. This will be printed on a list, issued at frequent intervals. The city housewife who asks for this list may have it mailed to her and she may write direct to the producer to order. The carriers will distribute these lists to the homes if the voluntary demand does not prove sufficient.

Thus consumer and producer are introduced. If the producer wishes, the product may be sent C. O. D. for an extra charge of 10 cents, and the Post Office Department will collect and return the money.

"Few persons realize how cheaply they might have fresh vegetables, fruit, butter, eggs, meat, lard, sorghum, and many other farm products direct from the farm," Mr. Collins said. "The carriage charges are very light. The rule is that within 150 miles the package is carried for just 4 cents more than the number of pounds. Thus a 10-pound ham would be carried for 14 cents. The C. O. D. charge, which insures the sender, would be the uniform one of 10 cents, thus bringing the total 10-pound cost up to 24 cents."

Mr. Collins will get a list of the farmers by bulletins sent to the country post offices. All mail for this service should be addressed:

"Postmaster, Kansas City, Mo., Farm to Table."

[From the Kansas City Star, Jan. 14, 1916.]

LINKING FARM AND TABLE—W. N. COLLINS'S PARCEL-POST PLAN BEGINS WITH A RUSH—CITY DWELLERS WILL KNOW THE DELIGHTS OF REAL COUNTRY PRODUCTS UNDER THE NEW SYSTEM, THE POSTMASTER SAYS.

W. N. Collins, acting postmaster, admitted to-day he was not entirely unselfish in his farm-to-table parcel-post bulletin service.

"Did you ever eat a real country-cured hog jowl, cooked with turnip greens?" he asked. "Or, better still, did you ever eat a piece of sugar-cured hickory-smoked ham? If you haven't, one of the joys of life is yet before you.

"You will never know real cured meat until the aroma of a hickory-smoked ham fills your home like a perfume and you have lingered over its taste. I will confess I have not known these joys as often as I would like, but if this new bulletin service proves as effective as I anticipate I will be able to speak on the authority of something more definite than a remote memory."

THE INQUIRIES COMING IN.

Mr. Collins also had something to say about the delights of country sausage made up without filler or preservative and flavored with sage.

"So, you see, we hope this service will not only reduce the cost of living, but add to its joy," he said.

The first day of the new service following the announcement in the Star brought very satisfactory results. Nine inquiries came in, five from city residents who wanted to buy and the other four from Clay Center, Osawatomie, and Topeka, Kans., and Woodland, Mo., from those offering to sell.

The first inquiry was from W. B. Laughlin, president of the National Detective Agency. Mr. Laughlin said to-day he has been buying some produce from the farm and getting it cheaper and fresher, but is not able to get all he wants from his present correspondents. He predicts that the service will fill a very definite want and aid in reducing the high cost of living, besides furnishing a market to certain farm products which are otherwise often allowed to go to waste.

A PRINTED BULLETIN SOON.

Yesterday's mail from the farms brough offers to furnish butter, eggs, dressed turkeys, hens, spring chickens, guineas, ducks, geese, and "apple juice, unfermented." One writer, from the quantities of fresh eggs he offers to furnish, evidently is a country grocer.

As soon as enough producers have written to make a good list Mr. Collins will print a bulletin for distribution to consumers in this city who ask for them. All letters should be addressed:

"Postmaster, Farm to Table, Kansas City, Mo."

[From the Kansas City Star, Jan. 15, 1916.]

BIG OPENING FOR FARMERS—THE MARKETING BY PARCEL POST PLAN BRINGS RESPONSE—IN A LETTER TO POSTMASTER COLLINS FROM HUMBOLDT, KANS., J. S. LEHMAN PROPOSES TO ORGANIZE THE WHOLE COUNTY TO SUPPLY PRODUCE.

A proposition to have a whole county take up farm-to-table marketing by parcel post has been made to W. N. Collins, acting postmaster, by J. S. Lehman, of Humboldt, Kans.

"This proposition looks good to me," Mr. Lehman writes, "as this county is well organized with farm organizations on the cooperative plan. I believe a splendid business could be built up along this line. If I can get your cooperation to start the movement, I will carry the proposition right into the farm organization."

Mr. Collins has met the suggestion very favorably. He is willing to list every farmer in the county if they request it, or he would be glad to cooperate with any organization of producers that might handle the proposition under one name, providing inspection and a guaranty of quality.

FOLLOW FRUIT GROWERS' PLAN.

The various fruit-growing associations follow the plan of requiring a certain standard and quality of product before it will be sent out, and it goes out under a standard label guaranteeing it. Such a plan as this might be adopted with poultry, eggs, butter, fruit, vegetables, and meat sold by parcel post, Mr. Collins believes.

Mr. Collins is very much pleased with the response to the announcement of the new bulletin service. Letters are arriving from producers and consumers in about equal proportions and are filed in a special filing case for the purpose.

Yesterday fruit cake and sausage were added to the list of products offered.

A LIST OUT SOON.

A printed list of all the producers and what they offer will not be issued for several days, until a sufficient number have written in. It is Mr. Collins's plan to leave the name on the list for about 30 days, and then drop it unless the producer writes in that he has not yet secured customers and wants his name continued.

Emphasis is being laid on the fact that the new service to prove a success must be based on honest and square dealing, and the farmer must offer a bargain price, otherwise the consumer will buy from the corner grocery, which is done without the trouble of writing letters and sending checks or money orders, and where replacement for poor goods can always be secured.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 22, strike out the words "lands of the character herein described" and insert "nonirrigable land which does not contain merchantable timber."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, if we want to make this bill a real benefit to the men already on the ground in the country to which it applies, we must modify the bill by striking out the words "of lands of the character herein described." The present homesteader in these States who has land of the character described in the bill adjacent to his homestead is on land which, it is true, is of a somewhat similar character, but having made entry under a 160 or 320 acre homestead law, having been able to cultivate some of his land, I think it quite likely that the Secretary will hesitate to designate such present entries, many of them at least, as coming under this act. If that be true, then this section and the following section will be of very little benefit to anyone. My amendment provides that the original entry shall not be irrigable, shall not contain merchantable timber. Now, if the original entry be not irrigable and does not contain merchantable timber, in the nature of things it must be approximately of the character of the land described in the bill, and yet it may be land some part of which the entryman is farming, and successfully farming, and therefore might not be designated. I fear that in carrying out the provisions of the act the agents of the Interior Department will hold that they can not consistently declare with regard to many of those entries upon which men are now living that it would require 640 acres of such land to support a family, although as a fact that would be in a general way entirely true. We are accomplishing by the amendment I propose what we should seek to accomplish, not to give the man who has timbered areas or irrigable lands an additional entry, but to give those who have lands of this character adjacent to their original entries an opportunity to enter without being compelled to prove that the lands they would occupy are clearly embraced in all the definitions of this bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of five minutes debate be closed on this paragraph and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is to afford additional homes in the West. That is the reason that our western friends have asked for it, but as we proceed section by section in the consideration of the bill it has become more and more evident that, as to some of them at least, it is not additional homes that they want in the West, but additional land for the men now there.

Mr. MONDELL. Might I ask my friend this question?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The provision as it stands does not make any additional homes; the gentleman knows that. My provision does not change that feature of the section at all. It simply allows a larger number of people in the country to avail themselves of the provisions of the bill. The gentleman should not be unfair in his statements.

Mr. LENROOT. I did not want to be unfair, and was not.

Mr. MONDELL. Then, when the gentleman says that we are not after additional homes, I desire to suggest to him that the section does not provide for it.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not yield further. Let us see. Under the amendment of the gentleman, if it is adopted, the land originally entered might be 160 acres or might be 320 acres that would support not only one family, but five families—neither nonirrigable nor containing merchantable timber.

That is the only condition, and yet the gentleman would permit that kind of an entryman to get 480 acres additional or 320 acres additional. Does not that mean more land? While the purpose of the language in the bill is just this, that where there is an entryman now upon land of this character and he will not be able to stay there and live unless he has more land, then we propose to give him an additional acreage if it is contiguous, so as to enable him to stay there and support his family, while the gentleman proposes to take away from the public domain land that might be entered by home seekers and give it to one who does not need it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That persons who have submitted final proof upon, or received patent for, lands of the character herein described under the homestead laws, and who own and reside upon the land so acquired, may, subject to the provisions of this act, make additional entry for and obtain patent to contiguous lands designated for entry under the provisions of this act, which, together with the area theretofore acquired under the homestead law, shall not exceed 640 acres, on proof of the expenditure required by this act on account of permanent improvements upon the additional entry.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out of lines 7 and 8 the words "lands of the character herein described" and insert in lieu thereof "nonirrigable lands which do not contain merchantable timber."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MONDELL. It is exactly the same amendment I offered to the other section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 7 and 8, the words "lands of the character herein described" and insert "nonirrigable lands which do not contain merchantable timber."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, neither this section——

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield just a moment?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the end of five minutes debate close on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] asks unanimous consent that at the end of five minutes, debate be closed on this paragraph. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Neither this section nor the preceding section will make any more homes than are now established. They were not expected to; they are not intended to. But under the provisions of this section as they stand, my opinion is that there will not be one entryman out of a hundred in the region affected by this bill, now holding an entry and having lands of this character adjacent to it, that will receive the benefits of this section. Where men have gone onto lands heretofore under the 320-acre homestead law, although they are practically the same kind of land that will be entered under this law, where men have gone onto such lands in that country under the 160-acre law, although their lands may be essentially the same character of lands that are contemplated under this act, the agents of the Secretary will be very loath in the majority of such cases, in my opinion, to say that of such lands it requires 640 acres to support a family.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has said the amendment would allow a man having 160 or 320 acres of land that would support five or six families to still secure more land. The gentleman is not as familiar with the land, nonirrigable and not containing merchantable timber, that has been recently entered in this region as some of us are, and I doubt if he could find anywhere in the whole region affected by the bill a single, solitary, nonirrigable tract having lands of this character adjacent to it upon which you could support in very considerable comfort one family, much less three or four or five. My amendment is simply intended to give the opportunity which it assumes to give, which it pretends to give, which it holds out the hope of giving, and which it does not give, and which in its administration will prove to have been a false hope. Do not let gentlemen imagine they can sit here and legislate for their constituents as we are legislating in these two sections without their constituents analyzing what they do and realizing what its effect is to be.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from New Mexico?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. According to the gentleman's argument, if a man has taken up 320 acres under the act of 1909, or 160 acres, and has improved it, and developed water on his original homestead, he can not take an additional entry?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me, I will answer his question. My provision is very plain. If the land he has is not irrigable and does not contain merchantable timber, he can secure the addition. Under the provision in the bill he must further prove to the satisfaction of the Secretary that the land in his original entry will not support a family on less than 160 acres. It may be they will not, but it will be another thing to convince the department of that fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That in the event there are not contiguous lands in area sufficient to complete an entry of 640 acres, as provided for in this act, the entryman or patentee shall have the right to enter within a radius of 10 miles from his first entry, subject to the same requirements as specified for contiguous additional entries, lands in reasonably compact form which have been designated for entry under the provisions of this act, that shall, together with the first entry, not exceed 640 acres: Provided, That the entryman shall be required to enter all contiguous areas open to entry prior to the entry of any noncontiguous land.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 4, by striking out lines 17 to 25, inclusive, and, on page 5, by striking out lines 1, 2, and 3, inclusive, comprising section 6.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this bill was passed in the last Congress under a suspension of the rules, running over my dead body, or live body, whatever it was. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORTON. No; it is quite alive.

Mr. MANN. Now, the committee comes in with about a dozen material amendments to the bill, one of them striking out a section which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] a while ago said the department stated would be almost ruinous to the public-land interests of the country.

Here is a bill that in the last Congress might have been called up on any day when the Committee on Ways and Means or the Committee on Appropriations did not seek the floor and it was not Calendar Wednesday. Yet the committee went along and waited until toward the end of the session, and then, by instruction of the committee, a member of it moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill with 20 minutes' debate on a side and no chance to offer an amendment.

I want to take the opportunity now of congratulating the committee and the chairman that at this time in the session they were willing to take the House into their confidence, at least to the extent of trusting the House to make amendments.

Mr. MONDELL. They can not help themselves.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Wyoming says they can not help themselves. They might have waited this time until toward the end of the session or of the Congress and then said, "Here is a bill that we must pass. It can only be done under a suspension of the rules." It would not be the first time that an able committee had worked that racket and got away with it, as this committee did the last time. This time I am glad the committee has trusted the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That any person who is the head of a family, or who has arrived at the age of 21 years and is a citizen of the United States, who has entered or acquired under the homestead laws prior to the passage hereof lands of the character described in this act the area of which is less than 640 acres, and who is unable to exercise the right of additional entry herein conferred because no lands subject to entry under this act adjoin the tract so entered or acquired or lie within the 10-mile limit provided for in this act, may, upon submitting proof that he resides upon and has not sold or encumbered the land so entered or acquired, relinquish or reconvey to the United States the land so occupied, entered, or acquired, and in lieu thereof, within the same land-office district, may enter and acquire title to 640 acres of the land subject to entry under this act, but must show compliance with all the provisions of this act respecting the new entry and with all the provisions of existing homestead laws except as modified herein: Provided, That the lands so relinquished or reconveyed as herein provided shall thereafter be subject to disposition only on such terms and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Page 5, line 4, strike out the figure "7" and insert the figure "6."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 5, lines 12 and 13, by striking out the words "or lie within the ten-mile limit provided for in this act."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, on that amendment I would like to say a word. That amendment was stricken out on the theory that section 6 should be stricken out of the bill. The Mondell amendment changed the amendment from a 10 to a 20 mile limit, and I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment be disagreed to, and move——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman should move an amendment of the text.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes. I move, Mr. Chairman, an amendment of the text. On page 5, line 12, strike out the word "ten" and insert "twenty."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 12, in the matter proposed to be stricken out, strike out the word "ten" and insert the word "twenty," so that it will read "twenty-mile limit."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the committee amendment be not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 5, line 14, by striking out the words "or encumbered."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 15, after the word "acquired," insert the words "and against which land there are no encumbrances."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That the commutation provisions of the homestead laws shall not apply to any entries made under this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 3, strike out the figure "8" and insert the figure "7."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That any homestead entrymen or patentees who shall be entitled to additional entry under this act shall have, for 30 days after the designation of lands subject to entry under the provisions of this act and contiguous to those entered or owned and occupied by him, the preferential right to make additional entry as provided in this act: Provided, That where such lands contiguous to the lands of two or more entrymen or patentees entitled to additional entries under this section are not sufficient in area to enable such entrymen to secure by additional entry the maximum amounts to which they are entitled, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make an equitable division of the lands among the several entrymen or patentees, applying to exercise preferential rights, such division to be in tracts of not less than 40 acres, and so made as to equalize as nearly as possible the area which such entrymen and patentees will acquire by adding the tracts embraced in additional entries to the lands originally held or owned by them: Provided further, That where but one 40-acre tract of vacant land may adjoin the lands of two or more entrymen or patentees entitled to exercise preferential right hereunder, the tract in question may be entered by the person who first submits to the local land office his application to exercise said preferential right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 6, line 6, strike out the figure "9" and insert the figure "8."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 6, line 8, strike out the word "thirty" and insert the word "ninety."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 6, line 20, after the word "acres," insert the words "or other legal subdivision."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 6, line 25, strike out the words "forty acre" and insert the word "such."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, we have just inserted the words "or other legal subdivision." What does that mean—where there is a short 40 or a plus 40?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. In many places in the West they have had two or three Government surveys, and in the new plats the land is now designated by lots. These lots are not 40 acres. They may be 17.50 acres or almost any other number of acres, usually less than 40 acres, and yet they are legal subdivisions.

Mr. MANN. How much do they contain?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. They contain any amount of land from a fraction of an acre to as high as 50 acres. They are of all sizes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says they are of all sizes. Are any of them as much as 100 acres?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; I have seen a few of 80 acres, but that is very seldom.

Mr. MANN. It occurs to me that if there were two men, each entitled to take an extra piece of ground, it would be hardly fair to give one of them 80 acres and the other nothing. Originally that was provided for in the bill, but the way it reads now it is not.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Ninety-nine times out of a hundred a lot is less than 40 acres.

Mr. FERRIS. Is it not always so?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No. I have seen a case where a man's ranch has been set off to himself, where he owned all of the land, just making one big lot in one piece; but, I think, that never or very seldom occurs when it is public land.

Mr. FERRIS. These lots occur in the bends of rivers, on correction lines, on meridian lines, and on base lines, where there have been double and triple surveys.

Mr. MANN. Sometimes they do and sometimes they do not. Unfortunately I own some land, and have had some experience in that matter.

Mr. FERRIS. I think a lot is always less than 40 acres. If it is more than 40 acres, the additional acreage becomes another fractional 40.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is incorrect about that. I presume, though, it would not make very much difference.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That any person who has heretofore acquired title to land of the character designated in this act under any of the homestead laws of the United States and who is the owner and occupant of the land so acquired may purchase from the United States not exceeding 320 acres of stock-raising lands, as designated by this act, or unappropriated and unreserved lands valuable only for grazing contiguous to his said homestead, upon paying to the United States the sum of $1.25 per acre for such lands, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, which said land, together with the area theretofore acquired under the homestead laws, shall not exceed 640 acres.

The following committee amendment was read:

Page 7, line 5, strike out the figures "10," and insert the figure "9."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, lines 5 and 6, strike out the words "land of the character designated in this act," and insert in lieu thereof the word "lands."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, this section is intended to give the homesteader an opportunity to purchase some grazing land. That opportunity should be afforded to the homesteader without regard to the character of the land on which he lives. A homesteader having 80 acres of irrigable land, or even 120 acres of irrigable land, needs pasture just as badly, and sometimes needs it worse, if he is a good farmer, than the farmer on lands of this character. The homesteader who has a little wood lot on his present holding should not be barred, by reason of the ownership of that wood lot, from buying from Uncle Sam, at all it is worth, 320 acres or less of land for pasture purposes. This is a very excellent provision of this bill. In the West there are many regions where the homesteads are in the valleys, and the rough lands of the hills have not been taken. There is nothing needed so badly as the right to secure a little of that rough land for pasture purposes. Men buy them sometimes under the timber and stone act, but if there is considerable timber on the land the department puts a price on it that the entryman can not afford to pay. If there is no timber on the land, the department says that it does not come under the provisions of the law. So under the present laws it is difficult for the settlers to secure such land except under the bill which the gentleman from Colorado sponsored a few years ago under which settlers hoped that they would be able to get rough mountainous land not valuable for pasture purposes; but the administration under that law has been such as the gentlemen from the West know that settlers have secured very little land under it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is what I was going to ask the gentleman about. If we could induce the Interior Department to liberalize its construction of the isolated tract law, would it not relieve the situation a good deal?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; but that would not meet all of the cases, because these pasture lands are not all mountainous lands; they are often, however, broken and rocky, sometimes quite smooth.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. The purpose of the gentleman's amendment is to furnish the homesteader on irrigation projects an opportunity to get some grazing land.

Mr. MONDELL. That is one of the beneficial purposes that would be served where they are so located that they could avail themselves of it.

Mr. BORLAND. Would it not be well to limit the amendment to these irrigation projects?

Mr. MONDELL. No; that is not my purpose. While there are only one or two Government irrigation projects in a State, there are homesteaders all over these vast areas in the public-land States, and the homesteader frequently wants above all things, particularly if he has dairy cows, a little pasture; he needs it more than anything else. Many are so situated that they could not avail themselves of the homestead provisions of the bill and could make the purchase here contemplated.

Mr. BORLAND. The difficulty that the settler is laboring under is that the department has power to limit his homestead to a very small quantity, less than the average homestead, and in some cases to 40 acres. I think the policy is to limit them to 40 acres or less, and it is that homesteader that needs relief. But the homesteader under the general law is not so much in need.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, he is very much in need; I think more so than the settler on the irrigation project, because the settler on the irrigation project generally has a market, and it is not absolutely necessary that he shall have pasture land, whereas a settler on nonirrigable land, frequently a long distance away from a railroad, does need additional pasture in order to be able to turn out his work horses and in order that he may keep a few head of stock.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that all debate close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill on the whole, and I am in favor of any public-land legislation which will contribute in any way to placing upon the public lands more actual homestead settlers. I am not, however, in favor of legislation which will tend to place the ownership of more of the public lands in the hands of what we term out West "sidewalk farmers." This entire section, I believe, should be stricken out, and for this reason: As it now stands it provides that one who has acquired title to land of the character of land described in section 2 of this act, and who owns the land and occupies it—which does not mean that he resides on it, but merely has a proprietary interest in the land—may purchase for $1.25 an acre an additional amount of land, which, together with his first entry, will make not to exceed 640 acres. I am opposed to the amendment and shall later offer an amendment to strike out the section. The amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming will not contribute to the establishment of new homes on these lands. It will not in any way contribute to placing more actual settlers on these lands.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NORTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota moves to strike out the section.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 11. That all entries made and patents issued under the provisions of this act shall be subject to and contain a reservation to the United States of all the coal and other minerals in the lands so entered and patented, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same. The coal and other mineral deposits in such lands shall be subject to disposal by the United States in accordance with the provisions of the coal and mineral land laws in force at the time of such disposal. Any person qualified to locate and enter the coal or other mineral deposits, or having the right to mine and remove the same under the laws of the United States, shall have the right at all times to enter upon the lands entered or patented, as provided by this act, for the purpose of prospecting for coal or other mineral therein, provided he shall not injure, damage, or destroy the permanent improvements of the entryman or patentee, and shall be liable to and shall compensate the entryman or patentee for all damages to the crops on such lands by reason of such prospecting. Any person who has acquired from the United States the coal or other mineral deposits in any such land, or the right to mine and remove the same, may reenter and occupy so much of the surface thereof as may be required for all purposes reasonably incident to the mining or removal of the coal or other minerals, first, upon securing the written consent or waiver of the homestead entryman or patentee; second, upon payment of the damages to crops or other tangible improvements to the owner thereof, where agreement may be had as to the amount thereof; or, third, in lieu of either of the foregoing provisions, upon the execution of a good and sufficient bond or undertaking to the United States for the use and benefit of the entryman or owner of the land, to secure the payment of such damages to the crops or tangible improvements of the entryman or owner, as may be determined and fixed in an action brought upon the bond or undertaking in a court of competent jurisdiction against the principal and sureties thereon, such bond or undertaking to be in form and in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and to be filed with and approved by the register and receiver of the local land office of the district wherein the land is situate, subject to appeal to the Commissioner of the General Land Office: Provided, That all patents issued for the coal or other mineral deposits herein reserved shall contain appropriate notations declaring them to be subject to the provisions of this act with reference to the disposition, occupancy, and use of the surface of the land.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 7, line 19, strike out the figures "11" and insert the figures "10."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

On page 9, lines 13 and 14, strike out the words "of the surface."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 9, line 14, insert after the word "land" the following: "as permitted to an entryman under this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I shall not offer an amendment to this section, because it is evident that no amendment offered would be adopted; but I want to call attention to the fact that under the provisions of this section the homesteader secures no pay whatever for the land that may be reentered and occupied by the mining operator. The land so reentered and occupied for mining purposes might be the major portion of his entry in some cases, and yet there is no provision in the bill for payment for the land itself. The committee has adopted in a way and to a certain extent the very carefully thought out provisions contained in the laws providing for the agricultural entry, first of coal, later of oil and phosphate land, but the committee has not followed that legislation carefully enough to preserve all of its very excellent provisions, and therefore, under the provision as it appears in the bill, part of it taken from the original bill introduced by me for the protection of those who had already gone on the land, partly taken from the bill for the agricultural entry of coal lands, and partly new, the entryman is left without any payment whatever for lands that the miner may take. I am inclined to think that the committee did not intend that, but that is the effect of the section.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, on page 7, lines 24 and 25, and on page 8 this law is made subject to all of the three surface-entry bills that we have passed, and those three laws provide for damage and everything else.

Mr. MONDELL. Where is that?

Mr. FERRIS. On page 7, lines 24 and 25:

The coal and other mineral deposits in such lands shall be subject to disposal by the United States in accordance with the provisions of the coal and mineral land laws in force at the time of such disposal.

Mr. MONDELL. Those are not the so-called limited-entry laws, affecting the limited entryman, but the laws affecting the miner.

Mr. FERRIS. The three surface-entry acts already passed. They are the laws already referred to.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is entirely mistaken, and, further, I wish he would not call the laws he refers to surface-entry laws, for they are not. They convey fee titles. They give the owner much more than the surface; they give him all except the body of the reserved mineral.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 9, after line 14, insert the following as a new section:

"SEC. 11. That lands containing water holes or other bodies of water needed or used by the public for watering purposes shall not be designated under this act but may be reserved under the provisions of the act of June 25, 1910, and such lands heretofore or hereafter reserved shall be kept and held open to the public use for such purposes under such general rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That the Secretary may, in his discretion, designate as stock driveways and withhold from entry under this act lands not over one-fourth mile in width needed for use in the movement of stock to summer and winter ranges or to shipping points."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill favorably with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COX, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 407) to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MCCRACKEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks on this bill in the RECORD by inserting two letters which I have.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on the enlarged homestead bill have the right to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY] may have permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to any gentleman who wants it.

Mr. FERRIS. And I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects to the first request.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY], the gentleman from California [Mr. CHURCH], the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], and myself may have permission to extend our remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. POWERS was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the following cases, no adverse reports having been made thereon:

George W. Peters (H. R. 13475, 14481), Sixty-third Congress;
N. Ellen Peters (H. R. 13476), Sixty-third Congress;
Joseph Roach (H. R. 5548), Sixty-third Congress;
William Pace (H. R. 13083), Sixty-third Congress;
Isam W. Foley (H. R. 1477), Sixty-third Congress;
William G. Pennington (H. R. 12785, 13084), Sixty-third Congress;
Owen A. Block (H. R. 5543), Sixty-third Congress;
Robert Strong (H. R. 5551), Sixty-third Congress;
Wiley T. Cook;
Nathan Blanton;
Sarah Scott (H. R. 5550), Sixty-third Congress;
Jacob G. Robinson (H. R. 20888), Sixty-third Congress;
Nathan Lawson;
James H. Buckner;
Francis M. Sexton;
J. W. Hardwick (H. R. 15887), Sixty-third Congress; and Amos Bennett (H. R. 22505), Sixty-third Congress.

JUVENILE COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA (H. DOC. NO. 594).

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, which was read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the reports of the clerk and chief probation officer of the Juvenile Court of the District of Columbia for the two years ending June 30, 1915, together with a letter of transmittal from the judge of said court.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 18, 1916.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and the message is ordered to be printed without the accompanying documents.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. HELM was granted leave of absence on account of the death of a relative.

CONSTRUCTION AND MAINTENANCE OF RURAL POST ROADS.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill (H. R. 7617) to provide that the United States may, in certain cases, aid the States in the construction of roads.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7617) to provide that the Secretary of Agriculture, on behalf of the United States, shall, in certain cases, aid the States in the construction and maintenance of rural post roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7617, with Mr. RUCKER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7617) to provide that the Secretary of Agriculture, on behalf of the United States, shall, in certain cases, aid the States in the construction and maintenance of rural post roads.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, for the present I object.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the committee rose; the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RUCKER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7617), and had directed him to report that it had come to no resolution thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 19, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Attorney General, transmitting supplement to annual report for the fiscal year 1915, embodying a report upon the litigation over withdrawn oil lands of the United States (H. Doc. No. 593), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. WATKINS, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6241) to ratify, approve, and confirm an act amending the franchise granted to H. P. Baldwin, R. A. Wadsworth, J. N. S. Williams, D. C. Lindsay, C. D. Lufkin, James L. Coke, and W. T. Robinson, and now held under assignment to the Island Electric Co. (Ltd.), by extending it to include the Makawao district on the island of Maui, Territory of Hawaii, etc., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 56), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2) for the coinage of a McKinley souvenir silver dollar, in commemoration of the erection of a memorial to William McKinley, late President of the United States, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 55), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5939) for the relief of Edward H. Dennison; Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. 1211) granting a pension to Anna M. Healey; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SULLOWAY: A bill (H. R. 9315) making an appropriation toward the construction of a dry dock at the Portsmouth Navy Yard; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. SHERWOOD: A bill (H. R. 9316) authorizing the establishment of a plant at or near Toledo, Ohio, for the manufacture of munitions and implements of war; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WARD: A bill (H. R. 9317) providing for the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a post-office building at Monticello, N. Y.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington: A bill (H. R. 9318) to establish a naval academy at some point in the State of Washington to be designated by the Secretary of the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina: A bill (H. R. 9319) providing for a survey of Carolina Beach Pier, in New Hanover County, N. C., with a view to making same navigable; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 9320) authorizing insurance companies and fraternal beneficiary societies to file bills of interpleader; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CLINE: A bill (H. R. 9321) to place on the retired list of the Army the names of the surviving officers who were mustered out under the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 15, 1870, in reduction of the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 9322) for the construction of a public building at St. Johns, Mich.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 19, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, look down with Thy fatherly pity and care and love upon us this day. In the midst of all the strife and turmoil of life we believe there is a hand of divine providence that guides the affairs of men. We would seek fellowship with Thee that we may be seen to live in harmony with the divine plan, not against God. All men are in Thy heart. Thou dost desire the happiness, Thou dost will the prosperity, of Thy children. Thou dost stand guard over the rights of men, and there is no respect of persons with Thee.

Give to us fellowship of humanity with a sense of our obligations to men, that we may under God's direction work out a nation's place whose ministry will be the ministry of a universal brotherhood. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

THE LIVE-STOCK INDUSTRY.

Mr. SMOOT. I have a telegram from Mr. Frank J. Hagenbarth, president of the National Wool Growers' Association, that I desire to have printed in the RECORD, as it refers to pending legislation. I do not ask that it be read.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Telegram.]

SALT LAKE, UTAH, January 18, 1915.

Senator REED SMOOT,
Washington, D. C.:

We yesterday wired WALSH, WARREN, Public Lands Committee of Senate, and MONDELL and Public Lands Committee of House, as follows:

"The National Wool Growers' Association has appointed a committee to meet a similar committee from the American National Live-Stock Association for the purpose of making recommendations relative to all public-land bills now before Congress. These recommendations can not be formulated before February 1, and we therefore respectfully request that no legislation affecting our public domain shall be enacted until we have had an opportunity to present our recommendations. We are not opposed to additional legislation, but as the largest users of the public domain feel that it is our duty to make certain recommendations to Congress. Will you therefore help delay legislation until these recommendations have been made?"

We received the following reply from WALSH to-day:

"Utterly impossible for me to comply with request of your telegram. Pending public-land legislation must have attention now or never. During session military and revenue legislation with shipping measure will crowd out everything else after February 1. Suggest you get here without delay."

Stockmen are not opposed to enlarged homestead law. On contrary, they favor such enactment surrounded by proper and practical safeguards. Stockmen do not contend for any supremacy on public domain, but demand as American citizens and taxpayers having some rights as such that they be heard by Public Lands Committee of Senate on legislation which seriously affects them. Every possible effort is being made to have proper committees representative of live-stock industry appear before Senate Lands Committee. Physically impossible to have such committees reach Washington before 1st of February. In view of situation we feel that request for such necessary reasonable delay should be granted, and we appeal to you in your representative capacity to take such consistent action as may be necessary in the premises. Please advise us promptly.

NATIONAL WOOL GROWERS' ASSOCIATION,
F. J. HAGENBARTH, President.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill (S. 3580) releasing the claim of the United States Government to lot No. 306 in the old city of Pensacola, Fla., and the bill (S. 3581) releasing the claim of the United States Government to that portion of land, being a fractional block, bounded on the north and east by Bayou Cadet, on the west by Cevallos Street, and on the south by Intendencia Street, in the old city of Pensacola, Fla., were introduced by me January 17 and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I ask that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bills, and that they be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. Bills identical with these were submitted to the Public Lands Committee in the second session of the Sixty-third Congress, reported favorably, and passed the Senate March 12, 1914, but failed to pass the House. I was mistaken in asking for the reference of the bills to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRINTING FOR THE DISTRICT COMMITTEE.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. On December 17, 1915, I reported, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, resolution No. 35, submitted by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], granting authority to print and bind certain papers and documents for the use of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and it was placed on the calendar. The report was made through an inadvertence on my part and I ask to withdraw it, the resolution having in the first instance been referred to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be withdrawn.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GALLINGER (for Mr. BURLEIGH):

A bill (S. 3686) granting an increase of pension to Gilman P. Lombard;

A bill (S. 3687) granting an increase of pension to Arthur G. Sawyer;

A bill (S. 3688) granting an increase of pension to Cornelius T. Ham;

A bill (S. 3689) granting an increase of pension to Henry Quint;

A bill (S. 3690) granting an increase of pension to Susan E. Norton;

A bill (S. 3691) granting a pension to Charles E. Williams;

A bill (S. 3692) granting a pension to Theodate S. Black;

A bill (S. 3693) granting an increase of pension to Charles P. Cook;

A bill (S. 3694) granting an increase of pension to Mariner Smith;

A bill (S. 3695) granting an increase of pension to Morrison Young; and

A bill (S. 3696) granting an increase of pension to Frank A. Colcord; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. POMERENE:

A bill (S. 3697) for the relief of Charles V. Wells (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3698) granting an increase of pension to Lucinda Applegate (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 3699) to donate to the city of St. Augustine, Fla., for park purposes, the tract of land known as the powder-house lot; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. HARDWICK:

A bill (S. 3700) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 3701) granting a pension to William A. Bowen; and

A bill (S. 3702) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. C. Kaigler; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 3703) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant permission for utilization of water power at locks and dams constructed by the Government on navigable rivers of the United States; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 3704) to establish a landschaft system of rural credit in the United States; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 3705) to establish a preparatory military academy at or near Fort Douglas, Utah; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 3706) to amend section 8 of the act entitled "An act to create a commerce court, and to amend the act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1910; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 3707) granting an increase of pension to William F. Wiley (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 3708) granting an increase of pension to Josephine F. Stowe (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIVELY:

A bill (S. 3709) granting an increase of pension to Henry C. Shoemaker;

A bill (S. 3710) granting an increase of pension to Nathan L. Stockwell;

A bill (S. 3711) granting an increase of pension to Oliver P. Lockhart;

A bill (S. 3712) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Sausaman;

A bill (S. 3713) granting an increase of pension to Christopher Myers;

A bill (S. 3714) granting an increase of pension to Richard M. Nash;

A bill (S. 3715) granting an increase of pension to Helen Hogan; and

A bill (S. 3716) granting a pension to Byron E. Gifford; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE:

A bill (S. 3717) granting an increase of pension to Bernard McNaney; and

A bill (S. 3718) granting a pension to Willie Hall; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 3719) granting a pension to Maurice H. Myers (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GORE:

A bill (S. 3720) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to license cotton warehouses, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 60) creating a joint subcommittee from the membership of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce and the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to investigate the conditions relating to interstate and foreign commerce, and the necessity of further legislation relating thereto, and defining the powers and duties of such subcommittee, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

RELATIONS WITH MEXICO.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer a resolution, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolution (S. Res. 72) was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to inform the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interests, whether any convention, agreement, or understanding has been concluded, entered into, or arrived at with any South American or Central American Governments concerning Mexico and especially if any relations have been established or obligations assumed by the executive department on behalf of the United States that require this Government to obtain the consent or request of any such South American or Central American Governments before employing its Army and Navy to protect American citizens or other aliens in Mexico.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 73), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and it hereby is, authorized, during the Sixty-fourth Congress, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to employ a stenographer at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee at any time, and to have such hearings printed for the use of the committee; that the expenses of such hearings be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee or the chairman of a subcommittee; and that the said committee and all subcommittees thereof may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. MYERS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 74), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized, during the Sixty-fourth Congress, to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a price not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions of the Senate.

MARY MEYER.

Mr. HARDING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 75), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Mary Meyer, niece of Jacob C. Donaldson, late a skilled laborer in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

LECTURE BY HENRY J. PIERCE.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have here an address delivered by Henry J. Pierce, of Seattle, Wash., on the necessity for water-power development. It deals with a question the Senate will have under consideration very shortly, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. ROBINSON. What is the nature of the document?

Mr. JONES. It is an address delivered by Henry J. Pierce on the necessity for water-power development. It gives some very interesting matter.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator state where the address was delivered?

Mr. JONES. It was delivered in the auditorium of the New National Museum last evening.

Mr. ROBINSON. Has the Senator read the address?

Mr. JONES. I heard the address.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not know about the length of the address. We are putting a great many things in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which, it seems to me, ought not to go there, and it will make a very expensive publication. I was wondering whether the Senator from Washington would not be satisfied to have the address printed as a public document.

Mr. JONES. I would much rather have it printed in the RECORD than to have it printed as a document, because if printed as a document we can never find it and if printed in the RECORD we know that we can find it somewhere.

It is not a very long address. It refers to a matter that will be pending before the Senate very shortly. I am no more in favor of cumbering the RECORD with many things than is the Senator, and I do not think I do it, but this is one thing that I think is useful and will be useful to Senators.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to me for just a statement?

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Florida has the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from Florida yield to me?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am informed by the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands that the address is a valuable one, and I am inclined to think from the information I have obtained that it ought to be printed.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think myself it is all right to have it available. The question in my mind is about cumbering the RECORD. I see no difficulty about getting access to it if it is printed as a Senate document. A certain number of those documents go to each Senator, and they are available undoubtedly. The address is on an important subject; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. WEEKS. I hope the Senator from Florida will not object to the printing of this address in the RECORD. It has a direct bearing on an important subject which is coming before Congress. I am familiar with the address; it is not long, and I think if it could be read by the Senator he would not object to its being printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will not object further, Mr. President, under the circumstances.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

The address is as follows:

THE NECESSITY FOR WATER POWER DEVELOPMENT.

[By Henry J. Pierce.]

It is a strange fact that the proportion of our total available water power thus far developed is only about the same as was the proportion of our agricultural lands under cultivation 100 years ago, at which time the development of our natural resources had not been commenced. To-day, while practically all the farming lands of the United States with the exception of the arid portions of the West have been brought under cultivation, and while such great natural resources as coal, oil, phosphate, and minerals have been developed as rapidly as necessity required, yet but 10 per cent of our available water power has been utilized.

Up to 1885, when electricity first came into use for practical purposes, the use of water power was limited to the turning of wheels for operation of a few grist mills and other manufacturing establishments. During the 30-year period between 1885 and 1915, 6,000,000 horsepower was developed out of a total available amount of 61,678,000 horsepower. As the principal use for electric energy has been the operation of public utilities, the water powers thus far utilized have been those located at points nearest large centers of population, though in some instances power is being economically transmitted in large quantities for distances of from 150 to 200 miles.

The United States Geological Survey estimates that 44,049,000 horsepower, or 71 per cent of the total potential available horsepower in the United States, is contained within the States of Washington, Oregon, California, Montana, Wyoming, Idaho, Colorado, Utah, and Nevada, and of this vast amount but 1,622,021 horsepower, or 3.68 per cent, is now being utilized.

The total available water power of all countries of Europe combined is 35,965,000 horsepower, the development of which is rapidly progressing.

Three great principal uses for electric energy await the development of our water powers: The operation of pumping plants in connection with irrigation projects; the electrification of railroads; for manufacturing purposes in production of fertilizers, explosives, and electrochemicals, wood pulp, paper, iron, steel, etc.

IRRIGATION.

It is estimated that there are at least 10,000,000 acres of arid lands located in the far Western States, lying above the reach of gravity water, that can only be reclaimed through water raised by pumps operated by the cheap hydroelectric power now latent and wasting in the various streams from which the water would be pumped. Thus the land, and at a lower level the water to irrigate it, and the power to raise the water to the land are often all assembled at one point. Given water, these lands will produce every fruit, vegetable, and grain that is native to the Temperate Zone, and are capable of supporting a population of 2,000,000 people. If capital can be safeguarded, it is safe to say that hundreds of thousands of water horsepower will be utilized within the next 10 years in connection with the reclamation of arid lands, and that, in addition to what the Government service will accomplish, hundreds of millions of dollars of private capital will be used for the establishment of reclamation projects in connection with pumping plants. Lands are being irrigated in 27 States, and as far east as New Jersey and Florida, and two Western States have now nearly 5,000,000 acres of land under irrigation.

ELECTRIFICATION OF RAILROADS.

Four hundred and fifty miles of the main line of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, being the portion between Harlowton, Mont., and Avery, Idaho, is now being equipped for operation by electricity. Quoting from the testimony given before the Senate Public Lands Committee in 1914 by John D. Ryan, a director of the Milwaukee Railroad, and also president of the Montana Power Co., which will furnish the power:

"The railroad will pay under the contract for power delivered over 450 miles of its road something like $550,000 a year. It is paying now for coal to operate its steam trains over the same line approximately $1,750,000, and they furnish their own coal from mines on their own road, and one-third of their equipment is used in hauling coal to themselves, whereas with electric power there is not any such waste. It will save coal in the ground and an enormous amount of money, and will be utilizing an absolutely waste product."

Mr. Ryan testified that the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railroad is paying $96,000 per year for electric energy to operate 80 miles of road, as against a former cost for coal of $270,000, a saving of $174,000 annually.

In view of the great and apparently sure economical success of the electrification of 450 miles of the Milwaukee line, it is almost certain that within the next 10 years a majority of the railroads operating through the mountainous country of the far West, where hydroelectric power can be developed cheaply, will adopt electricity as motive power. Forty-eight thousand seven hundred miles of railroad are now being operated in the States of Washington, Oregon, California, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, North Dakota, South Dakota, Utah, Arizona, Colorado, and Nevada. It is estimated that 10,000 horsepower is needed to operate 100 miles of single track, and therefore it will require 4,870,000 horsepower to electrify all of the railroads of these States, or one-ninth of the total hydroelectric power possible to develop in the territory traversed by these railroads. A great portion of the trackage is over mountain divisions, and the use of electricity in place of coal will result in great economy of operation, obviate the danger of forest fires, and by elimination of noise and smoke and through a more generous ventilation, which will be possible when the flying cinder need no longer be taken into account, will make travel far more comfortable than at present. As the railroads consume 20 per cent of the total coal used for all purposes, the substitution of electricity for coal as motive power will conserve this enormous amount of fuel for future use and water power wasted from the beginning of time will be utilized.

PRODUCTION OF FIXED NITROGEN.

The greatest need for the development of our water powers is the imperative necessity, and it is a national necessity, that sufficient fixed nitrogen should be produced within the boundaries of the United States to meet its requirements. Nitrogen comprises four-fifths of the atmosphere and is a constituent of all organized life and tissues. It is a colorless, tasteless, odorless, gaseous, nonmetallic element. We live in it, we breathe it, we eat it, and it constitutes a portion of our human frame. It is absolutely necessary to the existence of animal and plant life. Without fixed nitrogen the earth would soon become an uninhabited desert waste. While the atmosphere contains an exhaustless supply of nitrogen, it being estimated that 20,000,000 tons exist above each square mile of the earth's surface, yet 90 per cent of the plant life that lives in it does not absorb it, and the remaining 10 per cent absorbs but a small proportion of that which it requires. The world has been dependent for most of its supplies of fixed nitrogen upon the nitrate of soda beds of Chile, where, during some convulsion of nature at some remote past time, the soda absorbed quantities of nitrogen from the air. During 1913 the United States imported 625,000 tons of Chilean nitrates, valued at $21,000,000, upon which the Chilean export duty was 60 per cent. We thus paid to the Chilean Government $12,600,000, which may be considered merely a part of the amount which the people of the United States pay for its policy of water-power stagnation. In other words, the people of this country would be quite as well off as they now are if they granted a subsidy or bonus of $12,600,000 per annum for the establishment of the water-power nitrogen industry in the United States. The richest nitrate beds of Chile, however, will be practically exhausted by 1923; and were it not for the discovery of processes whereby it is now possible, with the aid of electric energy, to obtain supplies of fixed nitrogen from the atmosphere, the world would stand in imminent deadly peril and the perpetuation of the human race would be endangered. It is a wonderful providence that perpetual and inexhaustible supplies of nitrogen may be obtained from the atmosphere by the use of electric energy obtained from our water powers whose flow is also everlasting, and that thus the limited supplies of coal and other fuels laid aside by nature may be conserved for other uses.

The governmental paralysis imposed seven years ago upon the development of water powers in the United States through the restrictive interpretation of Federal laws still continues, but that period has been one of great hydroelectric development in Europe, where over 1,200,000 water horsepower has been utilized for the extraction of nitrogen from the atmosphere, while the United States out of 61,000,000 horsepower is not using a single horsepower for that purpose. Hydroelectric nitrogen plants have been established in Norway, Sweden, Germany, Australia, Italy, Switzerland, France, Spain, Japan, and Canada, but none in the United States. The nitrogen industry of Europe represents an aggregate investment of over $300,000,000, employs 50,000 people, and the annual value of its products and derivatives is upward of $220,000,000. In Germany, where practically all the water powers have been developed, a nitrogen plant is being built which will use 100,000 horsepower, to be produced from cheap coal. England is seriously considering the development of 1,000,000 water horsepower in Iceland to provide for her future supplies of nitrogen. Thus, with a foresight that is a reproach to our intelligence and enterprise, these other countries are insuring their requirements of this great human necessity against the time when it will be no longer possible to obtain supplies from Chile. It seems incredible that nothing has been done thus far toward the establishment of the nitrogen industry in the United States. Several years ago an effort was made to locate an atmospheric nitrogen plant upon the Coosa River in Alabama, where a large water power would have been developed, and near which were ample supplies of the necessary raw materials—high-grade limestones and cheaply mined coking coal. The plant, moreover, would have been located in the center of the cotton belt, where the most of its product would have been marketed in the form of fertilizer. As development capital could not be obtained under our restrictive Federal water-power laws, a bill was introduced in Congress to meet the requirements of the case, but failed to become a law, and, as a result, the plant was established at Niagara Falls, Canada, where a contract was obtained for electric energy at a low figure. As a result, the United States has lost and Canada gained a great manufacturing institution, covering an investment of millions of dollars, and the farmers of Alabama are paying the freight on its product from Canada to their cotton fields. In anticipation of a change in our Federal water-power laws a company was projected during the winter of 1914–15 which expected to build nitrogen plants in the South and on the Pacific coast which would have cost upward of $35,000,000, but owing to the failure of the Sixty-third Congress to enact practical legislation the attention of the organizers has been turned toward the development of Canadian water powers. It is estimated that an investment of $860,000,000 would be necessary to produce mechanically from the atmosphere as much nitrogen as Chile's nitrate deposits yield every year, and this shows the enormous possibilities for the future contained in the establishment of this entirely new industry in the United States.

The two largest and most necessary uses for nitrogen are in connection with the manufacture of fertilizers and explosives. Seven million tons of fertilizer, valued at $170,000,000, were sold in the United States during 1913, and for its manufacture over $40,000,000 of nitrogenous and other material was imported, most of which could have been made in this country, with the aid of electricity. The average amount of fertilizer used in the United States is 28 pounds per acre of cultivated lands, against 200 pounds per acre in Europe, with the following results:

Comparison of average yield per acre in bushels of crops in the United States and Europe:

	Wheat.	Oats.	Barley.	Rye.	Potatoes.
Europe	32	47	38	30	158
United States	15	29	25	16	96

If our use of fertilizer had been equal to one-half of that of Europe per acre in 1913, 24,000,000 tons would have been required, of the value of $580,000,000, and in the production of which 12,000,000 water horsepower must have been utilized, and the resultant increase of crop value would have exceeded $2,000,000,000.

Careful and extensive experiments made in Germany have shown that by the addition annually of 150 pounds of nitrogen per acre, crops of rye, wheat, oats, barley, and potatoes are more than doubled, and the reports of the German agricultural department show that, as the result of feeding the soil with 2,000,000 tons of nitrates, the increase of crops amounted to 63,000,000 tons. These figures show how important is the role actually played by nitrogen in the cereal production of Europe. The German farmer practically uses his land as an agent for transforming fertilizer into products, while the American farmer tries to get products out of his starving land without feeding it sufficient plant food. European nations waste nothing, and in many clever ways create values out of what we discard as worthless. Our comparatively young country is wasting its resources with terrible profligacy, as is evidenced by our using up our stores of coal and oil instead of utilizing our wasting water powers.

The crops harvested annually in the United States abstract over 3,000,000 tons of nitrogen from the soil, and as the world's supply of combined nitrogen is increased only slowly and in small degrees by nature, the soil of farmed lands is entirely dependent upon fertilizer for replenishment of the stock of nitrogen which it gives up in its yield of crops.

At the agricultural station at Rothamsted, England, wheat has been grown year after year on the same land for 63 seasons without fertilizer, with an average crop return of 12 bushels per acre, while during 10 years the average crop on adjacent plats of ground receiving plant food each year was 40 bushels per acre.

The present method of manufacture produces a finished product containing but 12 per cent of active fertilizer and 88 per cent of utterly useless material on which freight and haulage must be paid by the farmer, whereas the electrofertilizer product contains 60 per cent of fertilizing material. By the electric process not only is nitrogen obtained from the atmosphere, but phosphate rock may now be treated by electricity instead of sulphuric acid for extraction of phosphoric acid.

The use of fertilizer has a most intimate relation to the cost of living, which has increased in this country at a much more rapid rate than it has abroad. The extraordinary increase in the cost of living in the United States has been principally in the cost of food products, while other items than foods have increased at only the general rate prevailing throughout the world. From 1900 to 1910 the cost of foods in the United States increased 35 per cent and abroad only 15 per cent. While our population increased 21 per cent during those 10 years, crop production increased only 10 per cent. The rapid increase in food cost in this country can only be checked by increased crop production, just as food prices are held down in Europe through increase in yields per acre. The countries of highest agricultural development are the largest consumers of fertilizers.

The mutterings of strife for commercial supremacy between England and Germany were heard as far back as early in the nineteenth century; when the value of bones as a plant food becoming realized, the great German chemist, Liebig, was moved to say:

"England is robbing all other countries of their fertility. Already in her eagerness for bones she has turned up the battle fields of Leipsic, of Waterloo, and Crimea. Already from the catacombs of Sicily she has carried away the skeletons of many successive generations. Annually she removes from the shores of other countries to her own the manurial equivalent of three and one-half millions of men."

EXPLOSIVES.

Nitrogen, in the form of nitric acid, is the principal constituent of explosives, such as guncotton, dynamite, and smokeless powder. We are annually producing about 250,000 tons of explosives, valued at $40,000,000, and we pay $23,000,000 for the raw materials that enter into them, most of which are imported. Had it not been for the discovery of the nitrate fields of Chile, the explosive industry, as it is known to-day, would have been impossible, and as coal and minerals could not have been mined without the use of explosives the development in mining and transportation which has characterized the last half century could not have been made.

In case of war we would be almost entirely dependent upon foreign nations for our supply of nitrogen for manufacture of powder, and would be practically defenseless unless we could obtain it from other nations. If the country with whom we were at war should be strong enough to seize the nitrate deposits of Chile, or to prevent shipments to this country, it would leave us helpless, in spite of our 100,000,000 of people and our Army and Navy. We would be forced to commandeer all sources of nitrogen, including fertilizer, and it might come about that some of our agricultural regions could no longer be devoted to food production, even though the scene of conflict never penetrated to them. The War Department is greatly concerned over this weak point in our national defense, and writers who are authorities upon the subject from the military standpoint urge the immediate development of our water powers, and establishment of atmospheric nitrogen plants, in order to insure the production of our requirements of nitrogen within the borders of our own country; and they strongly recommend that the nitrogen plants be so strategically located throughout the country as to be reasonably well protected against attack in case of foreign invasion. Lindley M. Garrison, Secretary of War, in his last annual report said in vigorous language:

"Our only present source of supply (of nitrogen) is the natural nitrate beds of Chile, which in time of war might be shut off from us. Obviously in the matter of munitions, especially where the source is so limited and localized, we should neglect no provision so easily available as this to make the country self-sustaining. Plants producing nitrogen for industrial purposes in time of peace would be a great national asset in view of their availability to supply us with the necessary nitrogen in time of war."

Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, in his last annual report, under the poetic and beautiful caption "Turning water into power," says:

"Then, too, there is that mystifying miracle of drawing nitrogen from the air for chemical use, which can be done only with great power, but is being done in Germany, Norway, Sweden, France, Switzerland, and elsewhere, by which an inexhaustible substitute for the almost exhausted nitrates of Chile has been found. To increase the yield of our farms and to give us an independent and adequate supply of nitrogen for the explosives used in war, we must set water wheels at work that will fix nitrogen in lime."

Gen. William Crozier, Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, recently said:

"We are dependent upon foreign sources for nitrogen. Our problem of defense would be greatly simplified if we only possessed our own nitrogen supply."

A recent statement showed that the stock of powder for small arms in possession of the War Department amounted to 200,000,000 pounds, which would only be sufficient in time of battle to last an army of 500,000 men eight days; further, that there is only sufficient ammunition on hand to fire all of our coast defense guns forty times, or continuously for about one hour. The War Department has, for some time, been accumulating a stock of Chilean nitrate to provide for emergencies; but in time of war it would produce only sufficient explosives to last for a short period of time. Germany is shut off from supplies of Chilean nitrate for powder making, and if she had not developed her water powers for the purpose of obtaining nitrogen from the air the European war would be ended to-day and Germany beaten. But the German Government has taken over all nitrogen fixation plants and is operating them on a war basis and thus is enabled to manufacture a plentiful supply of ammunition.

MANUFACTURE OF PAPER AND WOOD PULP.

One-third of the cost of manufacturing wood pulp and paper consists of the cost of power. The imports of these articles into the United States are growing at an enormous rate. Sweden and Canada have been developing their water powers, and hence it is interesting to note the exports of wood pulp and paper from those countries to the United States:

With the production of cheap electric energy, through the development of our water powers, the pulp and paper industry will come back to its own in the United States. It is inevitable that the industry must spread westward, and that through the utilization of the water powers and the forests of the Northwest, these imports of wood pulp and paper will be displaced with products made in our own country.

MANUFACTURE OF ELECTROMETALLURGICAL PRODUCTS.

While coal, coke, and gas are principally used in the smelting and refining of iron and steel, and while one-fourth of the entire world's output of coal is used for that purpose, yet in 1913, 668,000 tons of steel were produced in Europe and 165,000 tons in the United States, through the use of the electric furnace. In Alabama and Tennessee practically inexhaustible deposits of iron ore and limestone are located in the vicinity of great undeveloped water powers, and when the problem of making pig iron through the use of cheap electricity is solved, in an economical way, the South will become the center of the metallurgical industry. Students of the question believe that the use of cheap hydroelectric power, in the making of iron, will eventually bring about a commercial revolution in the leading nations. The United States, Germany, and England produce seven-eighths of the world's iron. Germany has already developed practically all of her water powers, England has but few, and the production of iron would, therefore, under these circumstances, pass into the hands of the United States because of its water powers and it would become omnipotent in the production of iron and steel. In fact, these authorities believe that all industries which consume large amounts of mechanical energy will be forced to emigrate to countries where water power is abundant.

MANUFACTURE OF CALCIUM CARBIDE.

Over 200,000 homes are lighted by acetylene gas, produced from calcium carbide, in the manufacture of which, at Niagara Falls, great quantities of hydroelectric energy are used. Because of our restrictive water-power laws the American Carbide Co. could not increase its production in this country, and is now building a plant on the seacoast of Norway, where it has contracted for the delivery of 80,000 horsepower developed from water power, and expects to ship most of its product to the United States.

Electrochemical products were reported by the last census to be made in 34 establishments at Niagara Falls of a value of $18,460,000, consisting of abrasives, electrodes, calcium carbide, caustic soda, chlorates, and such metals and alloys as aluminum, silicon, ferrovanadium, etc.

If all the water at Niagara Falls were utilized it would be possible to generate 5,000,000 horsepower. The American and Canadian Governments permit the use of sufficient water to generate 400,000 horsepower, all of which is in use, and an 80,000 horsepower steam plant, to be operated by coal, is being built on the shores of the Niagara River to provide for further demands for power.

There are many other large and constantly increasing uses for hydroelectric power which can not be enumerated here for lack of time.

With the abolition of our present faulty laws, and the enactment of practical legislation, great water-power developments which have been held back for years would be undertaken on the Connecticut River, where the power would be used in operating the mills of New England; on the Tennessee and Coosa Rivers of the South, in connection with the manufacture of fertilizers, iron, and steel; on the upper reaches of the Mississippi for public-utility uses; and on the Columbia, Snake, and Pend d'Oreille Rivers of the Northwest for irrigation and manufacturing purposes. Through installation of power dams and of locks these rivers will be made navigable for an aggregate of hundreds of miles further into the interior of the country, and it would be accomplished by private capital, without a cent of cost to the people, through Government taxation.

But while an enormous amount of water power is latent in our navigable rivers a far greater amount exists in the nonnavigable streams flowing through the public lands and Federal reserves located in the far Western States. Here nature has segregated her natural resources; the thirsty land awaiting irrigation with the water containing the latent water power washing its shores; the forests necessary to manufacture of wood pulp and paper lining the banks of the falling water; the limestone and phosphate needed for fertilizers and explosives located contiguous to wasting water powers.

It seems almost unbelievable that an enlightened Government like ours should not only fail to encourage, but should blindly bar the way to the development of a great natural resource so important to the farming and manufacturing interests of the country and so necessary to national safety. The fault, however, is not with private enterprise. As has been shown, Americans have repeatedly tried, but in vain, to get the right from our Government to establish hydroelectric plants upon navigable streams or within the Government domain upon fair and equitable terms that would justify the risk and the large expenditure of time and money involved while fully protecting the public interest.

They have been met by impracticable conditions which no prudent man could agree to. Prevented by the laws and policy of their own country from engaging in developing a great natural resource of incalculable value to any country possessing it, they found in other lands the welcome for their enterprise and capital denied to them at home. And so Canada and Norway are now enjoying the advantages of American energy, enterprise, and capital in the successful establishment and operation of great manufacturing plants involving an expenditure of many millions of dollars and giving steady employment to thousands of men.

Backed by the necessary capital, men of business and of technical and scientific experience who have made hydroelectric development their life work, as well as manufacturers of all of the great products for which the hydroelectric energy would be used, stand ready to undertake the development of our now wasting water powers and the other vast commercial features connected with it as soon as our present impossible Federal laws are corrected to a fair business basis, under which practical men will give their time and capital will invest.

Reasonable, sensible, practical regulation safeguarding the public interest no one objects to. But the present situation is not one of regulation, but of strangulation. The trouble is that the Federal policy covering the use of water power is so narrow, so full of restrictions, so loaded down with conditions that no prudent man will venture to embark in the business. It is the case of the would-be banker who mistakes the safety-deposit business for banking and locks up all the money in the vaults and keeps it there unused to the detriment of both the depositors and the public. A natural resource which may not be used might as well not exist.

The belief that any law that Congress may enact will be eagerly accepted by would-be water-power developers and the investors upon whom they are dependent for the means of developing is a delusion, and the sooner it is abandoned the better will be the opportunity for obtaining legislation based upon business principles and business experience. Theories of ideal legislation must be abandoned and some practical measure enacted or hydroelectric development will prove but a dream of the present generation. The investor must know in advance the conditions under which he is to conduct his business, and Federal water-power laws should specifically define the terms and conditions under which permits for use of Government property necessary to the development of water powers shall be issued. This is just as necessary to the guidance of ever-changing heads of Government bureaus in conducting the affairs of their departments as it is to those who would invest their money in the development of our water powers. Little advancement can be expected unless men of ability, experience, and character, and who possess the highest order of technical skill and acumen and organizing, financial, and executive ability can be attracted to and retained in the industry.

To be of effect, Federal legislation governing water-power development must be of a nature to protect the public interest, be fair and businesslike toward capital, and place not a featherweight more burden on the operation of water powers located within the public domain than is borne by competing hydroelectric developments operating outside the Federal reserves. There is no reason why these things should not be so coordinated upon a solid business basis as to protect every interest and bring results.

It is apparent that there is vital and imperatively urgent necessity for the enactment of practical Federal water-power legislation of a character which will promote and encourage in every way the development and utilization of the enormous quantity of energy latent in our streams and now wasting to the sea, a necessity in no way local but national. It is necessary for the manufacture of ammunition for the national defense; necessary for the manufacture of fertilizers, that the cost of living may be decreased through increase of crops; necessary for the electrification of railroads for the cheap carrying of freight and to provide a means of rapid and comfortable transportation for the people; necessary to the irrigation of vast tracts of lands, meaning the building of thousands of homes on lands now silent; necessary to the establishment of great and entirely new industries in the United States, meaning the investment of hundreds of millions of dollars, the building of new cities and towns, and the employment of thousands of men and women; necessary if we are to maintain our commercial standing among the manufacturing nations of the earth; and, finally, of vital necessity toward promoting the safety, the comfort, the welfare, and the prosperity of every citizen of the United States.

MINING AND METALLURGICAL SOCIETY OF AMERICA (S. DOC. NO. 233.)

Mr. SMOOT. The Senate ordered printed as a Senate document excerpts of the minutes of the meeting of the Mining and Metallurgical Society of America. We notice that there are a couple of illustrations, and I therefore ask that those illustrations be printed as a part of the document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDRESS BY HENRY W. FARNAM.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have a copy of an address by Henry W. Farnam, professor of political economy at Yale University, delivered at the ninth annual meeting of the American Association for Labor Legislation, at Washington, D. C., December 28, 1915, upon the seaman's law of 1915. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing, with the request that it be published as a Senate document. I understand that it is the practice that it shall go to the Committee on Printing for action.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The paper will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

REPORTS OF ALASKAN ENGINEERING COMMISSION (H. DOC. NO. 610).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of the Congress reports of the Alaskan Engineering Commission, in two volumes, for the period from March 12, 1914, the date of the approval of the Alaskan Railroad act (38 Stat., 305), to December 31, 1915, inclusive, together with accompanying maps, charts, and profiles.

ADMIRAL FLETCHER'S REPORT.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk a copy of this morning's Washington Herald, with a paragraph marked, which I wish to have read. It purports to give statements from Admiral Fletcher's report to the Secretary of the Navy, and there is just enough truth in it to make it false in all essential particulars. The report was sent to the Senate by the Secretary of the Navy, with only such parts left out as, in his opinion, foreigners ought not to know. The Secretary's letter, sent to me and which I have asked to have printed along with it, goes into full details concerning all these matters, and so far from the Democrats of the Senate having suppressed it, we are perfectly willing to have the whole report made public. Indeed, I expected it to be made public, and was surprised when Senator LODGE asked for it to be printed in confidence for use of the Naval Committee. Tennyson tells us—

That a lie which is half a truth is ever the blackest of lies.

Inasmuch as garbled and misleading extracts from Admiral Fletcher's report are leaking into the press, I ask unanimous consent that the injunction of secrecy be removed and that the executive document containing both of Admiral Fletcher's reports and the letter of the Secretary of the Navy to the chairman of the Naval Committee, which was ordered to be printed for the confidential use of the Naval Committee, be given to the press.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I made the request that this report be printed in confidence, but I made it under a misapprehension. I thought that was the desire of the department. I now think there is no possible reason for it being held in confidence, and I join with the Senator from South Carolina in asking that the injunction of secrecy be removed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; the injunction of secrecy is removed, and the document is a public document.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask the Secretary to read the statement which I have sent to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested, if there is no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Washington Herald, Jan. 19, 1916.]

MINOR OFFICERS HANDLE TURRETS—ADMIRAL FLETCHER'S REPORT COMPLAINS OF CONDITIONS IN UNITED STATES NAVY.

Sweeping indictment of the shortcomings of the American Navy are set forth in the annual report of Admiral F. F. Fletcher, commander in chief of the Atlantic Fleet, which the Democrats of the Senate have suppressed.

The admiral states that at the June inspection one division alone of the fleet was short 1,350 men. Mine-laying ships, he declares, are 25 per cent below the number of men necessary for their proper operation, and he complains that the department has reduced the complement of the destroyers by 25 per cent.

He states that during the "battle efficiency inspection" of the battleship Utah, a chief petty officer was in charge of one turret and an ensign was in charge of another. A pay clerk and a yeoman were in charge of the plotting room on one dreadnaught, doing work of experienced commissioned officers.

MUNITIONS OF WAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further resolutions, morning business is closed.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I ask that Senate resolution No. 20 be taken from the table and laid before the Senate for two purposes only: First, that I may submit some observations on it; and, second, that it may be properly referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution referred to by the Senator from Iowa will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 20) submitted by Mr. CUMMINS on December 10, 1915, as follows:

Whereas the profit incident to the manufacture and sale of arms, armament, and munitions of war has a tendency to corrupt public opinion, disturb international peace, and prevent a peaceful settlement of disputes between nations; and inasmuch as it ought to be made impossible for any person or corporation to make money out of war; and inasmuch as the Government should, for its own safety and protection, manufacture all arms, armament, and munitions of war for the equipment, construction, and use of the Army and Navy to the end that it may be independent of individual or corporate interests: Therefore be it

Resolved, That there shall be appointed by the President of the Senate a committee of five Senators to examine the following matters, to wit:

First. The most feasible plan of acquiring or constructing manufacturing plants of sufficient capacity to supply the Army and Navy with all arms, armament, and munitions of war, including ships and their equipment.

Second. The probable cost of such manufacturing plants, taking into account both present and future military needs.

Third. The proper locations for such manufacturing plants.

Fourth. The necessary legislation to prevent either persons or corporations from engaging or continuing in such manufacture and when such legislation should take effect.

The committee shall take testimony, have the power to administer oaths and to send for persons and papers. The hearings shall be open to the public, and all oral evidence submitted shall be taken down in shorthand and the notes transcribed and made a part of the record of the committee. The expenses of such hearings shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not often address the Senate upon a subject that is not under immediate consideration. I now depart from my usual custom in this respect, because the resolution which I have offered is involved in a great variety of measures that must command the attention of the Senate at this session, and it deeply concerns, as I believe, the welfare of the peace-loving, patriotic men and women of America.

Under the rules of the Senate the resolution just read must be referred to the committee which audits and controls contingent expenses, but I desire to have it known that upon the report of that committee, whether favorable or unfavorable, I will move its adoption without reference to any other committee. This course will be taken for the reason that there is no single committee of appropriate jurisdiction, and the policy involved is so vital and fundamental that the recommendation of a committe would be of little or no value.

If the resolution shall be adopted it will constitute a declaration by this body against the manufacture and sale of arms and munitions of war by any private interest. It will be a clear and emphatic announcement to the country, and to the world, that the Senate of the United States believes that commerce in the instrumentalities used only in warefare, whether for our own or foreign purposes, is exclusively a governmental function, a function which under no ordinary circumstances should be performed by the individual or the corporate citizen. It will initiate an American policy upon a subject which lies closer to the hearts of our people than any other now under consideration.

The inquiry which the resolution proposes is the natural sequence of the policy affirmed, and relates only to the plan, place, time, and cost of assuming the function.

Let it be at once understood that the resolution has nothing whatsoever to do with the number or character of the ships of which our Navy is, or ought to be, made up. It has nothing whatsoever to do with the adequacy or inadequacy of our Regular Army. It has nothing whatsoever to do with the controversy respecting the best method of creating and maintaining a body of military reserves. It has nothing whatsoever to do with the kind or competency of our coast fortifications. All these things are vastly important, but they are not brought under examination in the resolution which I have offered.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether, if the manufacture of all sorts of munitions is taken over by the Government and exclusively confined to Government institutions, it would not go a very great way toward destroying that spirit of military activity and naval expansion which is now abroad in the land?

Mr. CUMMINS. I believe, Mr. President, that it would, and it is for the purpose of demonstrating the truth of the suggestion just made by the Senator from Colorado that I am entering upon these observations.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, I believe that the Senator's conclusion stated just before my interruption might not be as accurate as outlined in the Senator's address. I am in sympathy with the belief that the acquisition by the Government of our munitions plants, or the construction of its own, and the manufacture of its munitions and equipment by itself are very desirable things, but I do believe that the proposal does affect the question of so-called military preparedness, 50 per cent of which, in my judgment, is based upon the desire of munitions plants people, who are to-day reaping enormous fortunes out of the misery and agony of Europe, to continue their manufacture for the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado is right in one sense, but the statement I have made is, nevertheless, perfectly accurate, because the policy which I desire to sustain, if I can, applies with equal force to a large navy or a small navy, a large army or a small army, and it is therefore, I think, true, as I have stated, that the resolution in and of itself has nothing whatsoever to do with these things. It matters not how strong we are in military affairs or how strong we should be or how weak it is safe to be, the course suggested in the resolution is the only course that can be pursued with honor to the Nation and with due regard to the civilization we are trying to protect.

I am conscious that it will be difficult to disassociate completely the subject proposed in the resolution from the somewhat acrimonious dispute now sweeping over the country with regard to preparedness for war, and to differentiate it from the discussion concerning an embargo upon the export of arms and munitions; but I reiterate that it is wholly removed from either, and I sincerely hope that in its consideration the Senate will bear constantly in mind that it is entirely independent of both.

What I am about to say is, of course, directed to those who believe that the United States ought to have an Army and Navy, and that it may unfortunately happen that they will be called into service to preserve free institutions and protect the lives, liberties, and privileges of our people, for the resolution is meaningless to those who believe we should stand defenseless before the world.

I have not hesitated to express my views with respect to the character, extent, and strength of the military armament which the honor and safety of this country requires, and I shall express them again when the measures which involve the question are before the Senate. In the meanwhile it is sufficient to suggest that somewhere between the armed camp of William of Germany and the open dovecote of William of Nebraska [laughter] there must be an honorable abiding place for a great nation which is prepared to lead the world toward peace, but will not submit to injustice or indignity; that somewhere between the ambition which always looks toward war, and the folly which would turn courage into cowardice, there must be a region of patriotism, wisdom, and sanity in which all good citizens can labor in harmony, not alone for our own welfare, but for the good of all humanity. Of all these things, vital as they are, I will speak at another time. The resolution I have offered assumes that we will have an Army and Navy of some kind, and that we may have war, and it propounds this question, Shall we continue to buy the armament and munitions which can be used only, first, to train, and then to kill, from private manufactories or shall the Government make them? It is a plain, direct question which, in my judgment, involves, in great measure, the peace of the world in the first instance, and then, if we must fight, the safety of the Nation. It ought to be taken for granted—and I will take it for granted—that the overwhelming proportion of the people want international peace, and believe that the paramount duty of this country is to do everything within its power to so influence the affairs of the world that disputes which have heretofore brought war may hereafter be settled righteously and peacefully in the forum of reason and justice and not in the field of brute force and inflamed passion. In modern times, at least, all right-minded men and women have hated war, but no generation has ever abhorred it as the generation now witnessing the heart-breaking soul-shocking scenes of Europe. In former days there was a chivalry and fascination about camps and battle fields which fascinated the imagination and tinted the achievements of the military profession with beautiful colors; which turned battles into a sort of romantic and honorable engagement between gentlemen of high distinction. I admit that all this was nothing more than a brilliant cloak for the baser business, but, nevertheless, it did hide some of the degradation inseparable from war. The gaudy cloak, whatever may have been its value, has now been thrown contemptuously aside and the belligerents of Europe have returned to the primitive age of undisguised brutality and ferocity; to the age of the poisoned steel; to the age which knew no difference between the combatant and the noncombatant; to the age when the rights of neutral powers were unnoticed and unknown.

War is now openly what it always has been, though disguised by stilted ceremonies—the killing of the enemy, armed or unarmed, in any possible way, just as quickly as it can be done. It matters not whether they are shot, drowned, buried alive, or starved, the object is to kill them; if not all, then so many of them that the remainder will surrender.

Science has contributed its cruel knowledge to the slaughter, and it may well be that those who are now living may see a murderous discovery that will enable a death engineer to extinguish the life of a whole community or country in the twinkling of an eye.

I see no difference in ethics between an airship dropping explosives upon the inhabitants of an unarmed city or town and poisoning the water which they must drink or the bread which they must eat.

I am not inflicting this ghastly description upon you for the purpose of criticizing the modern methods of warfare, as such, for they are strictly logical and inevitable. When one nation makes war upon another its object is to kill or maim or starve just as many as it can, and as speedily as it can, until there is submission to the demand, whatever it may be. Do not understand me to imply that a nation unjustly attacked is not to fight. It must fight or lose its place in the world and the manhood of its citizens, but that eternal fact does not modify the awful horrors of war; it simply emphasizes the everlasting truth that the nation responsible for unjust and unnecessary war will, in the final judgment day, be adjudged guilty of deliberate murder.

In view of the frightful consequences of war, the burdens, sorrows, and desolation which always attend it, it must be true that the relation which one nation bears to another, the controversies which necessarily spring up between them, their attitude toward each other, should be considered and determined in the purest light that can be shed upon human motive and human action. It must be true that all the mainsprings of movement in such crises should be patriotic and unselfish. It must be true that those who are guiding public affairs should be free from any influence, conscious or unconscious, that would tend to warp the judgment or obscure the vision.

The love of money, the passion for profit, are planted deeply in the human heart, and when properly directed they are the fruitful sources and potent factors in the growth, development, and success of any people.

These observations bring me to the application of the resolution to the policy of the United States. Our people will in the future, even more than in the past, be in constant contact with all the powers of the earth. Unquestionably there will be controversies of all degrees of importance. Some will be vital, some will be trivial; but they must be settled either by conference, mediation, arbitration, or war. In the management of these ever-recurring difficulties our Government will need not only the highest statesmanship but, behind it and impelling it, a public opinion untainted and uncorrupted by the selfish influences, seen or unseen, of the business profit which will come from war. The men who die and the women who mourn in war have the God-given right to a public sentiment, untouched and unmodified by those whose coffers are filled with the bloody gold of traffic in war..

I agree that war may come, but if it comes it must be the result of the calm, dispassionate, loyal purpose to meet the awful scourge, because there is no other way of defending our civilization, our institutions, and our honor.

I do not assert that every person or corporation which may profit from war would incite war, but I do assert that all such persons and associations are not competent to judge the controversies which may lead to conflict, and inasmuch as they can not be removed from the great panel of the Republic, they ought to be removed from the business out of which the interest grows. It ought to be made impossible, so far as the power of the Government can be exerted, for any man or corporation to make money out of war. It ought to be true that when we invoke trial by battle no man shall be the gainer, except as he may share with all his fellow countrymen in the ultimate advantages of victory.

We need just now above all other things a rebaptism in Americanism. To me Americanism means fidelity to American interests, loyalty to American institutions, pride in our past, and confidence in our future. It means an understanding of our place in the affairs of the world, and of the rights and privileges of our citizens. It means sympathy in the struggle for liberty and justice wherever it is taking place. It means a comprehension of wrongs at home as well as wrongs abroad. It means a spirit that commands men to live for their country, and, if necessary, to die for it; but I, for one, am not willing that Americanism shall be defined and standardized by millionaire-munition makers or by the brokers, bankers, or backers who share their blood-stained profits.

I have not even intimated that any great portion of the men who are interested in manufacturing arms and munitions of war would consciously or maliciously precipitate a war, but in the very nature of things they can not look upon war with the feeling that animates the great body of the people. Men engaged in business necessarily desire that it shall be a successful business, and the business to which I have referred can not be in the highest degree successful unless the country is at war or is preparing for war.

Moreover, the evil influence is not confined to the comparatively few men who are directly engaged in such manufacture. It extends to all their commercial associates. It ramifies throughout the whole structure of industrial and financial society, and finally binds so many men together that its effect can hardly be overestimated.

I come now to the question suggested by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

The present situation illustrates my thought in a startling way. We are considering the problem of preparedness. It is a grave, serious problem and demands the dispassionate and patriotic judgment of the people of the Nation. We ought to determine the subject in the most unselfish, farsighted, courageous spirit. In this critical moment what is the attitude of the makers of arms and munitions? Without exception, so far as I know, they are insisting upon the most comprehensive program which it is possible to conceive, and they are employing, through all the channels and all the instrumentalities which mold public thought, all the forces at their command for a completeness of preparation that would turn this country into a military camp, and practically destroy all ambition, save the ambition to overcome by force of arms the entire world. This is a perfectly natural course for them to pursue, and I would be astonished if they were to pursue any other. Their business is to supply material for war, and it is not in mortal man to escape the temptations of gain in the enterprises in which they are engaged.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. COLT. I wish to ask the Senator a question. If the Government enters into the arms business, whether it would not follow that the Government itself could not export any arms in time of war to any belligerent nation, because that would be an unneutral act? And if all nations adopted this policy of the manufacture of their arms, whether it would not necessarily follow that each nation must rely upon itself to supply its own arms in time of war, because all other nations would be forbidden from exporting arms?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I shall come presently to the consideration of that aspect of the subject; but lest I might overlook it, I desire to say now that in my opinion the people of the United States ought not to supply any other nation or any other people with arms unless the Government itself is willing to assume the obligation of war and participate in the conflict, whatever it may be. I do not say that there are not circumstances under which it would become the highest moral obligation for the Government of the United States to aid a people struggling against injustice and oppression.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. Since the Senator has been interrupted, I desire to ask him if he does not consider it true that a belligerent nation may be as much aided by furnishing it with food supplies, for example, as with arms and ammunition; and, if that be true, if it is any more reprehensible to supply arms or ammunition or anything pertaining to that subject than it is to supply such a nation with food?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I answer the question very willingly. It is true that there are times and circumstances under which food is as necessary to a belligerent as are munitions of war or arms; but it is not true that the same policy which would require the Government to manufacture implements or instrumentalities that are usable only in war should be applied to the production of grain and cattle and foodstuffs and clothing, products which are used not alone in war but in peace as well.

To emphasize the effect of the private manufacture of arms and munitions, I beg the attention of the Senate to some things that have happened in the markets of the country since the beginning of the war in Europe. I have before me some information furnished by the Legislative Reference Division in the Library of Congress indicating the growth and profit of the business.

After the commencement of the war and prior to October 26, 1915, there were organized in the United States 174 new corporations for the purpose of manufacturing munitions of war. I am not now referring to those corporations in which the capitalization has been increased. I am referring to the extraordinary fact that 174 new corporations, some of them immensely large, some of them of lesser magnitude, have been organized in our country for no other purpose than to furnish munitions of war to Europe.

It would consume time unnecessarily, even if I had the statistics, to describe the capitalization of these corporations or the war contracts which they have undertaken. It will serve my purpose to lay before you the fact that in 15 months—that is to say, from August 1, 1914, to November 1, 1915, a period of 15 months—there were exported from this country to Europe ammunition and firearms to the value of $161,964,276, and the exports are increasing month by month.

I submit the estimated amount of war contracts with a limited number of the large corporations:

American Car & Foundry	$35,000,000
American Locomotive	66,000,000
American Steel Foundries	15,000,000
Baldwin Locomotive Works	100,000,000

Bethlehem Steel Co., 11,000 shells per day, together with field guns and other like arms.

Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., 35,000 tons of steel rounds.

Crucible Steel of America	$10,500,000
General Electric	68,000,000
New York Air Brake	20,242,000
Westinghouse Air Brake	20,000,000
Westinghouse Manufacturing Co	100,000,000

This does not include the contracts of the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co. of shrapnel shells, or the Du Pont Powder Co. of explosives, or the Electric Storage Battery Co., or the General Chemical Co., or of the General Motors Co., or of the Lackawanna Steel Co., or of the Tennessee Copper Co., all of which are immense concerns and have been largely engaged in the same general business.

The most striking illustration, probably, of the effect upon these large corporations of the manufacture of arms and munitions is found in the unparalleled increase in the market value of their stocks. I instance some of them: Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co., the value of the stock increased from 10 to 43¾; of another class of stock, from 43 to 74½.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. WEEKS. I hope it will not interrupt the Senator for me to make the suggestion that all the securities which I presume he is going to read were at abnormal prices at the beginning of the war on account of the depressed condition of business which existed at that time.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think, Mr. President, that the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts is at least measurably true. I do not assert, as I shall presently explain, that the entire increase in the value of the capitalization is due to war contracts; but the comparison is so striking that I could not forbear putting it before the Senate.

American Car & Foundry, from 50⅜ to 86¼, common.

American Locomotive, from 28 to 71.

American Steel Foundries, from 29½ to 70¾.

Baldwin Locomotive Works, from 43 to 112½.

Bethlehem Steel Co., from 41½ to 583, common; 82¾ to 166, preferred.

Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., from 25¾ to 59.

Crucible Steel of America, from 16¾ to 92.

Du Pont Powder Co., from 58½ to 104.

Electric Storage Battery Co., from 51 to 71⅜.

General Electric Co., from 146¼ to 177.

General Chemical Co., from 168 to 348.

General Motors Co., from 90 to 364.

Lackawanna Steel Co., from 32 to 85½.

New York Air Brake, from 66 to 148.

Pennsylvania Steel Co., from 62½ to 96.

Tennessee Copper, from 38⅛ to 63½.

Westinghouse Air Brake, from 129½ to 143½.

Without reckoning the effect upon any of the thousands of other corporations which have engaged in the business, the added value of the stocks of the corporations which I have quoted amounts in the aggregate to the appalling sum of $432,056,500.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I will yield in just a moment. I ought to say in this connection that I may be in error with respect to this aggregate. It may be that the statement furnished me by the authorities is not computed upon the basis stated in it. I have computed this sum upon the assumption that in the statement furnished all the capitalization has been reduced to the basis of $100 per share. There are some of these corporations in which the par value of the share is less than $100, and if the person who made the computation did not take that into account the sum that I have last stated ought to be reduced about $50,000,000. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I interrupt the Senator merely to add to his statement that which I saw upon the same subject some two months ago in the columns of the World Work Magazine. In the article to which I refer it was stated that the increase in the stock value of the institutions engaged in furnishing supplies to the allies was greater than the total sum of their contracts, and my recollection is that the latter was then given at $750,000,000. Upon that assumption the increase at that time must have been over three quarters of a billion dollars.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, just a moment. I do not know about that; I can neither affirm it nor deny it; but I do know—at least it was related to me by one who was interested in the organization—of a company being organized with a capital of $200,000 receiving a contract for arms and munitions at a price that would enable the company in the execution of that single contract to return the entire capitalization of the company, assuming that it was but a temporary affair, and not only so, but to award a profit in the undertaking of more than $200,000.

Mr. WEEKS rose.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. I wish to ask the Senator if he has had any inquiry made or has made any investigation of the probable increase which those who have produced food products or those who have had horses and mules and other animals for sale, have made on account of or as a result of the war.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have not made any such inquiry because the inquiry is not pertinent to the subject I am discussing. I assume that the Government of the United States is not about to enter upon the production of all things that are used by the people of the world both in war and peace. I am limiting my proposition to those things that are used only in war, and the whole basis of it is that the influence of profit ought to be eliminated, in so far as it can be, from the minds of the people when they come to determine whether they will have war or peace.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, one more question. Would it be the purpose of the Senator, in case we are engaged in war, to prevent the manufacture of arms and ammunition to be sold to our Government at a greater price than cost?

Mr. CUMMINS. Not at all. I hope that all the countries of the world will adopt this policy. A good many of them have; that is, they have made great strides in that direction. But if there is to be an interchange in arms it ought to be a governmental interchange and not a private interchange. That is my view of the subject.

Mr. WEEKS. But the Senator from Colorado suggested that that could not be done without a violation of neutrality; at least I do not see any way in which it could be done. What I am trying to get at is this: How would we, in time of stress, obtain our supplies unless we allowed some one to make a profit out of the arms and ammunition which were going to be manufactured? Certainly it is not the purpose of the Senator that the Government shall have a plant sufficient to supply our needs in time of war.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is, Mr. President, my purpose.

Mr. WEEKS. I have not the figures before me, but it would require a plant that would cover the whole District of Columbia and probably the employment of 200,000 men.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator is very greatly in error about that, but if the assumption of this function by the Government will tend to prevent war and secure the adjustment of international controversies through peaceful methods, this Government can well afford to own and maintain a plant that will be idle a part of the time. Of course, if we are so unfortunate as to get into war and the Government plant or plants are insufficient to furnish the war material, we can convert private institutions that are now engaged in making commodities for peaceful industry into war factories. We have done it, or it has been done by private owners already.

Mr. President, there is an automobile factory not very far from my own home. It has ceased to manufacture automobiles and is now turning out day after day great quantities of casings for shrapnel shells, and I was told that the expense of converting the factory from one intended to manufacture motor cars to one turning out shrapnel shells was negligible. There are a thousand ways in which the Government can supplement the inadequacy of its plants if we shall unfortunately engage in war.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. I will venture to suggest that the Government of the United States could, with perfect facility, from one set of good models, furnish the country with the jigs which would be necessary to turn out any of these munitions, and when the occasion arose furnish these jigs without delay, without additional expense, and put these plants to work throughout the country with ease.

Mr. CUMMINS. Practically there is no difficulty at all in that phase of the matter.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. May I not suggest to the Senator that that difficulty, whatever it might be, is a difficulty which exists at the present time and always has existed when private parties made these munitions, and it could not be increased or made more difficult by the Government doing it.

Mr. CUMMINS. A very appropriate answer is that our facilities in the manufacture of arms and munitions, I suppose, have multiplied ten times since the war in Europe began. Possibly I am understating the comparison rather than overstating it.

The magnitude of the business may be further shown by reference to the disbursements of the United States for the preparation that we have already made. During the 10 years beginning with 1906 and ending in 1915 we have expended in ordnance, engineering, and naval construction $650,028,630, and for all military purposes $2,414,291,255. I have not been able to ascertain just how much of these amounts has been paid to private manufacturers, nor is the exact proportion necessary to emphasize the thought I am endeavoring to impress upon you. It is well known that a large part of it has gone to those whose business it has been to furnish the United States with armament and munitions.

May I read in this connection very briefly from a letter I have just received, bearing date this morning, from the Navy Department? I do it simply to indicate how great the business is:

January 19, 1916—

This is inclosed in a letter to me from the Secretary of the Navy—

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS,

Amount paid to manufacturers for arms, armament, munitions, and raw material for same, 1911–1915, inclusive (impracticable to furnish from 1906, as prior to 1911 ordnance materials were not separately accounted for)		$46,721,170.56
Amount expended for manufacture of arms, armament, and munitions by the Government, 1911–1915, inclusive (impracticable to furnish from 1906, as prior to 1911 ordnance materials were not separately accounted for; a portion of the material charge is a duplication of amounts shown as paid to manufacturers, as the raw material purchased was subsequently used in manufacture):

Texas	9,476,937.31	New York	9,757,749.07
	22,544,763.52		25,136,262.30

I dare not consume the time to fully describe the present situation with respect to the manufacture of arms and munitions. It would not be far from the truth if I were to say that every machine shop in the country that has a lathe in it and that is willing to accept an order from one of the belligerents is engaged in turning out shells of some description. Big foundries and little foundries are casting for war; gunmakers are working day and night, and all these in the less-important industries scattered from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

May I lay before you a rather interesting article that I saw in the New York Times of last Sunday? It is headed "Our greatest arms plant," and reads:

Remington-Union cartridge factory at Bridgeport an Aladdin's castle; industrial army of 50,000 organized by one man.

I will read a paragraph from the body of the article:

Twelve million dollars spent in less than a year have brought into being what will probably be the greatest small-arms and ammunition plant in the world—that of the Remington Arms and Union Metallic Cartridge factories at Bridgeport, Conn. When it is in full operation it will call for the services of from 34,000 to 36,000 employees, bringing the total of the industrial army employed in various places by these companies to 50,000. The Bridgeport plant covers hundreds of acres and is the latest word in factory construction, and yet in its present form it may be said to have actually sprung into existence, to have come before the eyes of Bridgeport, in a moment.

The enormous plant of the Remington Arms Co. was not in existence last March. It was turned over to the company by the contractors in November; so that this immense creation was completed in less than eight months, and even as far back as last August it was so far completed that outwardly it looked as it does to-day.

It has made such a revolution in Bridgeport that the company has been obliged to build practically another city within the city for the accommodation of the thousands of men who are coming from all parts of New England to form a new colony; it has gone into the work of sewering and grading, and is now about to turn its attention to the question of schooling for the children of its subcity. Eighteen thousand men and women in the employ of the Remington Arms, 16,000 more in that of the Union Metallic Cartridge Co., will form the subcity, and with them will come their families. The company is now taking them on at the rate, in the Remington plant alone, of 2,000 a month.

Concerning the same enterprise, I saw an article in one of the New York papers, possibly the New York Tribune, relating to the capitalization of the organization. It is a consolidation, Mr. President, and this is the way it is described in the paper to which I refer:

$60,000,000 MUNITION COMPANY CHARTERED—REMINGTON AND UNION METALLIC COMBINATION AT BRIDGEPORT FORMED.

HARTFORD, January 15.

Connecticut's biggest war baby—

What irony there is in that description! The article continues—

a $60,000,000 corporation for the manufacture and sale of arms and munitions, was launched to-day when papers incorporating the Remington Arms-Union Metallic Cartridge Corporation, of Bridgeport, were filed in the office of the State secretary.

The purpose of the new corporation is to acquire the stock and to take over and carry on the business of the Remington Arms & Ammunition Co. of Bridgeport, incorporated under the laws of New York, and the Union Metallic Cartridge Co., also of Bridgeport, and incorporated under the laws of Connecticut. It is further stated in the papers that the purposes are to make, manufacture, purchase, and sell firearms, projectiles, and ammunition, and to build and construct plants for the manufacture of such articles.

And the article proceeds with a graphic description of the efficiency which this corporation is shortly to reach.

I also read a very few words from a most interesting article published in the Chicago Tribune of Monday last, I believe, written by Mr. Gus C. Roeder, a correspondent now in Germany——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I want to inquire of the Senator from Iowa whether he has anywhere been able to ascertain the amount of capital actually invested in the Remington-Union Metallic enterprise?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not. I have not looked into that phase of it at all.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no doubt the Senator will agree with me that it is very much less than the capitalization of $60,000,000, as announced.

Mr. CUMMINS. Unquestionably. Nearly all these corporations are overcapitalized, I think. I am reading from a description by this very graphic writer of Berlin. He says:

WAR MAKES MANY RICH.

Because money is so plentiful, prices have gone up considerably. This applies to nearly every article. Men in the field and officers are receiving war salary, which is double the amount paid to the military in time of peace. Besides, the firms which formerly employed the men now serving the colors are paying half salary to their former employees. This continues until the end of the war. This money is usually paid direct to the families at home.

Then, again, so many people have suddenly become immensely rich since the beginning of the war. This applies mostly to those who are employed in furnishing material used in connection with the war. There are so many get-rich-quick families that some Germans are wishing that the war may continue for many more years to come—

And so on in like fashion throughout a half column.

It may be that circumstances will arise which can be met only by war; when honor, safety, liberty, and conscience will all demand armed resistance. I am hoping that these conditions will not confront us, but if there comes a time at which we must decide for war or against war, the men and boys who must die in the struggle which we may enter, the homes that will be made desolate, and the sorrow which will fill the land have a right to insist that the question touching our honor, safety, and institutions shall be decided in a forum uncorrupted and undisturbed by love of money or the opportunity which business may see of reaping profit from the slaughter of the human kind.

Mr. President, if it is good policy to permit the private manufacture of arms and munitions of war, why is it not good policy to allow men to recruit armies and to sell them to the Government which is to employ armies? It has not been long since that was the practice of many governments. It has been but little more than a hundred years since it was regarded as entirely consistent with the highest morality and the most exalted ethics for a government to farm out the enlistment and the training of its armies. The civilized sense of mankind overturned so brutal and so dangerous a policy, and it will not be long until that same sense which takes into account the dearest possessions of civilized man, will drive out this source of profit from the great court which finally determines whether we shall be at peace or whether we shall be at war.

If the reasons I have given for the Government manufacture of all such things were the only reasons pertinent to the inquiry, I would confidently submit them, not only as conclusive, but as overwhelming. There are, however, other considerations which lead to the same result. In the event of war there must be a source for the supply of arms and munitions constant and dependable. So long as private corporations are the source the manufactories will be established at those places most convenient to the manufacturers and most profitable in operation, and the Government must depend upon their production or go unsupplied. There are some very worthy people who sincerely believe that we are in grave danger of invasion, and the officers of the Army are practically a unit now in the conclusion that if one of the great powers of Europe were to make war upon us the entire territory east of the Allegheny Mountains would speedily, if not at once, fall into the hands of the enemy. If you will draw a line parallel to our eastern sea coast and 100 miles inland, substantially every plant capable of producing arms and munitions in any considerable quantities will be found between that line and the Atlantic seaboard; and, as I remember it, every factory permanently engaged in such work, save one, is east of the Allegheny Mountains. If, therefore, the fears of those students of international affairs who anticipate the capture and subjection of the eastern part of our country are well founded, the United States is criminally negligent in permitting the continuance of a condition which, when that unhappy day shall come, leaves it helpless and hopeless.

It must be perfectly obvious to every thoughtful man who believes that we should prepare for war that the manufactories which are to produce the implements of war should be distributed throughout the country between the Allegheny and the Rocky Mountains. It must be equally obvious that private enterprise will never locate them in that part of the country, and that if we are to pursue the path of safety nothing remains but the assumption of such work by the Government itself, and the establishment of the governmental factories in those localities least accessible to an invading force.

The subject in most of its phases has been under discussion for a long time. It has never received serious attention, simply because there has been a sense of security against foreign armies and navies that made such protection unnecessary. It is not so now, for whether we are in danger or not the people have been compelled to think about war and to carefully study the American situation. It can not be doubted that, divergent as we are upon the extent of preparation reasonable or necessary, there is little difference of opinion respecting the subject I am discussing.

There is another aspect of the matter worthy of a moment's reference: The neutrality of the United States in the European war is gravely questioned, and the country is full of bitter animosities on account of the export of arms and munitions to some of the belligerent powers, while others are, by the condition of the war, denied access to our markets. This is not the time to discuss the proper relation of the United States toward Europe. It is sufficient to say that we have proclaimed neutrality. How faithfully we have observed the obligations of neutrality is open to dispute; but, assuming that as an organized Government we have been neutral, it is the only respect in which we have been neutral. Individually we are on one side or the other. Industrially, commercially, and financially we are not neutral. The consequence is that we are torn with dissensions and constantly confronted with the most perplexing questions we have ever met.

I now come to a more direct answer to the inquiry propounded by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

If the manufacture of arms and munitions had been at the beginning of the war a governmental function alone, then we would have been compelled to have decided promptly and effectively whether the United States, as a Government, would furnish any or all of the belligerents with arms and munitions, and the decision of that question would either have made us participants in the war or insured a neutrality not open to controversy.

It is not for me at this time to discuss the great, broad inquiry as to our policy toward Europe; it is not for me to ask whether, in obedience to the commands of civilization, we ought to have protested by force of arms against the invasion of Belgium. I express no opinion upon the subject; but I say that if it was our duty and if the Government had been the sole manufacturer of arms and munitions, then, if we continued to supply the allies with arms we would have declared for the allies, and if it was, in the opinion of the people the wiser, the better, the more Christian course to remain neutral, then neither of the belligerents would have received arms and munitions from the borders of the United States. For one, I believe that the course of the United States should be open; I believe it should be bold and courageous; it should be either for a belligerent or neutral as between the belligerents, and I have never been persuaded that the divorce between the Government as an organization and the action and conduct of its citizens can be very successfully observed or established.

The objection to the system proposed in the resolution, so far as I have heard, is one of cost entirely. It is said that if the Government undertakes to manufacture all the arms and munitions for the equipment and use of the Army and Navy the expense will be greater, first, because as a general rule the cost of Government manufacture is larger than the cost of private manufacture; second, because to meet the emergencies of war the Government would be compelled to construct and maintain plants with a capacity greatly in excess of the ordinary requirements.

My reply is twofold. If I have fairly perceived and correctly expressed the evil influence of private profit in such things, the matter of cost in manufacture shrinks into insignificance; second, while I am ready to admit that ordinarily a private corporation can produce an article at lower cost than a Government establishment, it never has been true, and it is not true now, that the private corporation will sell to the Government the article at a lower price than the cost to the Government in making it.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to call the attention of the Senator and the Senate to the fact that the Government of the United States is now making its own powder at about 25 cents a pound, while these foreign Governments are paying for it three or four times as much.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have with me here a great mass of proof with respect to the question I have just stated; that is, with respect to the comparative cost to the Government of making war material and the price paid for similar material to private manufacturers. I do not intend to consume the time of the Senate by reading it. It is the history of the last 10 years. If there is any one thing conclusively shown in the records of Congress and of the department, it is that, with here and there an exception, the Government has always made for itself these instrumentalities at a cost far below the price it has been compelled to pay when it has purchased them.

It will not, of course, be understood that my resolution contemplates an instantaneous change in our policy. With every effort strained in that direction it will require years to accomplish it, but it will never be accomplished unless we begin the movement. Nor must it be forgotten that if, after having provided ourselves with all reasonable facilities for manufacturing war material, we become engaged in war and our plants are insufficient, we can either contract with private concerns, which, with little change in their machinery, can make most of the articles necessary in warfare, or we can do as they have done abroad—take possession of them and operate them for the time being.

I bring the discussion to a close. I recognize that the policy I advocate is a revolution in our system, but that it is sound and will promote peace, safety, and honor, I have no doubt whatsoever. We have so long indulged the hope that all our international controversies could be adjusted without the intervention of arms that we have not examined carefully the causes of war. Now, that we are witnessing the most terrifying and devastating conflict of all time; now, that we can comprehend the irretrievable disaster which war inflicts; now, that we are urged to put ourselves in readiness to successfully engage in such a struggle, it becomes our bounden duty to do all that is within human power to expel from our national life everything that will interfere with the highest, purest mortal judgment, and remove every temptation that will lead us into war. If war must come, let it come when honorable peace is impossible and at the command of influences springing from love of liberty, love of country, love of humanity, and not from passion inflamed by the sordid hope of gain.

INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 60, being Order of Business No. 33. It is the joint resolution providing for an investigation of the subject of transportation by a joint committee of the Senate and House. It has been unanimously reported by the Interstate Commerce Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, before the request is acted upon, may I be permitted to secure some information? I should like to ask, conceding that I have not been able to be before the Interstate Commerce Committee, when this joint resolution received the consideration of the committee?

Mr. NEWLANDS. It received the consideration of the committee at the meeting held before the last one. I will say to the Senator that it was fully considered at that time and unanimously approved, the question of certain phraseology being left to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and myself. We agreed upon that phraseology, and we have reported the joint resolution to the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator what expense it is estimated this commission will entail upon the Government?

Mr. NEWLANDS. We have put the expense at $25,000. I assume that that amount will cover it. The committee will inquire into the whole subject of transportation, just as the National Monetary Commission inquired into the question of banking and currency and our financial conditions. The resolution follows the recommendation of the President of the United States in his last message.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to say, expressing my own personal view, that I am not disposed to the increase and multiplication of these different forms of commissions, which invariably have resulted in accomplishing nothing more than earning their own commissions. But in this case——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion there?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The joint resolution does not provide for a commission but simply provides for a joint committee of the Senate and House, composed of members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House and the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. The information is satisfactory, Mr. President, removing one of the objections I have; and since the Interstate Commerce Committee has, as the Senator says, unanimously recommended it—I take it upon proper information—I shall not urge any objection at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I was not able to hear what the Senator from Nevada said.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 60, being Order of Business No. 33. It is a joint resolution providing for a general investigation of the subject of transportation by a joint committee of Members of the Senate and House, with a view to reporting as soon as practicable; but the report probably will not be submitted until the next session of Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator what is the necessity of this commission? Has the committee determined that there is a necessity for it?

Mr. NEWLANDS. It is not a commission. This is a joint committee of the Senate and House, composed of members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House and the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is so near 2 o'clock that I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the request for unanimous consent.

SAN ANTONIO BICENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate joint resolution No. 72, referring to the San Antonio Bicentennial Exposition. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], when it was called up a day or two ago, desired to look further into the matter, and it was laid over for that purpose. I trust the Senator is satisfied as a result of his examination.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the information I have compels me to oppose the resolution; and at this time I shall object to its consideration, because I have not the time between now and 2 o'clock to tell the Senate the reason why I object.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order—the consideration of the calendar.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is the consideration of bills on the calendar under Rule VIII. The Secretary will state the first bill.

The first bill on the calendar was the bill (S. 2520) granting to the State of Nevada 7,000,000 acres of land in said State for the use and benefit of the public schools of Nevada and the State University of the State of Nevada.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take up Order of Business No. 33, being Senate joint resolution No. 60.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business No. 33—Senate joint resolution No. 60. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. GALLINGER. That would displace the unfinished business.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, is that motion debatable at this time?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I did not hear what the Senator from Michigan said.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I wanted to say a word to the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to the effect that it occurs to me that it is not wise to take up this matter and dispose of it in 10 minutes. With the general purposes of the resolution I am in accord. I was present during the very few minutes that the committee considered this great question. I know that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has expressed his desire to offer an amendment to the resolution. Anyway, it seems to me, Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Upon the statement of my colleague on the Interstate Commerce Committee——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The attention of the Chair has been called to the fact that prior to 2 o'clock a motion to proceed to the consideration of a bill is not subject to debate.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Upon the statement of my colleague on the Interstate Commerce Committee that he would like this matter to go over, of course I yield to the suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is withdrawn, then.

RENÉ W. PINTÓ Y WENTWORTH.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I have two joint resolutions which I wish to report from the Committee on Foreign Relations. One of them authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to receive for instruction at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis a certain young gentleman whose name is given, a citizen of Cuba, to be educated at that school at the expense of the Cuban Government. The other is a like joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive another gentleman into the academy at West Point, to be educated at the expense of the Cuban Government. I shall be glad if the joint resolutions could be considered at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. Are the joint resolutions unanimously reported by the committee?

Mr. STONE. The joint resolutions are unanimously reported; and if they could be considered at this time, I should like to have it done. I therefore report back favorably from the Committee on Foreign Relations the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 80) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy, at West Point, René W. Pintó y Wentworth, a citizen of Cuba, and I submit a report (No. 54) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

It authorizes the Secretary of War to permit René W. Pintó y Wentworth, a citizen of Cuba, to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point, provided that no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby, and that he shall agree to comply with all regulations for the police and discipline of the academy, to be studious, and to give his utmost efforts to accomplish the course in the various departments of instruction, and that he shall not be admitted to the academy until he shall have passed the mental and physical examinations prescribed for candidates from the United States, and that he shall be immediately withdrawn if deficient in studies or conduct and so recommended by the academic board; and also that in the case of René W. Pintó y Wentworth the provisions of sections 1320 and 1321 of the Revised Statutes shall be suspended.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CARLOS HEVIA Y REYES GAVILÁN.

Mr. STONE. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 81) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to receive for instruction at the United States Naval Academy, at Annapolis, Mr. Carlos Hevia y Reyes Gavilán, a citizen of Cuba, and I submit a report (No. 55) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

It authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to permit Mr. Carlos Hevia y Reyes Gavilán, a citizen of Cuba, to receive instruction at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, provided that no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby, and that he shall agree to comply with all regulations for the police and discipline of the academy, to be studious, and to give his utmost efforts to accomplish the course in the various departments of instruction, and that he shall not be admitted to the academy until he shall have passed the mental and physical examinations prescribed for candidates from the United States, and that he shall be immediately withdrawn if deficient in studies or conduct and so recommended by the academic board.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

The next bill on the calendar was the bill (S. 1053) to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes.

Mr. STERLING. I ask that that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

NEWSPAPER PUBLICATION OF LAND-OFFICE NOTICES.

The bill (S. 1062) relating to the duties of registers of United States land offices and the publication in newspapers of official land-office notices was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. After the word "him," in line 5, on page 1, the Senator from New Mexico proposes to insert a comma and the words "or, in case of a public-land entry, by the entryman,".

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I know that the Senator from New Mexico desires to speak upon that amendment. He is out of the Chamber. For that reason I ask that it go over. I am perfectly willing to vote upon it, personally.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator from New Mexico has already discussed the matter quite extensively.

Mr. CATRON. Mr. President, I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. FALL] is unavoidably absent, on account of sickness, and will not be here to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 381.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] now desires to present a very radical and a very far-reaching and important amendment, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hughes	Myers	Smoot
Beckham	Husting	Nelson	Sterling
Catron	James	Oliver	Stone
Chamberlain	Johnson, Me.	Overman	Sutherland
Clarke, Ark.	Jones	Page	Swanson
Colt	Kenyon	Pittman	Thomas
Curtis	Kern	Poindexter	Tillman
du Pont	La Follette	Pomerene	Underwood
Fletcher	Lane	Ransdell	Vardaman
Gallinger	Lea, Tenn.	Robinson	Warren
Gore	Lee, Md.	Shafroth	Weeks
Gronna	Lewis	Sheppard	Williams
Hardwick	Lippitt	Sherman	Works
Hitchcock	McLean	Smith, Ariz.
Hollis	Martine	Smith, S. C.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I beg to state that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] is detained at home on account of illness.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] has been called to his home and is unable to attend the session of the Senate to-day.

Mr. STERLING. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota]. I should like to have this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM] on important business. He is paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. I wish this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. STONE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. REED] is unavoidably absent from the Senate and will not be able to attend the session to-day.

Mr. SWANSON. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. MARTIN of Virginia] has been detained from the Senate yesterday and to-day on account of sickness in his family. I desire this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], who has been called to New York. He has a pair recorded.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to state that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] is absent. He is engaged on official business and is paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

Mr. STONE. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is detained from the Senate by illness. He is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to section 30, page 29, being the section to which I called the attention of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] yesterday. I have written the proposed amendment somewhat hurriedly, and as I fear the Clerk may not be able to read it I will read it myself.

On page 29, line 20, before the word "treaty," insert the word "or"; strike out all of line 21 and in lieu thereof insert:

Of the United States is involved or where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the Constitution, treaties, or laws of or commission held or authority exercised under the United States and the decision is against the title, right, privilege, or immunity especially set up or claimed by either party under such Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority.

So that the section as amended will read:

SEC. 30. That the Supreme Court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to review, revise, reverse, modify, or affirm the final judgments and decrees of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands in all actions, cases, causes, and proceedings now pending therein or hereafter determined thereby in which the Constitution or any statute or treaty of the United States is involved or where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the Constitution, treaties, or laws of or commission held or authority exercised under the United States and the decision is against the title, right, privilege, or immunity especially set up or claimed by either party under such Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority, and such final judgments or decrees may and can be reviewed, revised, reversed, modified, or affirmed by said Supreme Court of the United States on appeal or writ of error by the party aggrieved within the same time, in the same manner, under the same regulations, and by the same procedure, as far as applicable, as the final judgments and decrees of the district courts of the United States.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Would the Senator from Utah object to having his amendment printed and lie over until to-morrow?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no objection.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is rather complicated, and the section as it appears in the bill is the existing law. If the Senator will have it printed and lie over until to-morrow, possibly we can agree upon the acceptance of it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no objection to that course being taken, but I should like to say just a word in reference to it, so that what I say may be considered in connection with the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie over. The Senator from Utah will proceed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the provision embraced in section 30, and which is now included in the organic act, as the Senator from Nebraska has said, provides that jurisdiction of the Supreme Court shall extend to cases in which the Constitution or any statute, treaty, title, right, or privilege of the United States is involved. I think the latter part of that provision was inserted under some sort of a misapprehension. Certainly it could not have been intended to limit the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States to a case where the title, right, or privilege was only that of the United States, but what was evidently intended to be covered was a case where the title or right or privilege was that of some person or corporation claimed under the United States or under the Constitution or a statute or a treaty of the United States. That language has been in the statutes of the United States, with reference to appeals from the State courts, for a great many years, and it is perfectly understood and has received judicial construction over and over again. The language which now appears in the Philippine bill, so far as I know, never has occurred anywhere else, and, as it seems to me, it is wholly inapplicable to what we want to accomplish.

Therefore the amendment which I have offered, in so far as it relates to the question of title, right, or privilege, has adopted the language which is now found in the statute with reference to appeals from the State courts; and I have also inserted the word "immunity," which seems by inadvertence to have been omitted from the organic act.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator from Georgia permit the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas to be offered?

Mr. HARDWICK. I thought that had been done.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I supposed the amendment had been offered, otherwise I would have presented it. I offer it now formally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of the bill the following additonal section:

SEC. —. The President is hereby authorized and directed to withdraw and surrender all right of possession, supervision, jurisdiction, control, or sovereignty now existing and exercised by the United States in and over the territory and people of the Philippines, and he shall on behalf of the United States fully recognize the independence of the said Philippines as a separate and self-governing nation and acknowledge the authority and control over the same of the government instituted by the people thereof. This transfer of possession, sovereignty, and governmental control shall be completed and become absolute within two years from the date of the approval of this act, under the terms and in the manner hereinafter prescribed. For the purpose of a complete and prompt compliance with this direction, the President is hereby invested with full power and authority to make such orders and regulations and to enter into such negotiations with the authorities of said Philippines or others as may be necessary to finally settle and adjust all property rights and other relations as between the United States and the said Philippines, and to cause to be acknowledged, respected, and safeguarded all of the personal and property rights of citizens or corporations of the United States resident or engaged in business in said Philippines or having property interests therein. In any such settlement or adjustment so made in respect to the rights and property of the United States as against the said Philippines the President shall reserve or acquire such lands and rights and privileges appurtenant thereto as may, in his judgment, be required by the United States for naval bases and coaling stations within the territory of said Philippines.

Immediately after the passage of this Act, the President shall invite the cooperation of the principal nations interested in the affairs of that part of the world in which the Philippines are located, for the purpose and to the end that the cooperating nations shall mutually pledge themselves, in the form of a treaty or other binding agreement, to recognize and respect the sovereignty and independence of the said Philippines, and also to mutually obligate themselves, equally and not one primarily nor to any greater extent than another, to maintain as against external force the sovereignty of said Philippines for the period of five years from the taking effect of such treaty or agreement. If any of the nations so invited to join the United States in such undertaking shall decline to do so, then the President shall include as parties to such convention or agreement such nations as may be willing to join therein and to assume such obligations; and if none are willing to so unite therein, then the President is authorized to give such guaranty on behalf of the United States alone.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] that the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas is of far-reaching importance. Indeed, the bill proposed by the Senator from Nebraska, while important in a way and admirable in a way, is of very little significance when compared with the proposition advanced by the Senator from Arkansas. The bill proposes some changes which seem to make for a more liberal participation on the part of the Filipinos in their own government. On the other hand, the amendment suggested by the Senator from Arkansas proposes that in a definite time, within a reasonable time I think, a step shall be taken that this Government, in my judgment, ought to take, and to the necessity and propriety of our taking that step, either in the manner proposed by the Senator from Arkansas or in some similar manner, I now wish to especially invite the attention of my Democratic colleagues.

If it be not old fashioned to call attention to Democratic pledges on this floor, and if it be not unusual to expect Democratic compliance with those pledges, then the proposition advanced by the Senator from Arkansas is not without force as a party proposition, for it seems to me that if there is any one thing upon which the Democratic Party has been absolutely consistent, uniformly so, since the acquisition of the Philippines, it has been in regard to our position with reference to the acquisition and retention of those islands.

I wish to invite the attention of my colleagues to several platform utterances on that question. First, in 1900, at the first national convention we had after the acquisition of those islands, we used this language:

THE PHILIPPINES.

We condemn and denounce the Philippine policy of the present administration. It has involved the Republic in unnecessary war, sacrificed the lives of many of our noblest sons, and placed the United States, previously known and applauded throughout the world as the champion of freedom, in the false and un-American position of crushing with military force the efforts of our former allies to achieve liberty and self-government. The Filipinos can not be citizens without endangering our civilization; they can not be subjects without imperiling our form of government; and as we are not willing to surrender our civilization nor to convert the Republic into an empire we favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to give the Filipinos, first, a stable form of government; second, independence; and, third, protection from outside interference, such as has been given for nearly a century to the Republics of Central and South America.

The greedy commercialism which dictated the Philippine policy of the Republican administration attempts to justify it with the plea that it will pay; but even this sordid and unworthy plea fails when brought to the test of facts. The war of criminal aggression against the Filipinos, entailing an annual expense of many millions, has already cost more than any possible profit that could accrue from the entire Philippine trade for years to come. Furthermore, when trade is extended at the expense of liberty, the price is always too high.

Again, in 1904, the Democratic Party in national convention, used this language:

FILIPINOS AND CUBANS.

We insist that we ought to do for the Filipinos what we have done already for the Cubans, and it is our duty to make that promise now and upon suitable guaranties of protection to citizens of our own and other countries resident there at the time of our withdrawal, set the Filipino people upon their feet, free and independent to work out their own destiny.

The endeavor of the Secretary of War, by pledging the Government's indorsement for "promoters" in the Philippine Islands, to make the United States a partner in speculative legislation of the archipelago, which was only temporarily held up by the opposition of the Democratic Senators in the last session, will, if successful, lead to entanglements from which it will be difficult to escape.

Again, in 1908 our party used this language:

THE PHILIPPINES.

We condemn the experiment in imperialism as an inexcusable blunder which has involved us in enormous expenses, brought us weakness instead of strength, and laid our Nation open to the charge of abandoning a fundamental doctrine of self-government. We favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands as soon as a stable government can be established, such independence to be guaranteed by us as we guarantee the independence of Cuba, until the neutralization of the islands can be secured by treaty with other powers. In recognizing the independence of the Philippines our Government should retain such land as may be necessary for coaling stations and naval bases.

In the platform of 1912, on which the last campaign was fought, we find this pledge:

THE PHILIPPINES.

We reaffirm the position thrice announced by the Democracy in national convention assembled against a policy of imperialism and colonial exploitation in the Philippines or elsewhere. We condemn the experiment in imperialism as an inexcusable blunder, which has involved us in enormous expenses, brought us weakness instead of strength, and laid our Nation open to the charge of abandonment of the fundamental doctrine of self-government. We favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands as soon as a stable government can be established, such independence to be guaranteed by us until the neutralization of the islands can be secured by treaty with other powers.

In recognizing the independence of the Philippines our Government should retain such land as may be necessary for coaling stations and naval bases.

Mr. President, it is evident from these declarations of our party in national convention assembled that Senators on this side of the aisle at least are pledged, so far as they can be pledged, by four successive platforms in the party to grant to the Philippine Islands independence as soon as a stable form of government can be established in those islands, and to guarantee that independence until a treaty of neutrality can be negotiated with the other nations of the earth.

There may be raised by Senators on this side the question of fact as to whether or not a stable government can be established in the Philippine Islands now, or if not now within what length of time such a government may be established. I take it, Mr. President and Senators, that the Democratic national convention, when they used the expression "a stable form of government," did not mean a form of government such as could be and would be maintained among the English-speaking and Anglo-Saxon peoples, because the probability is that the people of the Philippine Islands might not attain that standard in many, many years, not even in hundreds of years. So the expression, giving it a fair construction, must have meant as soon as those people were capable of maintaining a stable form of government according to their own standards, according to their own environment, according to their own location, and among nations in that part of the world.

If that be true, and I do not think any Senator on either side will take issue with the reasonableness of that statement, either the legislation so ably championed by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska rests on a false basis and is unworthy of support, or those people are almost if not quite at the point when they are capable of self-government according to the standards of their own people and their own kind of people.

The Senator from Nebraska, by the bill that he reports, would give to those people a large measure of self-government. If the bill that he champions shall become the law, and I want to say I favor it whether this amendment is agreed to or not, those people will be intrusted with a still larger measure of self-government than they have been allowed even since the beginning of this administration.

My only objection to the legislation is that it does not go far enough, because if those people are entitled to and are worthy of the amount of self-government the Senator proposes to give them in this legislation, then undoubtedly a stable form of government within the meaning of our Democratic platforms at least can be speedily established there.

So the Senator from Arkansas by his amendment proposes that within two years after all of the machinery which the pending legislation seeks to set up and establish can be put in operation, within two years from that time, when the people of the Philippine Islands will be practically intrusted with all the essentials of self-government, we shall say that now we will carry out the pledges of our party, carry out our duty to the Philippine people, and allow them to depart in peace and to set up their own government among the nations of the world.

I do not know, Mr. President, to what extent the Senator from Nebraska and other Senators who oppose this amendment are prepared to take issue on the question of fact as to whether or not those people are now capable or will be capable within two years of maintaining a stable form of government. We have heard eloquent Senators on this floor, members of this committee, describe in terms of general accuracy and with thorough detail the amount and the general diffusion of education that there is among those people. We have heard the fact adverted to more than once, and with increasing eloquence every time, by the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] that those people are maintaining a local legislative assembly in which every single member is a college graduate. Of course that might be of somewhat doubtful value, but the fact has been asserted, and I suppose it must be true.

We hear that there are 500,000 children in the schools of those islands. I venture the statement—and I do not know whether any Senator here is prepared to take issue with it or not; I doubt it—from what I have heard on this floor and from what I have read in the hearings it is doubtful whether there are many peoples in Central or South America, and certainly there are few in Asia or Africa, that have more capacity for setting up, establishing, and maintaining a stable form of government, such as is adapted to them and their needs, than have the people of the Philippine Islands. If so, no Democratic Senator who sits on this side of the Chamber and who believes in the declarations of his party, who believes that these pledges were made for some other purpose than to get into office on, who believes that campaign pledges in a platform ought to be something more than mere rhetoric, ought to hesitate to take whatever steps are necessary to give to those islands within a reasonable time that independence which we have insisted ought to be given to them ever since they were acquired by this country.

Mr. President, I am going to take up this question briefly—because I am not proposing to make an extensive argument on it—from another standpoint, a standpoint that appeals, or ought to appeal, to every Senator without regard to his party alliance, and that is from the standpoint of common sense. Does the possession of those islands profit us? Does it strengthen our position nationally or internationally? Does it pay either commercially or from any other standpoint? Senators, there is no dispute over the fact that since we have had those islands they have cost the American people many millions of dollars. It was estimated on this floor yesterday by a distinguished Senator of long and honorable service here, that the increase in military and naval expenditures in our establishment, because of our possession of these islands, had averaged $25,000,000 a year for the 18 years during which we have held possession of them. That same Senator estimated that, leaving out the expenses of the great Filipino insurrection, the possession of those islands during that period of time had cost the United States of America not less than $600,000,000.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. LIPPITT. I do not care to interrupt the Senator unless he is willing that I shall do so.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. LIPPITT. In regard to the statement of Senators that these islands have cost us, and are costing us, $25,000,000 a year, I am aware that that statement has been made on this floor two or three times. During the hearings before the committee Gen. McIntyre, the chief of the Insular Bureau, War Department, was asked to compile for the committee a statement of the actual cost to the United States of the Philippines over and above what it would cost the United States without them. He put a very elaborate statement into the record. That statement shows that the Philippine Islands have cost us—I think it is for the years since 1903 to and including the year 1914—$119,000,000, or at the rate of $9,475,000 a year.

If the Senator from Georgia will take that statement and examine the figures for the year 1914, instead of taking the average of the whole number of years as the annual expense, he will find that those islands are now costing the United States $7,692,000 annually; or, in other words, the cost to the United States of the Philippine Islands is practically to-day $7,700,000 annually.

Mr. HARDWICK. Does the Senator from Rhode Island himself really believe that those figures are accurate?

Mr. LIPPITT. I do. I have no reason to doubt them.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator is doubtless familiar with an earlier report that this same gentleman, Gen. McIntyre, rendered to President Taft, in which he stated that it was absolutely impossible to estimate such expenditures by the year——

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, that may have been so. I am not familiar with the report to which the Senator refers.

Mr. HARDWICK. That it was a matter of speculation and guesswork to such a large extent, and that he could not estimate these expenditures.

Mr. LIPPITT. May I ask where the Senator from Georgia gets his figures of $25,000,000 as the annual cost of the Philippines? The only figures which we have, of which I know, from any authoritative source are these figures. They were put in as the result of a very careful compilation, I presume, though it may be in some cases they are estimates.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator from Rhode Island will pardon me just a moment, I will say that I was quoting from the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], who yesterday made a statement in reference to this matter on the floor. Of course, the Senator knew when he made it, and understood at the time, that it was a mere statement of his opinion after considerable investigation of the subject; and while, of course, Gen. McIntyre also has a right to his opinion, it is well known how these officers of the Insular Bureau feel toward the retention of the Philippines. It is well known that in their reports they have insisted under other administrations that it was practically impossible to estimate how much of the Army and Navy expenditures of the United States could be really fairly charged to the Philippine Islands.

Mr. LIPPITT. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that Gen. McIntyre has given these figures in great detail.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have read them.

Mr. LIPPITT. The statement that the Senator from Nevada made is a statement that has been heretofore made on the floor of the Senate two or three times.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, sir; it has been repeatedly made.

Mr. LIPPITT. They are estimates made by different Senators. I myself do not know where those figures come from.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

Mr. LIPPITT. I do not want to take the time of the Senator from Georgia if he objects.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is all right. It does not make any difference.

Mr. LIPPITT. On the other side of the proposition we have the fact that the trade of the United States with the Philippine Islands has gone ahead in a very remarkable manner. In 1900 the exports from the United States to the Philippine Islands were $3,500,000, in 1909 they were $10,000,000, and in 1914 they had gone to $22,000,000. To-day practically the exports from this country to the Philippine Islands amount to $25,000,000.

Mr. HARDWICK. And in my judgment it is costing us more than the total amount of our export trade with those islands to keep them.

Mr. LIPPITT. If the Senator from Georgia has any figures which justify his estimate, I would like to hear them.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will be glad to give the Senator from Rhode Island the reasons for my statement.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. I was just going to suggest that I thought the controversy, as is nearly always the case in a controversy, is because two propositions are involved. Gen. McIntyre assumes in his statement to give what the records say is the actual cost of maintaining our Army and transport fleet with reference to the Philippine Islands, while on the other hand, as I understood the Senator from Georgia (Mr. HARDWICK), when he first touched on this subject, he was discussing the probable additional cost to the United States flowing out of the fact that every time we talk of the Army or Navy we have in mind the necessity of an enlarged proposition because of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. HARDWICK. And the figures which Gen. McIntyre furnished us, if the Senator will pardon me for just a moment, are probably for the maintenance, the actual expenses of the forces that are stationed in the Philippines, and take no account whatever of the many battleships that have probably been constructed, properly and necessarily, because of our occupancy of the Philippines, and because of our duties and obligations and dangers there, and of the increase in naval armament for the same reasons.

Mr. LIPPITT. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia if the head of his party, who now occupies executive offices in the White House, is not urging upon his supporters in this body to very largely increase both the size of the Navy that we have and the size of the Army that we have, and whether that is based upon the necessity of holding the Philippine Islands? As a matter of fact, the Senator knows that there is an enormous movement all over this country for the purpose of very largely increasing both the Army and the Navy utterly independent of whether or not we hold the Philippines. Under those circumstances, it seems to me, it is scarcely fair to try to charge up against those islands a few additional battleships and a few soldiers when we have not enough even including those. However, that is a matter of opinion, I will admit, which Senators can figure in ways to suit themselves, only I should like to have it on its proper basis.

Now, if the Senator will allow me just to put in the other side of the question and to call it to his attention, I shall not further interrupt him.

Mr. HARDWICK. That does not make any difference. I am glad to yield to the Senator at any time.

Mr. LIPPITT. I wanted to say that in regard to our exports to the Philippine Islands, which are now estimated at about $25,000,000 annually, it has been stated in the Senate that the outside possible benefit to this country of those exports was perhaps 10 per cent, that being the amount that capital might make in the form of dividends or profits out of that business.

Mr. President, I do not myself know exactly a scientific method of figuring the value to this country of $25,000,000 of exports, but I believe that it will be manifest to anybody who will think the proposition over for a minute that the profit is very much larger than any profit that capital may receive from the amount of business that is done in that way. Of course labor is always very largely employed in the production of those articles of export, and the value to this country of employing its labor is quite as much as the value of employing its capital. Further than that, the actual capital that is invested in a manufactory, for instance, for making boots and shoes, assuming that it may be a million dollars, for the purpose of exporting its product to the Philippine Islands is expended in giving employment in a very large way to the lumber industry, to the iron industry, and to a very large number of other industries in the United States, the products of which are necessary to build such a factory. So I say that I think it is a very difficult matter to accurately estimate the value of an export business of $25,000,000. I am very sure that it is very largely in excess of any possible sum that could be considered as a profit of the capital immediately engaged in producing the articles that are exported. I merely wanted to suggest the two sides of this proposition to the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question before he takes his seat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I desire to ask the Senator from Rhode Island if he thinks the question of profits to be derived by private enterprise should have any material weight in determining the moral and legal questions involved in this controversy? Has the United States any right to hold those people, if it should be shown that they are able to maintain a government of their own, because it happens to be profitable to a few manufacturers? Does the Senator think that that ought to cut any figure at all?

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I have not at any time based my position in regard to this matter on the question of the value of the business that the United States might derive from those islands; but I do think that it is a matter that is entitled to reasonable consideration. The entire policy of the United States has been that they were going to hold and govern those islands for the benefit of the Filipino people. With that policy distinctly stated it would be manifestly improper for the United States to have their conduct controlled or largely influenced by the question of profit to themselves; but when Senators on the other side bring up the question of the cost of maintenance of those islands to this country it is manifestly fair that both sides of the ledger should be stated, and it was for that purpose, with that thought in my mind, which I think is distinctly proper, that I made the suggestion.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator from Rhode Island that last June ex-President Taft, in the Saturday Evening Post, stated that when he was Secretary of War the maintenance of 60,000 troops cost the Government $72,000,000; in other words, about $1,200 for each soldier. There never have been in the Philippine Islands less than 12,000 American troops, and there were between the dates mentioned by the Senator as high as 40,000 American troops in the islands. I can not see how you can arrive at any other conclusion than that the estimate which has been made by the Committee on Insular Affairs of the House, namely, $26,000,000, is about the correct amount.

Now, with relation to the other matter—because the Senator evidently referred to my speech when he said that I had assumed that 10 per cent was what the exporter from the United States made in his commerce with the Philippines—I want to say that 10 per cent profit on $24,000,000 of exports which we send to the Philippines amounts only to $2,400,000. The Senator himself stated that he did not think it was that high. If it is less, then the profit which would come to the exporters of this country will be correspondingly less. As I asked in my previous remarks, is it possible that the United States will continue to spend this large amount of money—whether it is $26,000,000 or even $7,000,000—when the profit which comes to the exporters in the United States would be only $2,400,000 a year? Shall we continue this policy when in other ways we are spending four, five, six, seven, or eight times that amount to maintain an establishment there with a profit to our people of one-seventh or one-sixth or one-fifth of the amount we expend?

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado if he thinks the total value to this country of an export business of $25,000,000 is only two and a half million dollars? Does he not himself acknowledge that the benefit of having labor employed is quite as large to the country as in having its capital employed?

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is an element; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. LIPPITT. Then, how much would the Senator add to the two and a half million dollars as a benefit to the labor of this country? The amount paid to labor is generally two, three, four, or five times in the cost of manufacture greater than the amount paid in dividends. It would be reasonable to say that of that $25,000,000 not less than 40 per cent of it is directly paid to labor actually engaged in the production of the articles which are being exported. Will the Senator not add that to the benefits derived on account of that export business by the United States?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I would not add it to that extent; but even if it were 40 per cent—take the Senator's own figures—40 per cent of $24,000,000 is only $10,000,000, and we are spending $26,000,000 a year in order to maintain an establishment there, where by the remotest possibility, according to the figures given by the Senator himself, the benefit could only amount to $10,000,000.

Mr. LIPPITT. Now we have got the Senator up to admitting that there are $10,000,000 of benefit to labor.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I do not admit it. I stated that I did not admit it to the extent that the Senator said. I said that even if what the Senator claimed be true——

Mr. LIPPITT. What will the Senator admit? How much will he admit? Is it 30 per cent?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I will not say that.

Mr. LIPPITT. Is it 20 per cent?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Evidently we would not undertake to manufacture things at a loss, and there are some incidental advantages; but I have never heard a Senator attempt to figure the profit to the country. What are the profits to the Government? Not a cent goes to the Government.

Mr. LIPPITT. Oh, well, Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. These profits all go to some one else.

Mr. LIPPITT. Let us discuss one phase of the question at a time.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia further yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. If Senators think they have about exhausted that branch of the controversy, I believe I will proceed.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I think the theory which I sought to establish, the idea which I wanted to put into the mind of the Senator, has been made clear.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think it has found lodgement, and I will be glad to answer both of the Senators' points. In the first place, I think it is very apparent from this that what the Philippine Islands are actually costing us is by no means reflected in the report to which the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island refers. Evidently Gen. McIntyre—and I have read his report casually, not with a great deal of care, I will admit—was figuring only on the cost of the troops within the Philippine Islands, and he did not figure the cost of the many extra battleships we may have provided, of the thousands more of soldiers we may have added to our Army, nor did he consider how many more it may be necessary in the future to add both to the Army and the Navy in the way of battleships and of soldiers if we are to keep those islands.

The distinguished Senator from Rhode Island suggests that the present distinguished Chief Executive is now urging upon members of his own party and upon the members of both parties and upon the country—because it is a nonpartisan matter—the necessity, in view of present conditions, for some larger armament. The President of the United States, as I understand it—although I do not assume to speak for him on this floor or elsewhere—is not advocating and will never advocate anything like a military system for the sake of militarism. He is advocating some increase in our Navy and some increase in our Army because present disturbed world-wide conditions seem to indicate that there may be a necessity some day for defensive purposes for us to have a larger Army and a larger Navy than we now have; but I do not think that the Senator from Rhode Island or any other Senator can dispute the proposition that, however much we may add to the Army and to the Navy of the United States, we will always have to add some more to both if we are to keep the Philippine Islands permanently.

There are many thoughtful people in this country, Mr. President, who believe that the possession of the Philippine Islands is not only a source of great national weakness to this country, but is a source of ever-present and ever-increasing danger, and that if foreign complications are ever to come to this country from the East they will come because of our possession of the Philippine Islands or because of some question connected therewith, and that if such complications are to arise it will be almost, if not quite, impossible to defend the Philippine Islands successfully against any considerable oriental power. As long as we do stay there, or try to stay there, we are not to be run off by any people on the face of the earth—white, black, or yellow—but we must hold those islands, or, if we lose them, we will be in honor bound forced to retake them if it is possibly in our power to do so. So that the continued permanent possession of these islands, in my judgment, not only increases the danger that this country is in of trouble with foreign powers, but it infinitely and almost indescribably weakens our strong position of isolation from other powers and our strong defensive position against possible aggression from any quarter.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. The fact being that those islands are so far from our shores that we can not easily protect them, is it not also true, in addition to what the Senator has urged, that they are a menace to us, that our sovereignty over them is a menace to them, subjecting them to attacks, if we are in danger of war ourselves, that they would not be subjected to if they were an independent sovereignty of their own?

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly the Senator's observation is correct; and to that extent it creates a situation that is unfair to those people. If we become involved in war with powers that are able to strike us at our weakest point, namely, the Philippine Islands, the Filipino people themselves will be the first helpless victims of this yoke that we insist upon keeping around their necks.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do.

Mr. WARREN. I listened with interest to the reading of several platform declarations of the party of which the Senator is a distinguished member. I notice that in those declarations the United States was to guarantee the Philippine Islands a stable government and complete independence, while in the amendment now pending the United States is authorized only—to give guaranty on behalf of the United States alone—

And that only for five years.

In other words, if other nations do not enter into this proposed treaty, to which we have not invited their attention, as I understand, and concerning which we have no promise that they will accede to our desire, then we alone will guarantee the sovereignty of the islands.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; but if the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. WARREN. Just a moment; let me finish the question.

Mr. HARDWICK. Very well.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator believe that we shall have to have either troops or battleships to make that guaranty good, or does he think that we could then do away with the desire of the country and of his party for battleships and troops, for a stronger Navy and a stronger and more efficient Army? How would he enforce this guaranty?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will answer the Senator very frankly. If the Senator would read all the amendment, he would find that the guaranty is only for a very limited period of time—for a period of five years.

Mr. WARREN. That is enough time in which to destroy that country or impoverish this—perhaps both—in order to make that guaranty good.

Mr. HARDWICK. We have the same hazard now, and we should be subject to it in perpetuo, according to the Senator's view, if he takes the other view, whereas under the amendment we would only be subject to it for five years.

Mr. WARREN. I have no such view. The bill proposes, and I hear no argument against it, that there shall be established an independent government in the Philippines; but the proposition now is that two years from now they shall have their complete independence. I believe the time will arrive when such a proposal as this might be advisable, but I think that now is not the time to decide it.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator is in error in respect to that statement. The bill does not so provide. The amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas, which I am advocating, does so provide. The bill itself contains no provision for Philippine independence at any time.

Mr. WARREN. It does provide for independence in two years.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. Perhaps I made a misstatement. I understand the matter perfectly; I have read both the bill and the amendment. I say that the bill itself aims at the complete independence for the islands in time, without naming a particular time, while the amendment proposes to name the time, and a very short one at that. Without having consulted with other nations, we proceed to guarantee for five years the government and put ourselves in the same position in which we are now, and yet the Senator would like to dispose of the matter of having further battleships and a larger Army because we will have relinquished our responsibility toward them. This is I think hardly consistent.

Mr. HARDWICK. I still, with all deference to the Senator's judgment, do not see how the Senator can believe that we will not be gaining if we have to do that for only five years, instead of keeping it up indefinitely, as we will have to do permanently, if we do not turn them loose at all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator from Georgia favor limiting our guaranty to five years?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Would that not be violating the platform which he has read?

Mr. HARDWICK. No, sir.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will he read it, please?

Mr. HARDWICK. It is as follows:

We favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands as soon as a stable government can be established, such independence to be guaranteed by us until the neutralization of the islands can be secured by treaty with other powers.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator now is advocating limiting our guaranty to five years. If at the end of five years we have not secured a treaty, then we are to abandon the Philippines to their fate, violating the Democratic platform.

Mr. HARDWICK. Does the Senator from Nebraska contend that the Democratic platform has ever proposed that we were to set the islands free and to continue to guarantee to the end of time and through all eternity their independence against any external force? Is that how he construes the Democratic platform?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not now construing the Democratic platform.

Mr. HARDWICK. I thought the Senator was.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the bill construes the Democratic platform. The Senator is contending here for a literal and technical construction of that platform. That platform provides that we shall guarantee the independence of the islands until we can have an agreement with the other nations of the world to neutralize the islands, yet he stands here advocating limiting that guaranty to five years. Is he living up to the letter of the Democratic platform in so doing?

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, the Senator can judge of that as well as I can. My own judgment is that we will be able to conclude the treaties that are necessary within a far less period of time than five years; I do not think we will need even 12 months to do that; but in any event, according to the way I construe the Democratic platforms—and there is more than one platform utterance on this question—and I have said that for a limited time after we established their independence we would guarantee it——

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to a suggestion there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The purpose of that pledge, as I understand, was that the islands should be protected by the United States Government until they were able to form and establish their own government. It seems to me a very strained construction that the Senator from Nebraska would put upon it, that this Government is called upon, under the terms of that platform promise, to maintain control over the islands, as the Senator from Georgia said a moment ago, throughout eternity. The promise was only to protect them during the formative stage of their national existence until they were able as a nation to stand alone.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I do not think there can be a shadow of a doubt on that question. Otherwise, language means nothing. Does the Senator from Nebraska or any other Senator contend that the meaning of this was that we should guarantee the independence of these people through all time and under all circumstances?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As the Senator asks me a question, I will give him an answer.

Mr. HARDWICK. All right; I wanted an answer.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is not what the platform says; but the platform does say in plain English, if the Senator proposes to live up to the letter of it, that we shall guarantee their independence until we are able to neutralize them by treaty with other nations. That is what it says.

Mr. HARDWICK. Suppose we can not secure such a treaty; would the Senator contend——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am talking about living up to the technical letter of the platform, for which the Senator is contending.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Sentor from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I am simply an "onlooker in Venice" so far as the Democratic platform is concerned; but is the Senator referring to the platform of 1912 or the platform of 1908?

Mr. HARDWICK. I read from the platform of 1912.

Mr. BORAH. The platform of 1904 and 1908 are even more specific, and were interpreted by the leader of Democracy in this country, Mr. Bryan, in such a way that there can be no mistake as to what he supposed the meaning to be.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; the language is a little different; but I have put them all in the RECORD and the Senator from Nebraska can weigh them all. My judgment is that none of those platforms meant to pledge us to an eternal guarantee of the independence of the islands, but, simply as a matter of reason and common sense, that when we undertook to set up a government for them, a free and independent government that we thought they could maintain, we should, for a reasonable time, while they were getting it started, protect them from outside interference, and not through all the centuries that were to come after they did get on their feet.

Mr. President, there is very little more that I want to say about this amendment. It not only expresses my idea of what the Democratic policy and the Democratic pledge has been through four successive campaigns, but it expresses my idea of what is right and proper for this country from the commonsense, practical standpoint. These islands have cost us not less than $25,000,000 a year—the figures employed and used on this floor yesterday by the distinguished Senator from Nevada—and those figures are $1,000,000 a year less than the figures used by the House committee after a careful and exhaustive investigation of this subject. That great cost has been incurred for a trade that has not increased as rapidly as our foreign trade has increased in the same period of time with many a country over which our flag does not fly. So I contend that there is no sense in it from the standpoint of the commercial interests of this country. As a business proposition it has not paid, and, as far as we can judge, it never will pay. It by no means follows that if we do establish a stable and independent government in the Philippine Islands we will not therefore be able to trade with them and to send our exports to them just as we do now. I think the very contrary is true. I can see no reasonable ground for supposing that because we do give them a free and independent government they will immediately quit trading with our merchants and our manufacturers.

Not only that, Mr. President, but it does not seem to me that any Senator on this side of the Chamber, or any considerable number of people in this country, can seriously doubt the proposition that the possession and retention and the necessity for defense of these far-flung islands of the sea, 7,000 miles and more away from our Pacific coast, is a source of constant, of irritating, and of almost incalculable weakness in our system of national defense against any possible danger; that it is a source of constant and growing irritation, so far as our relations or possible relations with foreign powers are concerned. Besides that, it seems to me——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator kindly specify some of the causes of irritation which have grown out of the possession of the Philippine Islands?

Mr. HARDWICK. I could undertake to do that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to hear the Senator specify them.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will reply to the Senator in the form of an interrogatory. Does he think that the possession of those islands adds to our chances for continuing peaceable relations, friendly relations, with the Empire of Japan?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will answer that question, but of course the Senator is not answering mine.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am answering the Senator's question by asking him one of my own.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am very confident, from my investigations, that our possession of the Philippine Islands is entirely satisfactory to Japan; and when I come to speak I shall give my reasons for it.

Mr. HARDWICK. I shall be glad to hear them.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But the Senator stated that they have been a cause of constant irritation in our foreign relations, and I now ask him to specify.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will specify. I have asked the Senator a question which indicated what my own mind is on that question. I have always understood in a general way, I admit without special investigation of the question—if the Senator has investigated it, of course he has the advantage of me in that particular—and it is common belief in this country, in many parts of it, at least, and among many people, that the possession of these islands does not help us either to get or to keep on more friendly terms with Japan.

If the Senator can convince us that we are mistaken about that, so far as that source of irritation is concerned I shall undoubtedly be in error, and shall be glad to be corrected by him. I do not believe, however, and I do not think the Senator believes, or that any Senator believes, that the possession of land in Asiatic waters, in another continent, by a power which insists on the inviolability of American soil, and which insists that no other power on earth shall lay its hand upon any country in this hemisphere, is an act that will be very readily, very easily, very pleasantly received by other powers who yield to our pretentions and contentions with respect to American countries. That is what I mean by a constant source of irritation.

Another thing: How can a Government that maintains the Monroe doctrine, that says to all the powers of this earth: "You shall not lay the weight of your little finger on one of the American countries; this hemisphere is dedicated to liberty and to American liberty and to independence and to American independence," go to Asia and take a country and hold it in subjection, possibly and probably against the will of its people, and violate there the very policy she insists upon other nations not violating here in this hemisphere?

That is another answer to the Senator who wants to know why I think our possession of the Philippines is a source of irritation in our foreign relations.

One more observation, and I will leave the discussion of this amendment to other Senators.

I do not think, no matter how old-fashioned others may regard it, that the principles for which our forefathers fought are unimportant now. I do not think that the right of a people to govern themselves according to their own judgment, according to their own will, according to their own prejudices, if you please, ought to be taken away from them; nor do I think an alien people should be held in subjection against their will by the people of another land. It is contrary to the very genius of American liberty. In the eloquent language of the Democratic platform, we can not occupy such a position without doing violence to the very spirit of American liberty.

I do not want to do anything rash. I do not want to rush pell-mell into foreign entanglements. I would not for a moment imperil American interests in those islands by a precipitate withdrawal. I would not for a moment leave those islands helpless and alone, without reasonable provision for the establishment of a stable form of government, such as they can and probably will maintain.

The amendment offered by my friend the distinguished Senator from Arkansas makes full and ample provision for all that. It gives us a period of two years within which to work out this thing. Within that period every reform suggested by the bill of the distinguished Senator from Nebraska can be carried out, and the government that he suggests in this bill can be set up and established. Within that period the President can secure every American right, property and otherwise, by Executive action, authorized and required under the provisions of this amendment. Within that time ample opportunity will be given for negotiations with the other powers in order that we may make an effort, at least, to secure the neutralization of the islands by the different Governments most interested in the question; and if the distinguished Senator from Nebraska is right, and the great island Empire of the East does not covet the possession of these islands, probably we shall not have the slightest difficulty in negotiating such a treaty.

So, Mr. President, from every standpoint—from the standpoint of Democracy, from the standpoint of Americanism, from the standpoint of the real business interests of this country, from the standpoint of its defense in time of war if danger should ever threaten it, from the standpoint of national strength, from the standpoint of national interest—I believe that we ought to move forward in this matter in a somewhat more rapid manner than is proposed by the bill of my good friend from Nebraska, Mr. HITCHCOCK. Although I think his bill is good, as far as it goes, I favor the amendment because I think the amendment is much better and that it is not either rash, ill-considered, or hastily thought out. I hope the Senate may adopt it.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, in considering the bill now before the Senate, and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], we are dealing with the destinies, the liberty, the independence, and the future happiness and prosperity of a dependent people, made dependent upon us against their will, and by force of arms.

I wish we might for just a little while forget all about politics, forget all about commercial advantages to our own country in dollars and cents, and place this investigation upon higher grounds. I hope the rights of the Filipino people, if they have any rights, are not going to depend upon a Democratic construction of a Democratic platform. We have these people now under complete subjection. We can do with them what we will. We can turn over to them their government without conditions or qualifications, and leave them to bear the burdens of establishing a government for themselves and maintaining it if they can.

If this were a question of the interests of the people of the United States alone, I should say that the original entry into the Philippines was a colossal mistake, and I should hope we might get out of that country just as soon as possible. But we owe a duty to the Filipino people. We have, without their consent, made ourselves the guardians of that whole nation.

I have been very much concerned myself, Mr. President, to know what is the duty of this Government under the circumstances. Since we entered the islands we have constantly held out to the Filipino people the hope that at some time we would restore to them their own country, and grant them absolute independence and self-government. The question that appeals to me more than anything else is whether we can do that now with safety to the Filipino people.

It has been said here by Senators who have investigated the situation over there much more carefully than I have, Senators who have visited the islands and studied the situation and the people of the islands, that they are now capable of self-government and could take care of their own affairs. If that be so, Mr. President, then I insist that it is the duty of the Government of the United States and of Congress to see that their government is restored to them without any unnecessary delay.

On the other hand, it is claimed by other Senators, who may be equally well informed, that these people are not fit for self-government, and that if we should turn over their government to them to-day or to-morrow, they would become the prey of other nations. If that be so, then it is just as much the duty of the United States to maintain its guardianship over the people of the islands and protect them until they are fit for self-government.

Looking at it from the point of view of the Filipino people, I think it was a great blessing to them that the United States, even by force, took possession of their country and has cared for them in the way it has down to the present time. We have rendered them a great service. We have established a government for them. We have taught them the way of governmental affairs. We have educated their children. We have improved their islands in every possible material way.

Mr. President, I wish this Government might render the same great service to the Mexican people. There are a hundred times greater reason why this Nation should intervene in Mexico and care for its people and establish for them a government than there was for intervening either in Cuba or in the Philippines. We went into the Philippine Islands not for the purpose of conquest or advantage to the United States, I hope. We should go into Mexico with the same object and purpose—not with the idea of conquest, not for the purpose of visiting vengeance upon the people of Mexico for the wrongs they have committed against our own people, but for the purpose of doing for that unfortunate and stricken people just what we have done for the Philippines, and, beyond that, to protect in Mexico the rights, the liberties, and the privileges of our own people residing there.

I am going to support this bill, not because I think it is going to constitute any great advance toward the restoration of independence to the people of the Philippines—it goes a very short way in that direction—but because I think it is a step in the right direction, and because it is another declaration on the part of the American people that they do at some time intend to restore to these people independence and self-government. But, sir, I should much rather see a definite time fixed when we shall return this government to the people of the Philippine Islands, whether it be 1 year or 2 years, 5 years or 10 years, so that they may understand definitely what the purpose of this Government is.

For that reason, although there is one clause in the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas that I do not like, I shall first support that amendment. I believe it is right in fixing a time when the Government of the United States shall surrender the Philippine Islands to their people. I think the clause in the amendment which provides for treaties between this Government and other nations, and which guarantees on the part of the Government of the United States the protection of the islands against other nations after we shall have turned them over to the people of the islands, is a very dangerous provision. I should be very sorry to see any treaties made with other nations that would involve us in any obligation, in case of war, to protect the Philippine Islands after we had surrendered them to the people of the islands.

We have had reason to know within the past months that a treaty between nations amounts to practically nothing in time of war. If we could make a treaty of that kind with the nations that might be interested in the Philippines, if war should come those treaties would be entirely disregarded, and if we should attempt to enforce them it would mean war.

I have been accused of being belligerent respecting our relations with Mexico. I hope I am not. My attitude toward the people of Mexico is friendly and not hostile. I would intervene only for their good and the protection of our own citizens. I am very much opposed to laying the foundation for controversy with other nations by such a provision as is contained in the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas. I am in complete sympathy with the object of the amendment to fix a time when the government of the Philippine Islands shall be turned over to their people. I should rather see the clause that I have mentioned eliminated from the amendment. Notwithstanding that and my objections to it, I feel disposed to support the amendment in the first instance, and to support the bill finally, for the reason that I have stated—not because I think it is granting independence now or will amount to the granting of independence in the near future to the Filipino people. It must be a mere semblance of independence in those islands so long as we maintain troops there, and so long as we reserve to the President of the United States the power to veto any legislation that may be enacted, whether the power of legislation is granted wholly to the Filipino people or in part to them and in part to American citizens. That is not independence. It is not self-government.

The immediate effect of the bill is going to be of but little consequence to the Filipino people, in my judgment. The preamble promises nothing. Whenever the question of granting independence and self-government to the Filipino people shall be presented hereafter, whether it be 5 years or 10 years or 50 years hence, precisely the same question will be presented that is confronting us now, namely, whether, in the judgment of the American people, the Filipinos have attained such a degree of intelligence and ability that they can take care of their own government.

So it does not amount to very much. There will be Members of this body when that question arises again who will assume precisely the same attitude toward it that Senators do to-day—that the people of the islands are not fit and qualified for self-government. Some will be found to say, I have no doubt, that they never can reach that stage of intelligence and ability where it is safe to turn over to them the government of their own islands.

I know that there are Members of this body who have swept aside all of these questions, and have considered the question solely from the standpoint of the interest of our own Nation, insisting that we need these islands for our own uses and purposes; that we are building up a great commercial city there that will be of benefit to us in the future; that our trade with the Philippine Islands is increasing from year to year; that we can make profit to our people by maintaining the control of the islands. I am not going to discuss that phase of the question. I have no sympathy with it. I think the United States Government and its people owe it to the Filipinos, under the promises and declarations we have made time after time, to surrender their islands when they are capable of taking charge of them and establishing and maintaining a government; and I am not disposed to go beyond that. I am satisfied that they have now reached the stage where it is incumbent upon us to fix a time when we shall turn over to them the government of their islands, giving us time enough to arrange matters in such a way as to turn over the government to them without complications, leaving them a free hand to control their own affairs.

It is for these reasons, Mr. President, which I desired to explain briefly, that I am going to support this measure.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, there are a few observations I desire to submit respecting this bill looking to the relief of the Philippine Islands, and to tender some views I have concerning the amendment tendered by the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

Mr. President, it is reported that Lord Thurlow delighted to defeat both litigants in a lawsuit, and enjoyed the humor of having confused all the lawyers on each side of the cause. I find myself opposed to many provisions in the bill, and much that is in the amendment tendered by the Senator from Arkansas. Some of both heartily meets my approval, much of both my dissent.

But, Mr. President, I approach the consideration of this measure from a little different standpoint than that suggested by any of the Senators whom I have heard. There is in this country the great cry and claimed necessity for preparedness. There is a belief in certain quarters of this Republic that we are surrounded with conditions that at any time may mean conflict for the United States. It is urged that we should prepare for this by adding to our Army and Navy such reenforcements as will make that preparation appropriate and fitting.

But the very first question is, What is preparedness? Before we can decide it we have to decide what country we are to prepare for. Before this Nation can enter upon the era of preparedness of the United States there must first be determined what are the limits of your Nation, what country have you to prepare for, what particular part of your country is now to be excluded from the expense and obligation of preparation. When that is ascertained, we then know the limit of the country for which we are to provide.

If the Philippine Islands are to remain a part of this Government, then, as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] has aptly pointed out, we must anticipate the relation they bear to the military necessities of the Nation and prepare for them, extending our fortifications 7,000 miles away, with great seas between, increasing our Navy proportionately, adding to our Army reenforcements sufficient and such other burdens as are incident to an island possession bearing the relation which the Philippine Islands do to this Republic.

On the other hand, if these islands are not to continue any longer an integral part of the Republic, and our responsibility is to cease, then that much in the calculation of preparedness has been solved by having that particular feature of the problem eliminated and that particular element of expense deducted.

Consequently, we must observe that the very first question at the threshold of preparedness is for what country, and that the very first question in this discussion is whether we shall retain the Philippine Islands or not, with a view of arriving successfully, at least to ourselves, to a calculation as to what country we shall prepare to defend against.

Mr. President, I have held views concerning the Philippine Islands not in accord with my party. I have been greatly at variance with the party of my honorable opponents. I feel and have felt that we have never viewed to the full extent what the holding of these islands really meant.

Senators, it may interest you, a mere passing matter of political history, that I confess to you I was defeated for reelection to Congress upon this issue. After having been a Member of Congress and an officer in the Spanish-American War, returning to Congress again, I opened warfare upon the policy pursued with respect to acquiring the Philippine Islands. Then, returning to the State where I lived, the State of Washington, lying upon the Pacific coast—its citizens feeling a financial interest in the acquisition of the islands—I opposed the acquisition. I was opposed by my own political party at home, where I then lived, and of course I was opposed by my Republican opponents who were supporting the policy of the then President and distinguished citizen of the Republic, William McKinley.

Mr. President, I see around me many eminent Republicans who to-day are conceding the weakness of ever taking the Philippine Islands, and who admit the general danger this possession now forebodes to this Republic; but I recall how many of these eminent gentlemen held the Democracy up to the derision of the country because they sought to remain by the text of the fathers of the Republic and avoid the acquisition, with all the dangers that it promises.

Mr. President, it is not popular in certain branches of public assemblages to refer to the name of William J. Bryan. Certain Senators and Representatives shrink from further reference to that distinguished leader, lest by making reference to him at all they would be regarded as approving or appear to be in opposition to a certain program of the administration. I delight to advert to vindication time has given him. For myself, I oppose Mr. Bryan's opposition to appropriate preparedness in the anticipation of difficulties which any true American must view if he but puts his head out of the portals of his habitation and contemplates the passing procession of the world. But I must do him the justice to call attention to the fact that he was of the earliest statesmen of the Democracy to announce the evil that would be put upon this Republic by the incorporation of the Philippine Islands in our Government, and though condemned as he was as being "unpatriotic," and, with the Democratic Party, criticized as lacking fealty to the President, or, to use that famous expression of the then Republican political cry, "scuttling the ship," it is interesting to recall that his opposition has been justified by time and the attitude of the Democracy has been vindicated by events. Will you not give this just credit to this leader of our times and admit that had we obeyed Mr. Bryan's warning we would not now have this burden and danger upon us? The position of the Democracy in 1900 was then aided by certain Republicans of New England, that the better theory for this Government was to adhere to the teachings of the fathers who laid the foundations of our Nation and to avoid those violations which have brought ever upon other countries recorded in history the evils from which we now seek to flee.

It is an interesting bit of legend, Mr. President, that when Guizot, the famous French savant, visited England, while James Russell Lowell was our minister to that country, Guizot is alleged to have said to Mr. Lowell: "Mr. Lowell, how long do you think the institutions of America will remain as they are founded?" Mr. Lowell replied: "Just so long, sire, as the sons shall be true to the ideals of the fathers." It was to that ideal the students of government, the disciples of Democracy, sought in 1900 to point to the people of this Republic.

Mr. Gladstone previous to his death, in a very celebrated discussion in public life, turned apart from the subject of his oration to make an apostrophe to America. He called the attention of his own nation to the splendid attitude we held in what he termed to be our self-protection. He alluded to the isolation we bore, the protection of the seas on either side, and added that so long as we adhered to the limits of our own Republic, as had been our course, none of the dangers would beset us which had afflicted his own country.

However, Mr. President, the sons of our fathers some generations removed were not particularly influenced by the advice of Washington, the wisdom of Hamilton, the admonitions of Jefferson, or the traditions of the Republic, but under those peculiar influences that ever attend opportunity, where commercial benefit may follow the fawning upon political administrations, under all political parties, in every change, we were induced to remain in those islands, producing a menace to the Government and an injury to its occupants.

The distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] took issue with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] in his observations that the islands were an irritation to this Republic. My able friend, the Senator from Nebraska, asked the Senator from Georgia in what detail would he say those islands were a menace and irritation, and the Senator from Nebraska gave us the assurance that he had it from those in whom he confided, being officials of Japan, that our holding the islands was not disagreeable to Japan, or, if I may use the expression of my able friend, that they had no opposition to such.

But I invite the attention of the Senate to some history. First, my mind reverts to a splendid little brochure written in England by Sir Henry Wottan. It is upon diplomacy. He opens his little treatise with this observation: "A diplomat is a man selected to lie abroad for the benefit of his country," and then, apropos of the oriental diplomacy, he says: "Of all diplomacy that which is designated oriental is the most intricate; its first text is always to say that which pleases the situation then in hand."

That the able Senator from Nebraska may have had from those representing oriental diplomacy representations that may please the situation in hand I have never a doubt, but I ask his statesmanship, Does he feel that under any conditions through which we could remain in those islands for any length of time and still execute our doctrine of exclusion of Japanese and Chinese in the Philippine Islands or the mainland without protest from Japan and China? Then does my able friend answer that Japan nor China would allow us leave to keep their people out of the Asiatic zone? When we had entered into their zone in direct violation of our theory of the Western Hemisphere for the western people, it is such that gives the irritation now existing.

I recall to the Senator from Georgia, without injecting anything interfering with his speech—I could recall to his memory some history, and to my friend from Nebraska I beg to revive it: When we took possession of those islands and issued the manifesto assuming civil government, we sought to spread, as it were, and enforce the doctrine of the exclusion of Chinese and Japanese. Promptly upon doing so both Governments of China and Japan made such protest that it became necessary for this Government at once to make negotiations with Gen. Otis, then in command, and to withdraw the assertion by America that only Americans were to enter into the new American territory.

Later when Japan made her protest against separate schools in California, as the able Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] will probably recall, and when we were not in a condition that would particularly authorize us at that time to enter into a conflict with any people, what was it that Japan did? Japan made a protest to this country against what she felt was the humiliation of her people. So serious was the situation, in view of legislation threatened by the legislatures then of Washington, Oregon, and even New York, that the two oriental Governments ments took such exception to our attitude as to manifest it by a temper far from serene.

Conscious of my place, Mr. President, I am forbidden here to use expressions which otherwise I would employ applicable to their attitude at that time. Suffice it to say to the verities of history, President Roosevelt, with whom I have been from time to time in much opposition and whose views I have not always concurred in, yet concede as a patriot, realized as a historian the true condition of this Republic. He recognized that the protest of Japan was based upon the theory of either reciprocity or retaliation. We could not go into their country and demand protection for Americans to the same extent that the Japanese were protected in Asia and yet decline to the Japanese in this country the protection that we gave to Americans. As we could not grant reciprocity without the destruction of labor and serious assaults upon the domestic institutions of America, retaliation became necessary and natural from the orientals, not because those in the governmental administration desired war, because, Senators, we recognize in history that it is not administrations in power that bring on war, save perchance the case of Napoleon III, which arises in our mind as an exception—but it is the party out of power against the party in power which holds against the party in power that they have allowed the Government which they presumed to represent to be humiliated by being presented in a light wherein it is discriminated against on the one hand or its people insulted on the other. This forces the conflict. Consequently it is the man in the street, not the woman in the house, who makes war. Japan was in this interesting situation. She had lately come out of a successful war with Russia. Figuratively speaking, her galleons were smoking at cannon mouth, and black lipped, hovering in their harbors. Her soldiers still carried upon their shoulders knapsacks triumphant and ready for war, and their guns were well trained.

That President Roosevelt, a soldier, would understand the situation we will not deny. Senators who were here in 1906, may I invite you to something of your history? An American President of the United States sent a message to the Houses of Congress in which he recommended that the Army and Navy be put at his service and that he should execute by aid of them the treaties; meaning that treaty with Japan which he then insisted gave her reciprocal rights against the States. To that message, Senators, he appended that remarkable utterance which has not been quoted before the country and out of patriotism of the public press has been suppressed. President Roosevelt recommended the naturalization of the Japanese by law in America, to have done which would have readily put enough votes in the hands of several States on the Pacific coast at any election involving Representatives and Senators to have overturned the Republic in all its vast principles, in all its theories, because there would have been a sufficient number of Japanese alone in certain States of this Union to have controlled the majority vote, and the balance of power would have made Representatives and Senators dependent upon their political power.

Do you think that President Roosevelt really meant that message? I could never believe that he ever meant it. Do you fancy that he would have ever expected the American Senate and the American Congress to have passed a law naturalizing the Japanese, placing them in all respects upon an equality with the workers of America?

Apart from the natural fear of the inheritance of a political result of such a condition, his patriotism, let us believe, would never have indulged him to do it and never would have justified such a consequence. What was in his mind? It was to propitiate the threatened hour that was upon this country then, which clearly was this, I may say to the junior Senator from Georgia in connection with his response to the able chairman of the committee.

You hear much of gentlemen who say, should we have a quarrel with China or Japan, a million men would rise in this community here and there and march to the Pacific coast to meet the advance of the enemy. Do you think the enemy would advance to you when you have put an insult upon her citizens and refused them recognition in the Republic, denied them equality with what you demanded for Americans in Asia, and awakened their affront? Do you think they will come to the Pacific coast to assail you? You taught them better. When you had a grievance against Spain did you go to Madrid or Barcelona or Cadiz? No; you seized Cuba at the door and told Spain to come and get it. Your oriental foes would seize the Philippine Islands and say to you, "Gentlemen of America, come and get them."

With your present conditions of shipping, excepting the registry now being used for ordinary shipping purposes, without a military commandeering by your Government, it would take you two years to land 50,000 men in the Philippine Islands, and with every available ship commandeered from the registry as now permitted it would take you six months. In the meantime your vessels would be met by the active and energetic navy of your opponents off Hawaii, with result easy to contemplate. Then I say to the able Senator from Nebraska that the remark of the Senator from Georgia that these islands were a constant irritation is borne out by every experience of history with which we have to deal or with which we have in the past dealt concerning them.

Mr. President, I am addressing myself, you see, to what I said at the outset was a necessary consideration of that thing called preparedness. If we are to have preparedness, the first question is, What country are you to prepare for? Where shall be the limit of your country? What shall be the defense of it? What shall be its extensions, and then what area are you called upon to prepare?

It becomes necessary, therefore, to consider in this question the expense. The Senator from Georgia evidently in his observations here this morning did not have in his hand a report accessible which discloses, apart from what will be $26,000,000 expenditures for Army and Navy, the civil expenditures in the Philippine Islands which the Government was compelled to advance from time to time. That would have equaled the sum of $5,000,000 and $10,000,000 a year in addition.

Therefore, I call your attention respectfully to the average of only the military, $25,000,000 a year. In 10 years we will have expended $250,000,000. Then, by releasing the burden of the Philippine Islands, we save the full sum that is essential for the completest Navy that has been suggested for our immediate and modern necessities. Then, without a dollar we have builded a Navy in what is saved in the expense of the Philippine Islands, and we will, then, in 10 years be in the exact position where we would in expense have been had we kept the Philippine Islands and made no addition to the American Navy.

Now, Mr. President, as to the amendment of my eminent friend from Arkansas, having to myself made clear that the islands from a political defense of this Nation should not any longer be held, that they will, if they are held by us, awaken opposition from these countries in Asia, and which I beg to say to you should be viewed, Mr. President, in a different light, I may tender an added light to that which Senators have offered on this floor. It is this, sir: Do you fancy, my brother Senators, that when this war is over Japan and China will not be in a different position than they have ever been in the history of our public lives? If in the past there has ever been any diffidence on the part of those nations to resent what they thought was an affront to their people either from weakness on the part of one oriental nation or the inappropriateness of another, do you feel that the future will leave them in that position?

The able Senator from California a moment ago remarked that we have had occasion to see how treaties were of no value whenever the defeat of them or their destruction would avail the present hour of any necessities. Particularly is this true in military conquest. On the other hand, I likewise invite your attention to what is meant by the word "alliance." Let us view for just a moment one real situation, Senators. No alliance is ever made by any country except with a hope of an advantage to itself, however much the advantage may appear to others at the time. When this war is concluded and Japan shall have had a grievance against the United States of any nature, what do you think she will do? Do you not know that Japan will say to England and to France, "Gentlemen, when you were in trouble I entered into an alliance and gave my support to you. Now, I demand that you shall, as against America, in reciprocity for the support I have given you in your war with Germany, join me, Japan, in a demand on America that she grant to the Asiatics the same right in America that she is granting to the Englishman and the Frenchman." What will France and England do? And then Russia, likewise the same demand upon her, what will Russia do? Do you fancy, Senators, that they will be in any position to aid us. Where is that citizen of our community who indulges in the dream that we can look to England for aid in the event of any quarrel or dispute with any nation in the world?

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois permit an interruption?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. LEWIS. Certainly.

Mr. HUGHES. Is it not true that Canada has taken the same position with reference to Asiatics as we have, and that Australia also has done so? I am not clear on that subject, but it seems to me that I have read something to that effect.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that I am unable to reply that those countries have taken the same position, because I do not know their exact position; but this much can be said, that Canada has lately enforced exclusion by keeping out even the Hindus of India from British Columbia. Australia has also passed a law against Asiatics. It is safe to assume that their position is so akin to ours that the Senator from New Jersey is not far afield in the observation he has made.

Mr. President, therefore, let me conclude, and call attention then, as you will observe, that France and England would be in no position to do otherwise than to yield to Japan. Why? In the first place, they would be in debt to Japan for service which Japan had rendered them in her alliance against Germany; and, in the second place, if they should decline to render America any aid whatsoever they themselves would be the subject of retaliation on the part of Japan by driving England out of Japan, as Japan has driven Germany out of China. After the war England would hardly be in a position to oppose or defend, under such conditions, any more than was Germany.

France would not dare to lend us any aid, however much her spirit of kindliness or I may say comity, because of her large interests in China. China would be brought in by Japan on the ground of common interest and common welfare, and either by the same force that England now exercises over Egypt and India, to go in with Japan against America, or out of a common cause of grievance. Think you, Senators, that if we continue, therefore, our position in the Asiatic sphere we would not visit upon us those very evils which you now see visited upon England, France, and Germany in their conquested colonial possessions?

It must be then apparent that before we proceed upon the program of preparedness this question as to the Philippine Islands must first be determined in one way or the other—that we either keep them and fortify the Navy sufficiently in its doubling capacity to maintain them as against every assault, or that we should get out of there, return to the confines of our own Republic, and prepare our defense for our own country in the splendid isolation to which the great Gladstone aptly referred.

Mr. President, there is one feature in the pending bill which gives me great concern.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Illinois has evidently given a great deal of consideration to this matter, and I should like to submit this situation to him: As I understand, we do not exclude the Japanese or the Chinese from the Philippine Islands, but we do, of course, exclude and place a limitation upon the immigration of people of those nationalities into this country. Would it not be true that the same preparedness would be necessary in a sense even if we should give up the Philippine Islands? In other words, after the war would not Japan feel just as strongly that her people should be placed upon a level with the other immigrants to this country should we give up the Philippine Islands as if we should hold them?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the inquiry of the Senator from Idaho is interesting, because it suggests a thought which it is well to dwell upon at this juncture. It is this: So long as we remain in the Philippine Islands, we are then in Asia. The right of Asia to demand reciprocity to come into America appears to be equitable, and the right to exact or enforce retaliation if we could not yield that reciprocity would likewise appear to be justice. The foreign nations of the world could be appealed to by Japan for it on the ground that we were remaining in Asia and yet refused to let their people come to America. The foreign nations of the world, the European nations, therefore, would have that argument against us and in their favor for declining either to aid us or as a justification of their cooperation with Japan; but when we got out of Asia, and Japan no longer had the equity to demand reciprocity upon us or to threaten retaliation, then there would be no justification for Japan demanding of the foreign countries cooperation in her behalf actively or for sympathy against us positively. To that extent we remove the righteousness or the equity of the claim of Japan for her people to come into our country and we remit her—I would say to the learned Senator from Idaho—to the single right of merely basing it upon a mere desire to be equal to that which citizens of other nations enjoy. To that we could answer that our opposition was based on the theory of the Anglo-Saxon unity—the Caucasian exclusion—as distinguished from that of the Asiatic, whereas in the other event, when we went into Asia, we foreclosed ourselves from taking the position of "Asia for Asiatics; America for Americans." That, I would say to the able Senator from Idaho, is the distinction I make.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. COLT. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois if he would give independence to the Filipinos in two years simply because this Nation stood in fear of Japan?

Mr. LEWIS. Has the Senator concluded his inquiry?

Mr. COLT. Might I further say that I do not fully agree with the Senator from Illinois as to the danger of this Republic possessing a colony in the Far East. I appeal to history. The Netherlands have held Java for several centuries; the French have far eastern colonies whose population amounts to 30,000,000; the colonies which the British Empire has held for generations comprise nearly one-fifth of the globe. Now, shall we change our policy toward the Philippines because we are in fear of Japan, whose population does not exceed fifty-five or sixty millions, and who is now burdened with a heavy debt and excessive taxation?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, no man more than I respects the juridical learning of the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island, lately honoring the bench, and recognizing his historical information, I likewise pay tribute to it; but I would have the able Senator understand, in the first place, no one here says we stand in fear of Japan. America fears no nation. She seeks to avoid any conflict from unnecessary danger to herself. As to Java, that Java is a possession maintained, it is true, by the Netherlands, or Holland. It has been maintained at great expense; sometimes Java has managed to pay its own expenses, but the colony possession is the theory of kingly governments, not republics. I may say to my learned friend likewise so New York, once New Amsterdam, was also the property of Holland. By going out into these possessions Holland ran the risk of losing them. She is every hour now in tremulous difficulty and serious apprehension that she will be involved in the present European war, and in her struggles of neutrality she is menaced with the fear of Java being seized and herself forced to the violation of that neutrality which she so seriously is seeking to maintain—and declare war. So Holland can not be held out as a precedent to us, nor that because others have not been able to avoid trouble as a result of their policy that we should enter upon a similar course.

On the other hand, it is true, the Senator says, as to France, that France has maintained foreign possessions, and I invite the attention of my learned and able friend to the fact that her possessions in Morocco have been the subject of such warfare and expense as to bring about five civil revolutions at the ballot box in France and the overturning of three French premiers. Her movement in Madagascar brought about a massacre of her people and troubles to an extent serious beyond calculation. This very European war to-day, I say to the able Senator, that is splashing the very stars with blood, is the result of the movement of France into Morocco. If it had not been for the incident at Agadir, Morocco, where France sought to extend her possessions in Morocco over that which Germany contended she had a right to enjoy, and had not England joined France in this matter against Germany to preserve colonial possessions in Morocco, there would have been no concerted movement upon the part of Germany to avenge what at a later time she has—as the present war discloses—endeavored to.

This world war in Europe is the result of the colonial conquests of France and England in Morocco. Shall we emulate these examples, I may ask my learned friend; shall we bring upon ourselves likewise the inheritances which all of these nations to which the eminent Senator alludes have brought upon themselves? Let us pray, never! Therefore, I am unable to see the parallel, save that it is interesting as history, and, of course, is true, as it is established in mistaken statesmanship and in the experiences of those to whom he has alluded.

Mr. President, I come, therefore, to the conclusion of my remarks—I did not expect to take so much time from my colleagues—what, then, shall be the disposition? This bill has been adroitly prepared; of course, it has been industriously prepared. It is impossible for a bill of this nature to comprehend the desires of all. In the Philippine Islands there are many Americans who desire to remain there and who desire that the islands shall remain American. There are other interests that fear our getting out, lest their interests shall be jeopardized,

There are conflicting associations in the islands of race, religion, different political cults and creeds, which make very embarrassing the adjustment. I may cite one of my own experiences.

In my own travels through the islands I was interested to note that in one place I was unable to ask for my ordinary food through my interpreter, as he could not speak the language which was spoken there, and that was 700 miles from the place whence he had gone. It is interesting to note how little really the Filipinos understand in many of those islands the theories of our Saxon civilization. I may interest you in an incident more humorous than important. It had gone out from military headquarters that the people must cease to have celebrations when American officials arrived, as it was exhausting the revenues of these poor people to provide such entertainment. It went out to the underalcaldes that there should be no further contributions to entertain such visitors, except as voluntarily given; that there should be no more enforced or suggested contributions on the part of the people or the petty officials. Then there went out from the Filipino underofficials an announcement in the following form: "Hereafter whenever American officials visit the islands there shall be no more contributions to entertain them, except voluntarily, but those who do not volunteer shall be fined 5 pesos." [Laughter.]

Mr. President, therefore, as the Senator from Nebraska said yesterday, observing to the Senator from Rhode Island, the bill is essentially a compromise. It had, of course, to consider the interests brought before the committee that are equitable, and in many instances I fancy there are provisions which, if left to the committee, to their own consideration, would not now be contained in the bill, yet there are provisions in the bill which, to my mind, seem wholly unserving to the objects to which they are addressed.

I am unable to see under the bill how we shall escape serious difficulties of responsibility and yet exercise, within the time provided in the bill, no power. I fear the responsibility we assume under the bill will entail upon us both expense and injury, leaving us, however, no voice whatever by which we could, within the length of time provided in the bill, have corrected the evils which we may see at the time were being put upon us.

The Senator from Arkansas, anticipating some of these difficulties, has proposed an amendment, in some respects appealing much to my judgment, in other respects inviting my apprehension of danger. I invite his consideration, knowing him to be an able constitutional lawyer, to this point: I ask him, as a test of his proposed policy, in what manner would the United States be able to enforce any arrangement contemplated with foreign nations by the amendment tendered by him? I suggest to him the difficulty that is in my mind. I have no doubt he has pondered over it, knowing the studious consideration he gives to everything he presents. We can only make an alliance respecting any guaranty provided in his amendment either with Japan, under an Emperor, or China, under one that it is now proposed, or we must make it with countries having interests in the Orient in order to have it effective at all, which must be Great Britain, under an Emperor, or Germany, under an Emperor, unless we conclude that France has enough interest. Then, we have an agreement with these nations, we will say, under the amendment, and they agree with us that they shall maintain what would be called the neutrality of the Philippine Islands for the stated length of time. I ask the Senator, should there arise reasons, military or commercial, which because of the nations with which we contract they desired to extricate themselves from the responsibility and turn against us and oppose our interests, in what way does the able Senator feel we could at all enforce the contract or continue it?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, if the nations should enter into a reciprocal convention to protect the neutrality and independence of the Philippine Islands for a given period of time, and any one of them should subsequently desire to withdraw from that engagement, it would be a matter for consideration by the signatory powers. I do not know just exactly how it would originate in any particular case. The amendment I have offered provides that the guaranty of sovereignty of the Philippine Islands shall be a mutual guaranty, neither one standing as sponsor for the other. The guaranty would be made not by one primarily, nor for another, but by each nation for itself. If occasion should unhappily arise where it was necessary to maintain that guaranty against one of the signatory powers, I presume the usual methods would be resorted to to do that. It would either be the subject of further diplomatic consideration or, if it were a matter of sufficient importance and the occasion justified it, the last word in international controversies, which is war, would be the inevitable result.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the Senator has anticipated the very danger that I felt his amendment would suggest.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska, at this moment, who desires to propound an inquiry.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas if he contemplates by that idea some such joint treaty as was entered into by certain of the European powers to guarantee the independence of Greece in view of the present condition of Greece under that guaranty?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That matter is not foreclosed by the amendment down to the last element of detail. That could be left to the representatives of the governments who negotiate the convention or treaty. If the necessity for assuming more responsibility than some Senators would now suggest should arise and be justified, and it should be agreed to by the President and ratified by the Senate, I presume the nations would live up to whatever obligations they assumed in that connection.

I am not prepared at this particular time to forecast just exactly what should be the ultimate terms in which the negotiations should be expressed, and no one else is. I take it for granted that if other nations joined us in that guaranty of independence to those people, who in themselves are innocent because they have no wide international connections that would jeopardize the peace and happiness of any other country, they would expect in good faith to live up to it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator from Illinois permit me one more interruption?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I want to suggest not only the fate of Greece under such a guaranty, but the fate of Belgium under a similar international guaranty.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The fate of a nation only concerns the particular nation. Each one works out its own future in the light of the circumstances that exist at the time these exigencies occur.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator from Illinois will permit me just a moment——

Mr. COLT. Mr. President——

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should like to suggest——

Mr. LEWIS. I will yield to the Senator from Mississippi for a moment, and then I will yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has some rights. The Chair asked the Senator from Illinois whether he yielded to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. LEWIS. Did the Chair ask whether I yielded to the Senator from Rhode Island?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. COLT. If the Senator from Illinois yields to me, I desire to ask the Senator from Arkansas a question.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I shall be very glad to answer, if I can, any question the Senator may see proper to propound.

Mr. COLT. The amendment under consideration provides that we shall transfer the sovereignty of the Philippine Islands in two years from the date of the passage of this bill.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. COLT. It further provides that the President shall enter into immediate negotiations with the powers for the purpose of securing the neutralization of or a guaranty of the independence of the Philippine Islands. Now, Europe is in a state of war. The war may last two years. This amendment is imperative; we must at the end of two years transfer our sovereignty over the Philippine Islands. Suppose the President should find that it was impossible during this crisis in the world's history to carry on these negotiations, would we not be in a very embarrassing position arising from this two-year limitation?

I know the Senator has looked into the subject, but my idea is that the guaranteeing of the independence or neutralization of another nation by a convention of the powers is a very serious and difficult matter, and the point I wanted to raise was whether it would do to have this limitation of two years in view of the present conditions in Europe?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The limit of two years was named because it seemed to be a reasonable one, under all the circumstances. If the refusal on the part of the governments interested in the affairs of that part of the world to enter into the agreement should be based upon a refusal to assume any burdens in connection with the Philippine Islands, two years is an ample period. If it should turn out that their own affairs were in such condition that they were scarcely able at that time to say what they would be able to do in connection with a matter so completely dissociated from their local affairs as that would be, it would furnish proper occasion for the President to communicate to Congress a statement of the fact that by reason of the upheaval in the world the time was inopportune for the undertaking and that an enlargement of time would be necessary. Congress will be in session almost continuously during the next two years, and there can be no difficulty whatever in the face of a representation of that character, in securing from Congress such enlargement of time as the exigencies of the situation as then disclosed might make necessary.

Things move quite rapidly in this day and time; two years is a long period in the history of the world now, when it comes to a matter of avoiding friction and causes of conflict. Governments do not wait long now when they find themselves confronted by a situation that involves their existence or seriously impairs their rights, and I think the period of two years is sufficient; but it is not yet written into the law. If the combined wisdom of the Senate thinks that a longer period than that is required, it is a matter of form to have it enlarged now. I happened to write that amendment, and it occurred to me that two years was sufficient in the light of the conditions as they presented themselves to my understanding. It was not intended even to commit myself unalterably to two years; and, if the full discussion that should take place here about the matter should disclose the necessity for a longer period of time, there would be no opposition, on my part at least, to adopting any other reasonable period that might appear to be necessary.

Mr. LIPPITT. With the permission of the distinguished Senator from Illinois, may I ask a question of the Senator from Arkansas?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I will be glad to answer the Senator from Rhode Island, but I dislike very much to trespass upon the courtesy of the Senator from Illinois to answer questions that I may be able to answer later in my own time.

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator has been very explicit in his answer to the question of my colleague in saying that if it took longer than two years to get the consent of other nations the time could be extended. What would the Senator do in case those nations refused to enter into such an agreement?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Then any extension of time would be wholly futile; there would be no occasion for asking for any length of time. We would do as the amendment says the Government should do. I would let the Government of the United States extend its present existing responsibility for five years longer. I would not take upon myself any additional obligation, but would simply extend the already existing obligation to protect their sovereignty and peace, and at the end of five years, I take it for granted, there will be a Senate and a House of Representatives here composed of Members who will be just as patriotic as we are and just as capable of dealing with the problems of that day as we think we are of dealing with the problems of to-day.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want it understood that I did not intend a moment ago, when I rose to ask the Senator from Illinois a question, to trespass upon the rights of the Chair.

Mr. President, I want to suggest, in connection with the question which was propounded to the Senator from Arkansas, that it strikes me that in forming the proposed governmental alliance for the protection of the integrity of the Philippine Islands after independence shall be given them, or, in other words, after the rights which the American Government has usurped in the Philippine Islands shall be restored to the citizens of the Philippine Islands, we are to indulge the same presumption that the nations are going to live up to their obligations that we do in all other matters of treaty. If you can not trust them in this instance, how can you trust them in any other?

Furthermore, as the Senator from Arkansas says, it is a matter that has to be dealt with when it arises. If it should be to the interest of any of the nations to withdraw from the agreement, if they should impair their own integrity or their own welfare by their adherence to it, they might be able to withdraw from the compact with honor; but that is a bridge to be crossed when we reach it. I repeat that it is entirely reasonable to indulge the presumption that the nations are going to live up to their contracts, and the suggestion to the contrary is no valid objection to the proposition embodied in the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I should like to indulge that my humane friend the able Senator from Mississippi confides, and that is that a treaty gave such assurance that the mere making meant the obedience; but late events have brought to my attention the fact that the strength of treaties seems to be no more than that of a decree written by a sunbeam upon a snow bank. The very first blaze that bursts upon it melts it into nothingness—or the history of the later months all around us means nothing.

The able Senator from Arkansas, with the frankness that characterizes his course on this floor and elsewhere, has conceded the very danger that my apprehension admonishes me would follow a provision that is in his tendered amendment. First, Mr. President, we could only enter into agreements under this amendment with monarchical countries; and the very moment we enter into an agreement with Japan, or with China and Japan, we make them partners with us in a common enterprise in Asia. We have then violated the very first admonition of the first father of the Republic. We have entered into "foreign entanglements." Second, we have entered into a contract with those with whom we could not enforce it except by giving to them that which we would not yield. When we ask them to protect our property or our interests, they have a right in turn to ask us that which we could not give, perchance—the recognition of their citizens in our country upon equal terms with Americans. That would be their first demand. Second, the very first time there came the slightest friction in the then government of the Philippine Islands that did not harmonize with the interests of either one of these contracting parties they would either withdraw or visit penalty upon those who violated what they thought right. This would be conflict. What would be our attitude? As the able Senator admirably says with commendable frankness, it would be to protest. We would stand on our rights; and then, if we found a difference, finally it would reach to the sure conclusion that we would be compelled by force of arms to enforce the contract or punish its violation, and that would mean war, when we are seeking now to do a thing to get us out of the prospect of war.

When I advise my able friend from Arkansas that one of the distinguished citizens of the Republic, who was formerly President of the United States, is monthly addressing himself to his countrymen in articles against what he calls the evil of his Republic, the crime of supine America, and the offense of a cowardly President, because we did not go into war in behalf of Belgium, giving as a reason that there was a compact on the part of America, made at The Hague, which made us a party inferentially and sentimentally, sympathetically, at least, with what was called the neutrality of Belgium, and the able ex-President of the United States, a scholar of history, absolutely urges that it was our duty to have avoided what he calls the "brutalizing of Belgium" by going into war—in the European war—the able Senator will realize, I am sure, that the same logic would apply in this instance, that if we entered into a partnership with these foreign countries to protect possessions or property of ours or citizens of ours, nationals of ours, we would be in the position where if it was violated, or where we would be called on to enforce it, war must follow. If we enter into a contract we can not enforce, that seems an idle performance. To enter into one we expect to enforce, when the only enforcement must essentially mean, in the final analysis, war—war to the death—would mean to have the islands involved in turmoil, ourselves in conflict, the very thing we hope to extricate them from and rescue ourselves from.

For that reason I am unable to see the wisdom of that part of the amendment of the able Senator. I see what I think the dangers of it, and I point him out that I feel it violates all the cardinal doctrine of the Republic in other respects. There are many suggestions in other parts of his amendment that can be considered with propriety, and I trust with profit, by the committee. I shall offer amendments to correct the objections as I see them. It is the main principle for which I speak—the returning to America by America, and getting out of the Government business in Asia.

Mr. President, that we should get out of the islands is apparent. That it is profitable to do so, no man will deny. That it is justice to those in the islands as well as to ourselves, all will admit. We are now seeking, at a late day, to execute justice that we long promised and we long delayed. We can, in its exercise before the world, again prove that altruistic spirit that is really ours, by which we seek to do justice to all mankind wherever opportunity affords. We will do no injustice to ourselves in doing so; but in executing this agreement we have made with civilization to give freedom to the Philippines we will again invite a new confidence and inspire a new faith on the part of those nations to the south to whom we are offering further hope that their association with us will be profitable and will be with justice and profit to them and with no injustice to ourselves.

I feel that the bill should pass, with such amendments as no doubt will be considered later; and I recommend it to its passage, feeling that while, as one of the able Senators has well said, we may not live to see all the blessings that will arise from the example we are setting, and we will not see all the benefits enjoyed, we will, at least, have the consciousness that the great Greek had when he wrote upon the gates of Sparta, as he bade it good-by, the famous admonition:

I am but a mortal, and, like my fathers, must die; but liberty and justice by our words and deeds may live for our children and our country forever.

I thank the Senate for its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if I can get the attention of the Senator from Missouri, I anticipate that he is about to make a motion that the Senate go into executive session. Is that correct?

Mr. STONE. It is.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment at this point. I do not intend to discuss it this evening, but I wish to offer a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, and I should like to offer it now, so that it may be read and printed.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I was going to ask the Senator if he would not have it read and printed, so that we may consider it to-morrow.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I rose to do. I send it to the desk, and I will ask that the Secretary read it, and then that it be printed. I offer it as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas, the Senator from Nebraska proposes to insert the following:

Within two years after the passage of this act the President shall invite the cooperation of the principal nations interested in the affairs of that part of the world in which the Philippines are located, for the purpose and to the end that the cooperating nations shall mutually pledge themselves, in the form of a treaty or other binding agreement, to recognize and respect the sovereignty and independence of the said Philippines, and also to mutually obligate themselves, equally and not one primarily nor to any greater extent than another, to maintain as against external force the sovereignty of said Philippines for the period of not less than five years from the taking effect of such treaty or agreement. Within one year after the taking effect of such treaty or agreement the President is hereby authorized and directed to withdraw and surrender all right of possession, supervision, jurisdiction, control, or sovereignty now existing and exercised by the United States in and over the territory and people of the Philippines.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator from Nebraska desire to proceed further with the bill tonight?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No.

Mr. STONE. Then I ask that the bill be laid aside.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask unanimous consent that the Philippine bill be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is ordered.

SALE OF FUR-SEAL SKINS.

Mr. STONE. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report back favorably the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 47) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to sell skins taken from fur seals killed on the Pribilof Islands for food purposes, and I submit a report (No. 56) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Florida (Mr. FLETCHER) to the joint resolution.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the joint resolution be read.
